Mr. Gurdon S. Hubbard, one of the earliest settlers in Chicago, died last week at the age of 83 years. He first came to the spot where Chicago now stands in 1818, but did not settle until years after. He was an Episcopalian and an old friend of Mr. Carpenter, whom he so soon follows to eternal scenes. He came here evidently to better his worldly condition and built the first brick structure in the city; but it was for Mr. Carpenter, who came West to help maintain the conserving influences of morality and religion, to start the first Sabbath-school and circulate the first temperance pledge.

The State Anti-saloon convention, which met in this city September 2nd, was startled by the announcement of the vice-president, Hon. Isaac Rice of the State Senate, that a certain general whom he understood was to be put forward as a delegate at large to the national convention of Sept. 16, had been seen in a beastly state of intoxication near the Leland Hotel the night before. The speaker had personally picked the general out of the gutter and had him put to bed by the hotel porters. Such an argument for out-and-out prohibition was not without its effect.

The Anti-Saloon Republicans have an unwelcome ally in H. B. Miller (commonly called "Buffalo" Miller), the president of the whisky pool and one of the leading members of the great whisky ring in this city ten or twelve years ago. As he circulated among the delegates to the convention in the Grand Pacific hotel he declared, "I am in favor of this anti-saloon movement. I am against the saloon. It must go. I believe every man ought to keep a barrel in his cellar. Yes, I am with these fellows through and through."

The Revelator foretells the time when men may neither buy nor sell, who have not the "mark of the Beast" in hand or forehead. In Chicago before long the curse of the lodge will be so strong that a man cannot read his newspaper or work his garden unless within limits prescribed by some secret society. Four Germans lately engaged to put up a building for the Wisconsin Central railway near its entrance to the city. In hastening to complete the work they labored eleven or twelve hours daily. The howling lodgeites learned of it, and, in order to maintain the grand American principle that no man has a right to work more than eight hours a day, these honest Germans were assaulted and one of them so severely injured as to have to take to his bed. Did the system of slavery develop a more devilish spirit than does the lodge?

Anarchism, which thrives on secret oaths, does not stop at a massacre of policemen and a conspiracy to overthrow all government and divide all the property that can be seized, it aims also to overthrow society and the holy marriage relation at its foundation. August Spies, the leader of the gang now under sentence of death in our jail, proclaimed this awful doctrine before the Congregational pastor's meeting, when invited by them to instruct them in anarchism. The county court the other day found an illustration of this principle. A poor woman, Johanna Lehman, was brought in insane. The examination showed that she had lost her reason in extreme toil to support the anarchist to whom she was married, and who was carrying out the principles of Spies by not working for fifteen years, but dividing all he could seize; that is, the earnings of the poor wife. Why was not this fellow put in the dock and tried with his eight fellows?

The "Supreme Council of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite Masons of the Northern Jurisdiction" met in Chicago last week. This body is composed of the "Sovereign Grand Inspectors-General" of the thirty-third degree, and its meetings are so especially secret and exalted above the mass of mortality that little but the banquets and street parades are given to the public. Among the speakers at the banquet were Mayor Harrison and J. C. Smith, Lieutenant-Governor of the State, whose time is so nearly taken up with Masonry and Odd-fellowship that it is a wonder how he can work up his election. He has demonstrated how completely the Republican party is controlled by the lodge for years. Among the number elected to take the thirty-third degree is John A. Logan, who now from the apex of Masonry, calmly contemplates his chances to use this order and the Grand Army of the Republic to tug him through to the White House in 1888.

Last Sabbath a train of 160 cars in eighteen sections was running all day toward Boston through Canada and New York, bearing thousands, who had gathered the day before in this city, to the national meeting of Odd-fellows in Boston. All day the Sabbath peace was rudely and wickedly disturbed by this lodge excursion, and the same unlawful desecration will probably attend the breaking up of the meeting. At the same time hurrying trains were bearing members of the Masonic order to St. Louis from east and west to the triennial convocation which meets in that city this week. What other agency, the saloon included, is exercising so powerful and so baleful an influence against the Sabbath as the secret lodge system? From Masons to labor organizations of every sort, none care for law of God or man in their reckless self-seeking. In this Sabbath violation the lodge shows itself to be the enemy of the working man, for it robs him of the day peculiarly his own; and it is setting our nation far along on the dismal way of ruin, the end of which is seen in the Palestine of to-day.

The popular outcry against prison contract labor, raised first by trade unions and echoed by political conventions, should years ago have been met by an unquailing voice demanding a substitute which should recommend itself to reasonable men. No such demand was made, but the party meetings, even the American, yielded without much consideration to the popular outcry. In some States, New York, we believe, for one, where contracts have been suspended, there is a reaction because of the demoralizing effect of prolonged idleness upon the men, and the needless expense upon the State for their support. If by such contracts the prices of any commodity, like shoes, is cheapened, the poor throughout the country, the laboring people, should be the first to be benefited. It must, in short, be a remarkable argument that will demonstrate that society at large is on the whole benefited by supporting one or two thousand men in every State in idleness.

Whether prison contracts are given up or not there should be no giving up of the philanthropic effort to put the condemned criminal on the back track to an honest, industrious, self-respecting manner of life. The institution at Elmira, New York, in charge of Mr. Brockway, is opening a noble field for Christian philanthropy in the rescue of these men, but every city Sabbath-school is as much better as prevention is better than cure. In connection with this topic we find the following note in an exchange: "An interesting and very inexpensive experiment in convict education has been made during the last three years in Sing Sing Prison, under the management of Warden Bursh. Scarcely any one is discharged from Sing Sing now who cannot read, write and cast up simple accounts. Each class meets three times a week for an hour and a half of instruction, and the convicts are allowed lights in their rooms until 9 o'clock for additional study. Reading, writing and arithmetic are the subjects principally taught, and there is no difficulty in finding instructors among the higher grades of criminals. The effect of these night schools is seen not only in the giving occupation to the minds of the prisoners and imparting to them the elements of a simple education, but in a marked elevation in their morals. They are more tractable and more ambitious, and are more easily influenced by thoughts of a better life. The entire expense of the introduction of the system has been only $75 for books and slates."

THE LESSON OF IRONS.—"Martin Irons was a big man a few months ago, 'bigger than old Grant.' He, by his one will, kept the railroad system of the West in chaos for weeks. He was the worst type which the new labor convulsion put at the top. Last week he was arrested by the police of Kansas City for vagrancy and drunkenness. He sold out his saloon lately, and has been drinking hard since. A correspondent writes us: 'It seems almost incredible that men of any intelligence could have blindly followed such a leader. His appearance, as I saw him a few days ago, was like to a very low grade of tramp.'—Independent.

It is amazing that the press of this country, which surely does not lack intelligence and discernment, does not see that the whole lodge business is so constituted as to be a standing invitation to such characters as Irons. One man, Powderly, stands between the turbulent elements of the labor lodges and the peace of community. He stands holding down an extinguisher on a Vesuvius. How long can his power be guaranteed? How long can he keep hot heads and demagogues from getting control as Irons did in the Southwest? It is the greatest folly that a system so full of danger is allowed to exist.

FALSE PRAISE.—Another fact connected with the Knights of Labor which has more the appearance of political chicanery than the counsel of wisdom and sincerity is the praise bestowed on that order for its alleged temperance principles. Beside a few sentences from Powderly there is nothing to show that the order has any interest in temperance. The fact that saloon keepers are excluded is no such evidence, because they are not legislated against because of their liquor, but for the same reason that lawyers and others are kept out, that is, they are non-producers. Why is not the order congratulated for excluding the lawyer as well as the grog-seller, since it acts from the same principle against both? Any effort to promote temperance among its members must be commended, but not the paying of honors to them for principles which they do not maintain.

GOAD PRICKS FOR DO-NOTHING CHRISTIANS.

BY REV. J. F. AVERY.

Jesus the Master had to complain, "The harvest is plenteous, but the laborers are few." The children of the world are wise in their generation. See how they haste and toil to gain the good things of mammon, and willingly sacrifice to-day for to-morrow's uncertainties. In the battle for place, precedence and honor, no risk or cost is too great. Weary months of care and toil are freely given, with a readiness worthy of a better cause, to obtain the approbation, good will and praise of men. Shall we whose souls are lighted by wisdom from on high and who have a truer estimate of life's present worth and purpose be laggards in the race? Can we stand idly in the world's market place and say no man hath hired us? Has not our Redeemer, the Holy One of Israel, bought us with a priceless price, even his own precious blood? Has he not said, "Son go work to-day in my vineyard"? Let us, David-like, when the enemy comes as a lion and bear to rob us of our charge, prove ourselves no hirelings but true to our trust, worthy of the service assigned. Our Father in heaven will honor those who do his will willingly, even though the service rendered seemeth to others imperfect and small. But in the unfoldings of eternity, we shall learn that Jesus took knowledge of us, and that no service rendered heartily as unto the Lord was, or is, in vain.

First, pray the Lord of the harvest to send more laborers, and before saying Amen, say, Lord, what wouldst thou have me to do? It was not doing some great thing which brought poor Naaman the deliverance sought. Truly, we must stoop to conquer. Every true child of God does work for salvation. Salvation is of the Lord. It is his prerogative to save men from their sins. Dead men cannot live, save as they live by the faith and life which comes of Jesus, who purchased our pardon and of his own love offers salvation without money and without price, willing our stubborn wills into willingness, to will and to do according to the pleasure of him who so loved us. The test of God is, "If ye love me, keep my commandments;" and the more we love him, the clearer will be our view of his love to us, and of our work and duty. Hence, our Lord said, "He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me; and he that loveth me, shall be loved of my Father, and I will love him, and manifest myself unto him."

Basil, on the subject of rewards of goodness, says: "A good deed is never lost; he who sows courtesy reaps friendship; and he who plants kindness, gathers love; pleasure bestowed upon a grateful mind was never sterile, but generally gratitude begets reward." "Down in the human heart, crushed by the tempter," feelings lie buried which will vibrate and respond to kind words.

A lady who understood this, accidentally pushed a little street Arab off the sidewalk. She stopped and apologized, saying that she hoped she had not hurt him. He stepped back and gave his rimless hat a jerk. "My eyes, Jim," he exclaimed, turning to a boy who heard the whole, "if she don't speak to me just like I were standin' collars. A feller could 'ford to get pushed off forty times a day to get spoke to like that." The speech of every Christian should betray the spirit of him who speaks with wisdom and as never man spoke, and of whom it is written, his acts and words of love proved him verily to be the Son of God, the Lamb that taketh away the sins of the world.

To be a do-nothing, is an evidence that the truth is not in us. Charles Dickens said that, "the first external revelation of dry rot in a man, is a tendency to lurk and lounge; to be at street corners without intelligible reason; to be going anywhere when met; to be about many places, rather than any; to do nothing tangible, but to have an intention of performing a number of tangible duties to-morrow or the day after." To-day demands the Christian's best endeavors. Those who are born from above will work while it is called to-day, knowing that the night cometh when no man can work. The dial of man's earthly pilgrimage points ever on and plainly cautions by the funeral knell that time was, is, and will soon be gone forever. From the starting points of the first moment, from the dawn of our existence the shadows play. The hands of time all along the circle indicate to many unexpectedly that although time moves on, the time and place of departure is come; ready or unready, they must leave the scenes of earth's activities.

In speaking of the loss of time, Jackson said: "In the dissipation of worldly treasure, the frugality of the future may balance the extravagance of the past, but who can say, 'I will take minutes from to-morrow to compensate for those I have lost to-day?'"

The want of the sluggard is but the legitimate outcome of carelessness and waste in the seed-time of life. Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. "He that soweth to the flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption, but he that soweth to the spirit shall of the spirit reap life everlasting." Gal. 6:8. Bishop Mant remarks, "That which is good cannot be done too soon, and if it is neglected to be done early, it will frequently happen that it will not be done at all."

Even men of the world caution do-nothings. "Improve your opportunities," said Bonaparte to a school of young men; "every hour lost now is a chance of future misfortune." Poussin, the great painter laid it down as a rule of conduct "that whatsoever was worth doing was worth doing well." And when asked by what means he had gained so high a reputation as a painter, he emphatically answered, "Because I have neglected nothing!"

"Remember," said Lord Collingwood to a young man for whom he had a great esteem, "before you are twenty-five years of age you must establish a character that will serve you for life." Sir Walter Scott wrote to his son Charles, when at school, "I cannot too much impress upon your mind that labor is the condition which God has imposed upon us in every station of life; there is nothing worth having that can be had without it, from the bread which the peasant wins with the sweat of his brow, to the sports by which the rich man has to get rid of his ennui."

Dear friend, we counsel you not to waste time present. Remember, experience is a dear school. We can only advise; it is your responsibility to act. Wilful waste makes woful want. Fully and honestly we believe the trumpet shall sound long enough at the end of time to awaken and startle even do-nothings to an awful sense of the folly of the past, when they professed to live and yet were dead. Now is the day of salvation, the time of opportunity.

THE SPIRIT OF THE LODGE AND DYNAMITE.

"I won't shake hands with such a man as you," was the salutation of an old acquaintance to the friend who had offered his hand away down in Kansas (see Cynosure Sept. 2); and the reason was that the friend had been guilty of circulating Antimasonic literature. This recalled an incident in Chicago some years ago, illustrating how another friend was punished for the same crime. Two men, strangers to each other, met, and the one handed the other a tract, probably with the remark that it was opposed to lodgery. As the other unfolded the tract and read the title a dark cloud overspread his face, and the lurid light glared from his eyes as he scowled at his neighbor and fiercely but slowly rumbled: "Hell has lots of such fellows as you," and passed onward—yea, to that awful destiny himself unless he changed his allegiance and became reconciled to the Christian's God.

If anti-lodge men had ever been chargeable with assaults and murders as have their opponents so frequently been proved guilty of; had they ever been a terror to peaceable citizens who would not join them; had they ever boycotted traders, stopped trains, killed scabs, dynamited police and citizens in street crowds, all the world would have condemned them. But lodgery, while compelled to acknowledge its crimes when proved in courts of law and abandon its agents when convicted, is very slow to condemn the sources of the crimes. Thus when slavery reigned, cruelty and murder of slaves were censured even by its supporters. Thus while drunkenness and the crimes of the saloonist, like the recent murder of the Rev. Mr. Haddock in Iowa, are generally condemned, yet the liquor trade is licensed and the drinking habits are indulged which beget these evils. So to-day the revival of the awful tyranny and infatuation of lodgery whose great head Freemasonry was compelled to hide itself from an indignant people on account of the Morgan murder a little over a half century ago—this revived infatuation under various chameleon names, deludes its victims into trades unions and labor leagues, and into the more pretentious patriotism of daggers and dynamite for Irish oppressors. But ah! the outcome is found not alone in victims like Lord Cavendish and Mr. Burke, but in the street murders of our own cities from the single "scab" to the scores of police and citizens of these free United States.

Where shall these things end? Shall law or lodge reign? Shall we still cry peace when we know the cause of the curse is yet nursed amongst us? Shall we condemn the fruits while we cultivate the tree? Shall we have anarchy lodge despotisms to sway or control our courts and legislatures—or even another civil war, before the evil is eradicated, or shall we wake up and unite in the support of the American party as the one which shall wage a successful fight against this dangerous foe.

A SCOT.

OUR GOD IS FORTRESS, FIRM AND STRONG.

Our God is fortress, firm and strong,
Proof armor, too, 'gainst sin and wrong;
His holy word, that trusty sword,
Also to us belong.
Defended thus and armed we go
'Gainst God's and man's relentless foe,
Nor fear the darts which from our hearts
He hurls both high and low.
His wiles and craft with years unfold,
He builds his throne on lies and gold,
Oppresses truth and reigns, forsooth,
As woe o'er scattered folds.

In combat here our reason's might
Is helpless 'gainst this foe's adroft,
For both to know and not to know
Doth cost him not a doit.
He always taught that lies are true
And truth is lie; his doctrine new Recants the old lies he has told—
Says only doubts are true.
This creed of doubt does promise bliss,
Assumes there is no life but this
Which man can know while here below.
This idol, doubt, men kiss!

Who shall us free from tyrant doubt?
God's Chosen One, our Champion stout,
Who taught the truth and lived the truth,—
His death this foe did rout.
He is the Truth, the Life, the Way,
The Light our doubts dark night to day
Still does translate, and educate
The heart in truth to stay.
To doubt God's Word is Satan's pride,
To doubt his own is suicide,
His last despair when well aware
The doom him swift betide.

In vain will this last battle shock
Of darkness dash on God's firm rock;
Doubt's hurls of sand Faith can withstand,
Though reason they may mock.
Yea, God's own Word now shall prevail
O'er all the foes which saints assail;
On judgment day in blank dismay
They 'fore his face shall quail.
Our wily foes are all undone,
As victory was long since won;
Faith small, in need, as mustard seed,
Can bid doubt's mounts begone!

WEST AFRICAN LODGERY.

The United Brethren Publishing House, Dayton, Ohio, have published a remarkable pamphlet on the secret societies of Western Africa, written by J. Augustus Cole, an educated native African, who has made these societies a careful study, joining some of them for the purpose. A considerable part of the introduction is copied below for the readers of the Cynosure, who will want to see the whole:

The secret orders of Western Africa are exotic. Their origin must be traced back to the northeastern part of the continent, to Athens, or to Persia. They were introduced here by the Arabs, at an early date, and though greatly affected by the various forms of idolatry, yet they still retain their original structure perfect, with some additions rather than reductions.

We divide the orders into two classes, viz: The Medical and the Mystical secret societies. The Medical, such as the Purroh, the Oro, the Mannekeh, the Telang, and the Jambou must be traced back to Egypt; while the Mystical, including the Kofong, the Kangar, and the Kaymar took their rise in Athens. These last are exactly the same as the Mysteria or Eleusinia, a mystical society introduced into Eleusis in Attica by Eumolpus about 1356 B. C., and abolished after a period of 1800 years by Theodosius the Great, after its introduction to Rome, in the days of Adrian.

This society was the most celebrated of all the religious ceremonies of Greece. Candidates for initiation were previously purified with holy water, and led by night into the lodge, called Musikos Sekos, or the Mystical Temple. Any found to be guilty, or reported to have been guilty of witchcraft was not admitted. The priest, after proposing certain questions to them, as to their intentions, purity of mind, and singleness of purpose, read the oath called the "mysteries," written on stones, to each, under no less penalty than that of calling divine vengeance upon his head, or being excommunicated from the society of men, and finally suffering an ignominious death should he reveal any of the mysteries to the uninitiated. Should a stranger enter the lodge without previous information or recommendation, he was immediately punished with death.

The Hierophantes or master of ceremony usually anointed his body with poisonous juice of the hemlock. There were in addition three principal officers, acting respectively in the capacity of the torch-bearer, herald, or cryer, and sacrificer. On procession days, women were employed to carry baskets in which were cakes and serpents. A libation was also offered, and was performed by placing earthen vessels containing wine, one toward the east, and the other toward the west; each of the bowls was then taken up, after the utterance of some magical words, and thrown down so that it should be broken, and its contents spilled on the ground. Those not initiated into this society, though they might be citizens, were regarded as cowards and unworthy of life itself.

The reader will find that the customs, regulations, and ceremonies of this order, have been divided among all of our native secret societies, but retained almost entirely by Kofongism, and partly by the Securing Purroh; the differences that will be discovered are the additional improvements of wickedness, which is natural; for an institution must either retrograde and die, or advance by improvements and prosperity.

To the curious, as well as the prejudiced, I must confess that I have a three-fold object for diving pretentiously into the mysteries of African secret orders. In the first place, I was actuated by the conviction that the various institutions of our country, though now tainted with gross idolatries and dark superstitions, had their origin from ancient and civilized institutions and could be ranked with them. Secondly, I sought to demonstrate that the existing civilized secret society known by the name of Freemasonry, is in no respect more religious or godly than ancient mystical institutions, or the modern secret societies of heathenish and idolatrous Africa. Compare the forms of his obligations and the ceremonies of his lodge with those of African kindred societies and see whether there is any material difference. My third and principal object is to strip the medical departments of these societies of the superstition in which most of their valuable remedies are involved; medicines which would have been a common blessing to Africa, and doubtless to the world, but long hidden within the veil of the mysterious, and revealed only to a few of the initiated under penalty of their obligations, if communicated to others.

Many will not see how secrets committed to me under such horrible penalties could be so easily divulged. The explanation is this, and is a simple one, too. I felt myself entitled to participation in the privileges of every institution belonging to my country, especially as I perceived foreigners and sometimes Europeans admitted into it. Accordingly, I entered with the view to "try all things and hold fast that which is good." But as I found the orders to be in direct opposition to Christianity, and contrary to the principles of morality and truth, I consequently regarded my obligation as a rash vow, and null and void, which must of necessity be abrogated.

IS OUR NATION CHRISTIAN?

It is said that we are not a Christian nation, and cannot be because our law of toleration forbids. National acceptance of Jesus Christ cannot stand together with perfect toleration. Is this so? Is it not, on the contrary, true that Christianity is, by the necessity of its nature, perfectly tolerant? Did not Christ forbid all violent compulsion to faith? While that faith is acknowledged, and its supremacy asserted, all hostile faiths are permitted to struggle for being under its flag. There is no necessary discord between toleration and national acceptance of Christ. The British Government is as tolerant as the American, but it is avowedly Christian. It rules over more Mohammedan and Pagan subjects than over Christian. The former can no more complain of intolerance than the latter. Germany is tolerant of Romanism, and yet is Christian and Protestant. We ourselves can justly permit Buddhistic, Mohammedan, Judaic, and Free Religion temples to arise, and protect their worshipers in their religious rights, and yet confess ourselves as a nation, humbly and believingly, the servant of Christ. It is only false religions that are intolerant. It is consistent with Christianity to bear with unbelievers, and misbelievers.

But see whether the denial of these truths is driving us. We are now compelled to crouch before one claim of the Romanist—to expel the Bible from our schools. We shall soon before the other—a division of the school fund. If we yield the Bible, we must the tax. They will have a right to say,

"Give us our money and let us take care of our own school," if we allow them to put God's Book out of State schools. They have a stronger plea for the latter than the former, for a man's money they can claim. No one has a right to employ it against his conscience, except for preservation of State in military exigencies, which no one affirms is here the case. Why, then, admit the first step? Is it that which costs; why pay it? "Because," says one, "the Bible is objected to by Jew and infidel." So is the Sabbath, as an American institution, objected to, and so will it fall, too, if the Bible in schools falls. We can tolerate Jew and infidel, and not as a nation be Jew or infidel.

Another argument is, that the Bible is and must be Protestant, and hence aggrieves the Romanist. It is not Protestant; it is Christian. If Protestant and Christian are synonymous terms, then we can take whichever term we please, and we please to take the word Christian rather than the word Protestant. If others push us to the latter word, amen: so let it be. That word delivered Germany and England from the vilest oppression that ever saw the sun. That word drove Alva out of Holland; drove the Pope headlong down the Alps; made Elizabeth overthrow Spain, the mightiest of powers; gave Germany to Luther, and to Frederick, and to Bismarck; gave us Gustavus Adolphus and Sweden, William of Orange and England, John Knox and Scotland, Boyne and Ireland—yea, rather, gave us also Plymouth Rock and the American colonization, Samuel Adams and the American nation. Let us not talk as though Protestant was a poor word yet for a national war cry. It may be the only word that shall bring the Germans from Sabbath-breaking and infidelity to the cross and creed of Christ. They still sing Luther's psalm as they go into battle, as much as when they fought under the great Frederick, or not less great Gustavus. They still cling to Luther's Bible and to Luther's church. By that Bible we shall find them blended with us, in defense of that Christianity which is their national life and glory.

But must we parley with Romanists? What have they done to merit this consideration at our hands? Will they unite in saving the public school if we abolish the Bible therefrom? Do they offer to trade on any such terms? Do they offer to trade on any terms? They are consistent; let us be so, also. They mean the spiritual and temporal and ecclesiastical domination of America. The surrender of the Bible is the beginning of the end. Capturing that, they will press forward to other victories. If we are a Christian nation, we shall show it by clinging to the Bible in our public schools.—Bishop Gilbert Haven.

RAILROAD OUTRAGES.

Within the last two or three weeks, the railroads seem to have let loose in their brutal treatment of colored passengers. On the 25th inst, Miss Clara Duvall, of Greensboro, while returning from Marion to her home on the A. & W. R. R., was brutally and violently torn from her seat in the coach where she had taken it, and was placed in the smoking end of the divided car.

The train had but one coach. That was divided. One end for smoking and the other is for those who do not smoke. Miss Duvall took her seat in the end where smoking is not allowed, as her ticket entitled her to that end of the car, and as she is not a smoker, but a lady of education and refinement. She was ordered out by the conductor, whose name I have learned is Bob Fitz. She did not go out, whereupon he seized her and attempted to put her out. Being physically unable to succeed, one of his own type, a man by the name of Sewell, from Marion, assisted him, and these two incarnate fiends violently put her into the end where smokers ride. There was no other lady in there. Here she was compelled to ride, after paying the railroad first class fare. This is the treatment that colored passengers are constantly receiving on Southern roads.

About the same time of this violence on the road just mentioned, a number of persons, professors in the Tuskegee Normal School of this State, were kicked out of a first class car in Georgia. They were on a bridal trip, one of the company having gone to Macon to get married. The groom, having resented this wrong and inhuman treatment, was locked up in a prison at a station on the way, and the bride went on to Tuskegee alone. A humiliating spectacle, this! Yet this is called a civilized country; yea it is called a Christian country. Shame on the civilization. Shame on the Christianity of a people that do not lift their voices against such barbarism, and that do not use all their influence to put an end, once for all, to such conduct!

Repeatedly we have petitioned for fairness and justice. We have appointed committees to wait on the Railroad Commissioners; we have met and talked with railroad officials; we have asked if they will not give us first class accommodations, sell us second class tickets, and thereby reduce our fare. But all these requests have been ignored, and things go on the same. In the State of Georgia, the plan is when colored people take seats in a first class car, no matter what their standing and culture and refinement may be, a telegram is sent on ahead, and when the train reaches a station or two ahead, a band of ruffians with revolvers and clubs board the train and by violence put the colored passengers into the second class car. This is Georgian civilization. It is Georgian Christianity, or rather Georgian religion.

Now the question comes, shall we as a race any longer endure these things? At an indignation meeting held recently in this city, it was decided that these things shall come to an end. These are the things that bring about bitter race animosities, and will lead to strife. Patience with regard to these things has now ceased to be a virtue. If a white lady had been put out of a car by colored men, as Miss Duvall was by white men, there is not a jail or a prison in Alabama strong enough to resist the mob that would have assaulted it and hanged the men of such deeds. But colored men are too much civilized, and would show that they are gentlemen; so no violence followed this daring deed. They will leave it to see what the law—properly constituted authority—will do with the case. Does this not show the difference between the two races? Is the negro a troublesome being? Is he a disturber of the peace? Is he not law-abiding? Does he not work faithfully? Has he not made this Southland what it is? And yet here is his pay, kicks, cuffs and blows from those whom he and his forefathers have made rich by their unrequited toil in the cotton fields, the rice swamps, and on the sugar plantations. Is it not a wonder that the earth does not open her mouth and swallow up such ungrateful and unthinking and inhuman creatures, as it swallowed up Dathan and Abiram in days of old? Is not the blood of the oppressed crying to heaven with a voice of thunder against the oppressor, whose iron heel has for centuries been on the neck of the negro? Oh, what an account some persons will have to render in that great day of reckoning! No wonder that God is shaking this Southland with his mighty power as felt in the earthquake.

These are only the distant tread of his mighty footsteps as he is beginning to march upon this land in the fury of his wrath. Charleston, the great slave-mart of this country is being shaken by the mighty hand of God. He who presides over the destinies of men and nations is beginning to reckon for the deeds of the past. His voice is heard in the terrific cyclone, in the roar of the dashing flood, in the angry and popping flames of the conflagration, in the rumbling earthquake. These are the voices, calling the inhabitants of this land to do justice, to turn from their deeds of violence, to cease oppression.—The Guiding Star, Selma, Ala.

At an indignation meeting held in Selma, Alabama, on the 30th ult., it was resolved by the large number of citizens present:

1. That we memorialize the Legislature of the State and the Congress of the United States to take such action and pass such laws as will guarantee us protection for our lives, safety in travel, and accommodations according to that we pay.
2. That we appoint some one to bear our grievances before the State and National Congress, who shall, in person, plead for our rights and for justice.
3. That we assure these bodies that if neither the general nor the State government is able to protect us against violence, then it will be necessary for the colored people to take steps toward local self protection.
4. That in the railroad suit of Miss Clara Duvall, now pending, we pledge ourselves to support her to any amount of money necessary to carry her case to success.
5. That we continue to agitate this railroad question till we get our rights.
6. That the salient points of the proceedings of this meeting be published in all the leading papers of our country, that the world may know the wrongs and injustice suffered by the colored people of the South.

Nearly every Teacher's Institute held during the past summer has been addressed upon the subject of scientific temperance instruction in the public schools. The teachers are almost unanimously in favor of such instruction being given. The W. C. T. U., of Illinois, is planning to present such a measure at the next session of the Legislature.

The Northern and Southern Presbyterian churches united would make a body with 8,479 churches, 6,621 ministers, and 805,551 communicants, expending very nearly $12,000,000 a year.

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

KANSAS CONVENTION AND INCIDENTS OF TRAVEL.

Rusco, Kans., Sept. 10, 1886.

The Kansas State Christian Association closed its annual convention here last evening. The secretary, Rev. P. S. Feemster, will report officers elected and other business transacted. The attendance from abroad was not large; indeed, the conspicuous feature of day sessions was the absence of very many we had hoped to meet and greet as comrades in the conflict. Evening sessions were fairly attended, and both audience and interest so increased that I consented to remain for another lecture, Bro. Loggan consenting to fill my appointment at Washington this evening. Nothing has been wanting on the part of the citizens here to make every one feel at home, and their great regret is that they had not an opportunity of entertaining many more from abroad. I shall often recall their kindness to me and always with gratitude.

My next appointments are at Washington, the county seat of Washington county, embracing Saturday evening, Sabbath and Monday, after which I must start eastward to reach the Illinois State meeting on time.

I am glad I came to this beautiful Republican Valley, for I have left my testimony against the "sum of all villainies," though not all has been accomplished that I had hoped for.

WASHINGTON, KANS., Sept. 14.—I have spent six days in Kansas, spoken nine times, taught two Bible classes and spoken a few words of encouragement to one Sabbath-school, obtained a few Cynosure subscribers, made the acquaintance of a goodly number of intelligent friends, and am waiting at the depot for a train with only grateful and happy memories of my brief visit. Though somewhat conversant with the West and its possibilities, I had very meagre conceptions of the vastness of this country or of its productive wealth.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, Sept. 15.—I reached this point just ten minutes late for an east-bound train for Chicago. It looks like a "feature" in the railroad management to collect toll from passengers compelled to remain over night at the Union Pacific Depot Hotel. Accommodations, however, are first-class, and charges only $3 a day.

I have here fallen in with a G. A. R., who, with his wife, is returning from the great gathering on the Pacific slope. He was intelligent, and quite willing to converse. I asked who was his choice for next President. He replied, Senator Allison, of Iowa, who, as I learned subsequently, is a personal friend. I said, "Don't you think John A. Logan would accept the office if the G. A. R. would give it to him?" He thought John would not decline the honor, but as the G. A. R. had nothing to do with party politics they could render no aid to John in that line. He freely admitted that Logan was endeavoring to use the "army" for personal advancement, but said Sherman and others were doing the same thing. He was a "staunch Republican," but said, "The grand old party will be compelled to take up the prohibition issue or go under when the time comes." He claimed for his party credit for all temperance legislation obtained, and when I called his attention to the fact that after twenty-five years of rule in the District of Columbia they turned the government over to the Democrats with 1,196 licensed saloons in the District, and liquor clandestinely sold in both wings of the Capitol, and a few facts in that line, he admitted that the record was not above criticism. J. P. STODDARD.

COLLEGES AND CANDIDATES IN EAST TENNESSEE.

CAVE SPRINGS, Tenn., Sept. 10, 1886.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—After speaking to a full house at Liberty Chapel, a United Brethren church in Washington county, I went to Home in Greene county and walked out to Tusculum College where I was most kindly entertained by Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Moore. Bro. Moore is an elder in the Presbyterian church, an active friend of the college and an industrious Christian worker. He reads the Cynosure with great interest and does not fail to testify against the unfruitful works of darkness. On the morning of the 8th I was invited to conduct the morning exercises at the college, and was pleased with the appearance and attention of the goodly number of students.

A pleasant day spent in the library of Pres. J. Moore gave needed rest and opportunity for writing, and in the evening I met a good congregation, including most of the students at Oakland Presbyterian church. The moon was brilliant and the air was perfect. Excellent attention was given, and I trust a good impression was made. A large number of tracts were distributed and a few books sold. One student who expects to enter the ministry said that he should feel it his duty to bear testimony against this system of evil.

Next morning I walked to Home where I met ex-Senator Patterson, a son-in-law of Andrew Johnson, who resides here. He is a man of fine abilities, was for years a judge, and but for his intemperance would be greatly honored by the people. He was duly sober and seems to be more temperate in his habits than when I saw him in 1882. Prohibition is making steady progress in Tennessee, and it will doubtless be the first of the ex-slave States to adopt a constitutional amendment prohibiting the liquor traffic. Both political parties have declared in favor of submission, and there seems to be a moral certainty that the people will ere long be called on to vote on such an amendment. The two candidates for Governor, Robert and Alfred Taylor, reside in East Tennessee and are making a joint canvass of the State. Their father is said to be a Prohibitionist.

From Home I came up to Johnson City, an enterprising town on the eastern border of Washington county, and at the junction of the East Tennessee and North Carolina railroad. After staying over night I came out on this road to Milligan College in Carter county. The village and postoffice are known as Cave, Springs, and are in the mountains. Here I was most kindly received by Pres. Hopwood, who has read the Cynosure since my visit in 1882. Since then their fine college building has been completed, others enlarged and new ones erected. Everything indicates a growing prosperity in this young and vigorous institution, which is undenominational in character, but whose able president is an elder among the Disciples of Christ. I reached here in time to take part in the chapel exercises, and was asked to make remarks to the one hundred students with which the term opens. I then listened to a recitation on political economy which indicated much careful thought, and one on physiology which showed diligent study. Pres. Hopwood tells me that they had much difficulty in getting rid of secret college fraternities and that it was only by the loss of a number of students who thought more of their orders than of the college. He rejoices that now they are free and does not fail to warn all against all such systems of soul-bondage. I am invited to spend the Sabbath and address the students and people.

I have just had an interview with the brother of the two candidates for Governor. He and his father (who is a Disciple minister) are Prohibitionists. He says that his father and his Republican brother are Masons, but that he and his brother Robert are not.

WHITE PINE, Tenn., Sept. 14.—I was most hospitably entertained by President and Mrs. Hopwood of Milligan College and greatly enjoyed my visit to that institution. I had the privilege of addressing the students twice and the general congregation on Sabbath, and had a most respectful hearing. After the discourse from John 3: 19, 20, the Lord's Supper, according to custom, was administered. In the evening the young people conducted the services and excellent remarks were made.

On Monday morning I was kindly taken to Johnson City and a small contribution was put into my hand for the cause. I came to Morristown where the M. E. church has a large school for the colored children, and thence east on the North Carolina railroad for this place. I find here a village of 500 people with a Presbyterian and United Brethren church. The latter have in successful operation Edwards' Academy with a fine brick building on a hill and commanding a magnificent view of the mountains. It is under the supervision of Prof. Doren, a graduate of Westfield College, Ill., and a disciple of the late Pres. Allen. He, with Rev. A. J. Newgent, presiding elder, and Rev. P. H. Wagener, all belong to the loyal wing of the U. B. church and take no stock in the commission folly. Nor is there any discussion on the question in the conference. There are more than 100 pupils in this school, and its prospects and influence are excellent.

A cold, heavy rain has been falling since I came, and as there seems little prospect of a favorable time for a meeting I have concluded to go to Knoxville and (D. V.) come back here next month to attend the annual conference that meets at that time. I am indebted to these brethren for hospitality and to Prof. Doren for an opportunity to address the students of the Academy. My address will be H. H. HINMAN.

THE WORK IN KANSAS.

Editor Cynosure,

DEAR BROTHER:—At our Kansas State Convention there were so few brethren from other parts of the State that it seemed as if they had forgotten the reform cause. But three of all the former workers not present reported to the convention by letter: the secretary, Rev. W. W. McMillan; also J. A. Torrence, treasurer; and Rev. Mr. Latimer of the Reformed Presbyterian church, who was hindered by sickness; the Lord bless him and his kind family.

But while we were disappointed by the absence of many co-laborers, yet the meeting was a success. Bro. P. S. Feemster came the Saturday before, and gave us two very able and appropriate sermons on the Sabbath; and as Bro. Stoddard failed to get here the first evening of the convention Bro. Feemster gave us a stirring discourse on the evils of the secret orders.

Bro. Stoddard arrived the next day, and being in good health and spirits, the audience was generally carried on by his powerful reasoning and vast array of facts to a settled conviction of the anti-republican and anti-Christian character of the secret orders. Even some who had feared that the convention might injure the effect of a camp-meeting of the M. E. church just closed eight or ten days before, were wonderfully pleased that the speakers came.

On the last evening of the convention, at the close of Bro. Stoddard's remarks, the desire was so strong for him to remain another night that I had to go and fill the first appointment of a series made for him by Bro. Houlette, at Washington, in the Evangelical church, kindly given by Rev. Daeschner.

The meetings were limited in the attendance, by rain and Kansas mud, both nights that Bro. Stoddard lectured at Washington, but the rain did not affect the speaker's facts and arguments; they came thick and fast, very perfectly overwhelming. The first evening there was quite a representation of Masons and Odd-fellows, and although there was no interruption it was very manifest that they felt the force of the withering charges against the unfruitful works of darkness. R. LOGGAN.

THE IOWA REPORT.

The Agent's labors for the State Convention.—Meeting at Kilbourn.—The False Position of Professed Christians in the Lodge.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—About six weeks before the Iowa State convention recently held at Birmingham, I spent in visiting Christian Anti-masonic churches and families, working up the State meeting and securing the financial co-operation of the friends of reform as I met with them. Many of those upon whom I have called have responded liberally. Friends at various places have taken me around in their carriages and introduced me to their fellow reformers, thus lightening and facilitating my labors. I would mention names, but there have been so many instances of noble generosity that it would make my report too long to attempt to narrate them.

The response to the call for financial aid to prosecute the reform work in Iowa has been so general and liberal from those who have been already called upon; that if others yet to be seen will manifest a like liberality and devotion the means will not be wanting for the continued prosecution of the reform work in Iowa.

The annual meeting of the State Association at Birmingham was a gratifying success. All who attended seemed inspired to push the battle of the Lord against the secret lodge system. There were delegates from Fayette, Cedar, Lynn, Henry, Washington, Jefferson, Page and other counties. The local attendance was large, and the hospitality of the people of Birmingham was unbounded.

Rev. Geo. Warrington, the editor of the Birmingham Free Press, and pastor of the U. P. church, was unanimously re-elected president of the Association. The Sabbath following the convention I preached for him at his country appointment, nine miles from Birmingham, morning and afternoon. In the evening I lectured on the religious philosophy of Freemasonry at the village of Kilbourn.

This last meeting originated on this wise: I met a company of men about noon on Saturday, who were working on the road, some of them Anti-masons, one of them a Mason. The arrangement was made, then and there, that I should lecture in Kilbourn at night, after my Sabbath day's work of preaching was done.

There was a large crowd of attentive listeners at the lecture. Every seat in the house was taken. Some sat on the floor, and many stood around the house and listened quietly and attentively, while I showed them that the Christless worship of Ancient Craft Masonry is as false and deceptive as Mohammedism or paganism; that it is as really devil-worship as the Gentile worships of which Paul speaks; and that it is as impossible for one who understands the religious philosophy of Freemasonry to worship at her altars and be accepted of God in Christ as it was in Paul's day to drink the cup of the Lord and the cup of devils or to be a partaker of the Lord's table and the table of devils. Is not false worship as offensive to God as lying, or swearing, or adultery?

A man can no more continue to practice the deistical worship of the lodge, and be a Christian than he can continue to steal or lie or commit adultery and be a Christian. Don't let us be deceived. These unrepentant sinners who profess faith in Christ are hypocrites, not Christians. Mark what I say: the man who understands the religious philosophy of Blue Lodge Masonry and yet is an adhering Mason, is guilty of a mortal sin. He has conspired with Satan to dethrone Christ and to subvert our holy Christianity. In adhering to Masonry he is helping Satan to keep men from coming to Christ, who is the only way to God, and he thus becomes a worker with Satan for the destruction of human souls.

O, my brother! if you would be a Christian, do not adhere to Masonry. Hear what the Holy Ghost saith: "Ye can not be a partaker of the Lord's table and the table of devils." If those who adhered to the false worships of Paul's day cast themselves off from the atonement, how can you hope for the mercy of God if you adhere to a system of organized deism, like Blue Lodge Masonry in our day?

A presiding elder of the M. E. church of Iowa, who renounced Freemasonry, said, "No man who understands the underlying principles of Freemasonry can be a Freemason and a Christian." My brother, can a man be a Mohammedan and a Christian? Can a man be a pagan idolater and a Christian? How then can a man who knows that Blue Lodge Masonry is a system of organized deism, be a Freemason and a Christian? Christ says: "Come out from among them and be ye separate; touch not the unclean thing and I will receive you." As you love eternal life will you not listen and obey?

A Sample of U. B. Commission Work.—A Quaker Welcome.—The Village Blacksmith Unknown to Poetry and Fame.

SAMANTHA, O., Sept. 17, 1886.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I am now at the home of Mr. A. L. Carey. He is a leader in the Friends' church of this place. I expect to speak here on this and to-morrow evenings, spending Sabbath with United Presbyterians four miles from here. Sabbath and Monday last was spent at East Monroe with the United Brethren. The class at that place is quite small and seems to be just struggling for existence. Rev. Mr. Wright, the pastor, is a devoted Christian, young and enthusiastic. He has a heavy load to carry. One of the trustees (Mr. Reed by name) is an adhering Odd-fellow, who says he will leave the church before he will leave the lodge. He also holds the office of class-leader. When he was asked to allow the writer as a Christian to give his views of the lodge in the church, he refused, stating in short, that Odd-fellowship was such a good institution it would not stand investigation. Bro. Wright invited me to sit with him Sabbath morning, offer prayer after the sermon, and speak to the people as I wished. I did so. When a vote was taken by the pastor whether they should hear me or not, all voted to hear me but Mr. Reed and an Odd-fellow brother. The house was well-filled, both on Sabbath and Monday evenings, more being present on the latter evening. Mr. Reed did not come near either meeting. The Lord helped me, and I think good was accomplished.

The brother who was to have arranged for my meeting near Leesburg was not able to do so, as some friends were afraid of being "imposed on." Being a stranger I could blame no one. Wednesday was spent with friends at New Vienna. I first called on Henry Nurdyke of this place. When I asked if I could get a place to speak on my subject in his neighborhood, "Yes," said the old gentleman, "if there canst not get a better place thee can speak in my barn." He has a fine large barn with plenty of room. It being the day for mid-week meeting, by request I accompanied Mr. N. to the meeting. The Spirit moved me to speak of my mission. I soon found that all present sympathized with me. There are lodge people in this church, but they do not usually have time to attend mid-week meetings or prayer meetings. Those who are walking in the light know why. We had a blessed meeting. God was very present by his Holy Spirit. At the close the friends unanimously requested me to present my subject on next 2nd and 3rd day evenings.

Daniel Hill, who was nominated on the last Prohibition ticket for State Senator, and is known far and near as a zealous reformer, takes a strong stand against the lodge, and made me a welcome guest at his home. Three friends added their names to the Cynosure list here and others will follow.

The meeting last evening at Lexington was not largely attended, owing partially to the brevity of notice. All who were present gave the best of attention. I spoke till 10 o'clock. The windows were up and a dozen or more secretists stood peering in while I was speaking. But of course this was only characteristic. When I urged them to respond if they had anything to reply, the village blacksmith came in and said that he had. He said he had been a very wicked man, but was now better. He had belonged to five secret societies, and that his entire reform was due to them, etc. Said he, "Some things which this man has said are false." I inquired, "What things? Please point them out. Your statement is too indefinite." He replied that he knew, but I could not get him to tell the people.

"I made the statement that you were blindfolded when you were initiated into the I. O. O. F. and

CORRESPONDENCE.

INCIDENTS OF THE KANSAS PROHIBITION CONVENTION.

LEAVENWORTH, Kans.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—After finding the large audience in the Opera House at Emporia, July 13th, J. O. Pickering of Olathe, St. John's law partner, was the first speaker I heard. He was enthusiastically called for, and responded in a manner that gave evidence of prohibition principles of much longer standing than his brief connection with the party, and eliciting applause that showed he was a favorite with the convention. A mass-meeting was held in Freemont Park in the evening with an attendance of probably 1500 people and addressed by Dr. Funk of the New York Voice, Mr. Hopkins and M. J. Fanning also of the Voice. It was so poorly lighted about the rostrum that the speakers' countenances were scarcely discernible by the audience. The Emporia Republican of that morning had said, among other uncharitable things, that the Prohibition party was composed of the "fag ends of creation," or something of that import, and we presume it was in mercy that they cast such a dim light on our countenances.

Marshall J. Fanning was introduced as "Ten shows under one tent," whose speech was the crowning effort of the evening. His manner is a little too clownish and he referred with pride to his connection with the Knights of Labor and made some flattering references to the order; but he demonstrated very clearly that the prohibition of the liquor traffic would turn millions of earnings of the laboring class from the saloons into mercantile channels, and thus create a demand for the necessities of life and business that would open up the manufactories and give laborers employment at living wages, bringing joy and plenty to their hitherto desolate homes.

Next morning the convention met in nominating session, nearly 300 being present. Most prominent among those mentioned for Governor were J. O. Pickering, Mr. Forest and Hon. C. H. Branscomb. An informal ballot developed the strength of the convention for Mr. Forest, Pickering having declined. As preparations were making for the vote, Mr. Forest was plying with questions till he became very nervous. I stood near him, and I felt sorry for the candidate; they swarmed around him so and plying him with so many questions. I felt glad in my heart that I was not a candidate. One arose and moved that the vote be declared formal. Instantly protests were made and the charge of monopoly made against the candidate. Some denounced and others defended, and the confusion bid fair to become general. St. John happily quieted it, and Mr. Forest made a confession, pledged his support to the cause and withdrew his name. Nominations then proceeded with dispatch. In the afternoon Mrs. Rastell introduced Mrs. Lathrap as the "Daniel Webster of the W. C. T. U.," who produced her usual unanswerable arguments in favor of prohibition and its party.

In the evening another mass meeting was held in the park. St. John's address was able, argumentative, unabusive and unanswerable, and a bold and defiant challenge to the Republican party to meet argument with argument, facts with facts and not be dodging the great issue.

A Mr. Lincoln followed St. John, and undertook to address the audience in the interests of the Knights of Labor, but the crowd very soon began to disperse and I hardly think he got a respectful hearing. The hunger and cold and bloodshed and anarchy of the recent strikes are too fresh for the people to be enthusiastic for that order. Upon this occasion the grounds were well lighted, the band discoursed music of rare quality, and the "fag ends" seemed to have grown in the respect of the people. The audience was more than double that of the previous evening.

At the close I asked my landlord how delegates of the Prohibition convention compared with those of the old parties. He said, "they were more easily managed—as nice a set of men as he ever had about him"—no whisky fumes, obscenity or swearing.

THE TRUTH AGAIN CONQUERING IN MEMPHIS.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Sept. 16, 1886.

Editor Cynosure,

DEAR BRO.:—When I last wrote you the lodgeites were in groups rejoicing, because their emissaries had broken into our office (Living Way), thrown our type into the street, pried our forms, robbed our press of several of its parts, thereby dismantling it, carried off the clock, and made away with half a gallon of benzine,—all of this added to their past record of deeds of benevolence, and yet they are not happy! Phoenix-like we expect to arise and keep the Living Way heralding the glorious news of freedom to the sons of God who are bound by the galling yoke of lodgery.

And now come threats in the shape of postal cards and anonymous letters, a revival of the course pursued last year. Undaunted, and with implicit confidence in Him who hath thus far sustained me, I set up my Ebenezer and go forward. The Living Way comes out this week part patent, which we trust we will not have to continue long.

I wrote you a few weeks ago of Elder Brinkley attending an association at a point called Dark Corner, Miss. While there he distributed some tracts, and fifty copies of the Living Way, beside preaching an anti-secret society sermon to about 175 ministers. The pastor of the church had just gotten a secret society into the church a few weeks previous, but the sermon, the Living Way, and the tracts got in there before the thing had gotten fairly able to stand alone, and I have just learned that last Saturday the good old Christians of the Dark Corner church made that preacher take his choice—give up their pulpit or his lodge. He chose the former, and took his hat and left.

I can scarcely tell you how I felt, so will just relate it with this incident: Some twenty years ago I attended a protracted meeting, at which a number of persons were interested seeking religion, among whom was my mother's sister, her husband being an old fashioned Methodist, but very dry, (and was classed a good old dry brother.) On this occasion uncle was unusually jovial. After an anxious week my aunt rejoiced in hope, and upon her arising from the anxious seat, uncle gave vent to his joy in this manner: "What shall I say, Hurrah! Hurrah! Hurrah for God! Hurrah!" stopping suddenly, then resuming his old time dryness he said, "Well, God always wins."

The salvation of Dark Corner church is a glorious victory. It is about twenty-five miles from us. On Sunday night a number of the secretist, passed by the Living Way office, rattled the doors so severely as to shake out the remainder of the broken glass left from their former raid. We trust the low rate we have made for the paper—$1.25 to Nov. 1st, will bring us a sufficient number of cash subscribers to replenish our stock of type at an early day. We rejoice in the hope of the glory of God. Pray for us.

R. N. COUNTEE.

THE OLD BAPTISTS.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Having for nearly six years been acquainted with the "Old Baptists" in two of the Southern States, I am much surprised that your correspondent in Polo, Mo., should deny that they oppose education, missions, etc. Perhaps he means another kind of Baptists; or his experience may have been local; or the Old Baptists in Missouri may be different from their brethren in Kentucky—I hope so. I have heard them denounce philosophy and astronomy as witchcrafts; have heard one of their more intelligent ministers say publicly, "If I could ever get hold of old Natural Science I'd hang him higher than Haman." I have heard them mutilate the Scriptures, and with brazen blasphemy claim that the words which came from them were plenary inspired. I have rarely heard them preach without hearing some slur at education, and have heard over and over the statement, "I hain't never brushed agin no college, but God allers qualifies them he calls."

I recently heard one who cannot read a word preach from a text badly mutilated, and which he claimed to take from the Book of Elijah. He repeatedly sneered at education, and claimed that his words were inspired. Next day I told him there is no "Book of Elijah" in the Bible, and urged him to obtain an education. He replied that he believed he must. Said he, "The Sperrit isn't with the old boy very much last night, and I couldn't preach. If I had a education I could preach whether the Sperrit was with me or not."

They oppose temperance work, oppose missions, and sometimes denounce Sabbath-schools as the direct route to hell, claiming, as I understand it, that God's unalterable decrees render human means powerless to influence salvation, while guilt is increased by knowledge. I might allege more, and multiply examples to prove my statements. These facts may not be true everywhere, but I think they are generally. Potter's "Handbook to all Religions" (p. 50) and the "Bible Companion" (p. 390) claim to give the facts from the Old Baptist standpoint, and they are in full accord with my experience. If they are in favor of missions, I beg to inquire why they call themselves "Anti-mission," and another faction in contra-distinction calls itself the "Missionary Baptist Church." I believe that in the region where they exist they are the greatest obstacle in the way of progress and true religion.

MR. CARPENTER AND THE THIRD PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

EVANSTON, Ill., Sept., 1886.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—The Rev. J. E. Roy, D. D., in his extended notice of the life of Philo Carpenter in your number of September 9th, charges the Presbytery of Chicago with having excommunicated forty-two members of the Third Church in 1851, and alleges that the moderator declared Mr. Carpenter "no longer a member of that body as an elder." Dr. Roy admits that the action of the members in question was "un-Presbyterian and irregular according to the standards;" but he assumes that according to "the book" the church as a body, or the individuals, should have been tried under charges. But "the book" does not provide for the formal discipline of seceding churches or bodies of individuals; and hence in all such cases, as in the withdrawal of the Southern churches in 1857, the superior judicatory simply directs that their names be dropped from the roll. In case a minority of a particular church still adheres to the Presbytery, it has always been held that the adhering portion is the church, and that the seceding portion is no longer a part of the Presbyterian church. In the case referred to this was the principle acted upon by the Presbytery. They did not "excommunicate" the majority of the church, but declared that they had seceded, as they had done by disowning the jurisdiction of the Presbytery. And the moderator did not declare Mr. Carpenter in particular out of the church. He only executed the order of the Presbytery in declaring the fact that all the seceders were by their own act out of the church. Of course Dr. Roy looks at the matter from a Congregational point of view, and I as a Presbyterian. I presume he thought of the excommunicating acts of the Old School party in the assembly of 1837 when he spoke of Mr. Carpenter and others as having been excommunicated by the Presbytery. But the four Synods in 1837 wished to adhere to the assembly, while the movers in the action referred to voluntarily withdrew from all the superior judicatories and disowned their jurisdiction.

I write this not to renew an old and dead controversy, but for the truth of history.

TWO REASONS FOR CLOSING OUT ALL SECRET POWERS.

To the reformers, and those who need reformation:—Out of the thousand reasons I might give you why no man, woman, or child, should belong to any secret organization, at this time I will name but two:

First, they are directly in the way of our truly, and fully trusting God. More than one minister has told me, if his church failed he had something else to fall back upon. If my Jesus fails me, I go under. I want to go under; there is nothing on top that induces me for one moment to desire to stay up. All may see the point. Those men's faith were not fully in God. They divided up their faith, gave God a part, and their lodge a part. Just here let me say, God must have all, or nothing. Put that down.

Second reason. Satan has such a grand chance to squeeze into all these secret combinations, or powers. No one pretends to keep him out. If you charge them of his Satanic company they will turn upon you and say: "You cannot keep him out, he gets in to all the churches," (meaning religious societies, of course.) The whole world must be posted as to Satan's relation to Christ's church. He may try to get in; he always will. He might as well try to get into heaven! Never; no, never can. Let me say it because it is the truth, all of God's redeemed ones must get away from the devil. It matters not where he may be found; all the truly saved must get near to God and remain there. We are getting into perilous times; it is God or the devil, heaven or hell. Hence, let all remember, if you have your neck in a secret yoke, you get out at once before you get your neck broke. Yours till we are all free indeed.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE WRITINGS OF JOHN.

LESSON I.—October 3, 1886.—Jesus Betrayed. John 18: 1-14.

GOLDEN TEXT.—The Son of Man is betrayed into the hands of sinners.—Mark 14: 41.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The Betrayal. vs. 1-3. As the doubting Thomas and the self-confident Peter are both representative of large classes of believers, so Judas himself represents a class, who in the church but not of it, are willing for selfish ends, for gain or popularity, to betray Christ to his enemies. Ministers who apologize, for or are silent in regard to popular sins, may be only denying their Master through fear, like Peter. Only God and their own hearts know whether they deliberately mean to betray Christ's cause. But in nearly every age of modern time some great question has always arisen, as if almost for the very purpose of drawing a dividing line between the loyal though imperfect Christian and the Judases; and the secrecy question seems to be at the present day, the question which is thus winnowing the chaff from the wheat. Take Blue Lodge Masonry and imagine a minister of the Gospel initiated into its mysteries, blindfold, cable-towed, invoking upon himself its horrible penalties, tacitly swearing to lie, rather than ever reveal the secrets of the order; or playing Hiram Abiff with its mocking travesty of the resurrection in a mixed company of deists, saloon keepers, and dissolute or worldly men, and the words of our Golden Text show a peculiar meaning and force, "The Son of Man is betrayed into the hands of sinners." We are told that Judas knew the place. The fact that he was one of the twelve and on terms of such familiar intimacy with Christ was what gave him his peculiar facilities to betray. It is the good men in the lodge, the ministers and deacons and church members, who really betray Christ to his foes. "The good man argument" is one of the strongest supports of Masonry. If all good men would forsake the lodge as they long ago forsook the saloon, the institution would fall at once in popular estimation to the same level. One Christian who gives countenance to any popular evil does more to shield and perpetuate that evil than a hundred pronounced worldlings.

2. Christ's care for his disciples. vs. 4-11. The most beautiful commentary possible on John 10: 11, 12, is Christ's solicitude for the safety of his little band of disciples. The power and majesty which could make the armed men, sent to arrest him, go backward and fall to the ground is not used for himself; it was never used for himself. He even undoes the effect of Peter's rash act, which might have otherwise involved him in the same danger. And the question naturally rises, Is he less solicitous now? If under all that cloud of anguish and dread his first thought is for them, can there be any difference in his feelings now that he is exalted above all principalities and powers? To this question the Scriptures answer, "Jesus Christ the same yesterday and to day and forever."

3. The counsel of expediency. vs. 12-14. Expediency was Caiaphas's god. To it he was willing to sacrifice every principle both of divine law and earthly justice. But how much better is the politician, who to the same false god is willing to sacrifice thousands of innocent lives every year, rather than alienate the votes controlled by the saloon power from himself or his party?

LIGHT FROM THE WORD.

Who had before passed over the brook Cedron in circumstances of great affliction? 2 Sam. 15: 23. What was the great dividing question of ancient Jewish times? Isa. 2: 8; Ezek. 8: 14 3-5. Has it always been the sin of the human race to ignore Christ and the divine plan of salvation, and invent false systems of their own? Eccl. 7: 29.

From Peloubet's Notes.

"Where was a garden, into which he entered, and his disciples." Passing out by the gate north of the temple, we descend into a lonely part of the valley of black Kidron, at that season swelled into a winter torrent. Crossing it, we turn somewhat to the left, where the road leads towards Olivet. Not many steps farther, we turn aside from the road to the right, and reach what tradition has since earliest times, and probably correctly pointed out as "Gethsemane," the "Oil-press." It was a small property enclosed, "a garden" in the Eastern sense, where probably, amidst a variety of fruit trees and flowering shrubs, was a lowly, quiet, summer retreat, connected with, or near by, the "Olive-press." The present Gethsemane is only some seventy steps square; and though its old gnarled olives cannot be those (if such there were) of the time of Jesus, since all trees in that valley—those also which stretched their shadows over Jesus—were hewn down in the Roman siege, they may have sprung from the old roots, or from the old kernels. But we love to think of this "garden" as the place where Jesus "often"—not merely on this occasion, but perhaps on previous visits to Jerusalem—gathered with his disciples. It was a quiet resting place, for retirement, prayer, perhaps sleep, and a trying place also where not only the twelve, but others also, may have been wont to meet the Master.—Ederheim.

"Judas then, having received a band." Properly, the band, i. e., the Roman cohort, which consisted of from three hundred to six hundred men, was quartered in the tower of Antonia, and guarded the peace of the city. The Sanhedrim could procure its services to effect an arrest. Probably only part of the band was now present.—G. W. Clark. The "officers" who came with "the band" were members of the temple police, who were under orders of the Sanhedrim (i. e., the chief priests and Pharisees).

"They went backward (not fell backward), and fell to the ground." The divine majesty of Jesus just from his intimate communion with God, the unexpected boldness of innocence, smote terror into hearts conscious of guilt, and remembering that Jesus was the great miracle-worker who had power over life and death. The surrounding darkness added to the terror of the scene.—P.

"And cut off his right ear." This was a very rash act, for (1) it compromised Jesus in his teaching that his kingdom was not of this world, but a spiritual kingdom. (2) It would place him in the attitude of a rebel against the Roman government, and Pilot could not have pronounced him innocent. (3) Peter might have been arrested for rebellion, and perhaps the other disciples with him, and their work of founding the kingdom have been greatly hindered.—P.

"Then Jesus said unto Peter, Put up thy sword into the sheath." Jesus' kingdom is to neither conquer nor to defend itself by carnal weapons. The answer of Jesus lays down for the church its line of conduct under persecution; viz., that passive resistance called (Rev. 13: 10) the patience of the saints.—Godet.

"Shall I not drink it?" Shall I rebel against God's known will, and refuse to carry out the divine plans for the redemption of the world? The fact that the cup was given him by God was sufficient. We learn from Matthew (chap. 26: 52-54) that Jesus gave three other reasons for not resisting: (1) the unsuitableness of doing so, "For all they that take the sword shall perish by the sword." (Referring to religions and kingdoms, force will destroy those founded on force, and only those founded on truth and principles of righteousness can endure.) (2) Peter's puny sword was superfluous. If force was needed, prayer would bring more than twelve legions of mighty angels. (3) "How, then, shall the Scriptures be fulfilled" which is nearly equivalent to the question here. The Scriptures must be fulfilled, because they reveal the counsel of God.—G. W. Clark.

The preliminary examination before Annas. Verse 13, 14. Palace of Annas. Between one and two o'clock Friday morning. Jesus was led first to Annas, because this old man had formerly been high priest, and, though deposed by the foreign power that ruled Judea, was still the legitimate high priest according to the law of Moses, the office being for life (Num. 20: 28; 35: 25), and may have been so regarded by the Jews. Annas appears to have possessed great influence, and as father-in-law to Caiaphas doubtless exerted a very controlling influence over him.—G. W. Clark.

The three denials of Peter.—Palace of Caiaphas. Two to three o'clock Friday morning (Matt. 26: 69-75; Mark 14: 66-72; Luke 22: 55-62; John 18: 15-17, 25-27). To understand the position of Peter, we must remember that oriental palaces are built around an open quadrangular court: sometimes there is a large room open in front to this court. In such a room Jesus had his first trial before the Sanhedrim. Peter and John were in the court near the fire, where they could see Jesus and watch the proceedings. The first two denials were in the early part of the trial, or at the examination before Caiaphas, soon after his entering (John 18: 16, 17; Luke 22: 58). The third denial must have been about three o'clock, to ward the close of this first trial, for it was about an hour after the others (Luke 22: 59), and at the hour of cock-crowing.

—I am willing:

To receive what Thou givest.

And to lack what Thou withholdest.

And to relinquish what Thou takest.

And to suffer what Thou inflictest.

And to be what Thou requirest.

And to do what Thou commandest.—Dougan Clark.

IN BRIEF.

Last year Holland sent 1,000 tons of eels to England; Germany sends 20,000 pounds a week; Ireland sends nearly 500 tons a year; and Scotland 50 tons. The annual consumption of eels in London and suburbs is 1,650 tons.

The highest birth rate in the United States is in the South. In Louisiana there are 148 children born each year to every 1,000 women of child-bearing age, 156 in Georgia, and 187 in Texas. In New England the rate is 82; in the West about 122.

An Edinburg city missionary, in a recent paper on the increase of vice and disease in that city, states that there are more than 14,000 rooms, each occupied by a family, or sometimes as many as four families. In the kitchen of one lodging house 113 persons were huddled together. The owner of this place is an elder in a Christian church, who clears $10 a week from the property.

Thomas A. Edison threatens to revolutionize telegraphy by the application of earth currents, and is going to the sandy soil of Florida to investigate. A knowledge of these currents, he says, may change the Meteorological Bureau system and make it possible to forecast the weather exactly. He has an idea that it will do something still greater, but does not care to talk about the matter at present.

According to the last Israelitish Annual, the number of Jews in the world at present is 6,300,000, of whom 5,400,000 are in Europe. There are 230,000 Jews in the United States, 2,552,000 in Russia, 1,644,000 in Austro-Hungary, 668,000 in Galicia, 638,000 in Hungary, 562,000 in Germany, and in France, notwithstanding all the fuss that M. Drumont makes about them in his "Jew France," only 63,000.

There is a compositor in the Witness office, N. Y., whose father was at the battle of Waterloo, which took place in 1812. At the age of 45 he married, and was afterward blessed with seven children—six of whom are now alive, the youngest being 36 years of age. The old warrior is now 96, and has never used either whisky or tobacco. He gets up early every morning and attends to the business connected with his farm. He reads without the aid of glasses, and at present bids fair to reach 100 years of age. His good wife is 96.

Probably the largest rock in the known world is the south dome of the Yosemite. Standing at the forks of the upper valley, it rears itself, a solid rocky leaf, 6,000 feet above the ground. A more powerful hand than that of Titan has cut away the eastern half, leaving a sheer precipice over a mile in height. No man ever trod the top of this dome until last year. Former visitors gazed in wonder at the spikes driven into the rock by hardy spirits who had repeatedly endeavored to scale it. The shreds of rope dangling in the wind told the story of their failure. Last year, however, after thousands of dollars had been expended, several persons found their way to the top.

Poor's "Railroad Manual" for 1886, shows that 3,131 miles of road were constructed during the year, the aggregate mileage for the whole country being now 128,976. The capital stock of all railroads is $3,817,697,832. The earnings of all roads equalled $72,568,893, against $770,684,908 for 1884. The introduction says the past year undoubtedly marks a point of lower depression in the earnings of our railroad in ratio to their cost and mileage than is likely to be witnessed for some years to come, the present year showing a considerable improvement upon the past. Illinois Central Railroad earnings for the past week in August: 1886, $329,800; 1885 $197,251.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 23, 1886.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

NORTHAMPTON, Mass., Sept. 13th, 1886.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Arrived at Worcester, we found the State Prohibition convention was to meet there Sept. 8th, so we hurried on to Boston and New Hampshire.

Miss E. E. Flagg, at Wellesley, is cheerful and strong-hearted as ever. Her mother's age and infirmities prevented her accepting Mr. Conant's invitation to address the ladies of Willimantic, but she feels moved, I trust by the Spirit of God, to speak as well as write for Christ against the "unfruitful works of darkness," and I trust she may soon be enabled to take the field in that capacity. Her writings will be a good herald to precede her. Elder Kimball's family of New Market, N. H., were enraptured with her able open letter to the W. C. T. U., and I have heard others speak highly of it and suggest that it should be given to the Unions as a tract. Miss Flagg has a fair presence and a clear, ringing voice, and if God enables her to speak one-half as well as she writes she may become the Frances E. Willard of our reform. Her good father and she took us to a very agreeable ride out to Deacon Leadbetter's, a devoted and excellent friend of the N. C. A., who, with Mrs. Leadbetter, spoke warmly of Messrs. Hinman, Stoddard, Bailey, C. A. Blanchard, and other laborers.

We visited excellent Christian friends in Brookline and Boston, and wished much to call on the brave and eloquent McFall of Cambridge, but could not and reach the Worcester Convention on the 8th. The influence of the Boston Congregationalist, under Henry M. Dexter and A. H. Quint, is a wet blanket on the minds of the finest Christian people in the world. It is thoroughly mercenary. Its stockholders bought out The New England Puritan, which had the virtue of sincerity, paying, I am told, thirty-seven thousand dollars for its subscription list, and extinguished what light it gave. Since then the paper is conducted with cold-hearted craft, and keeps the New England Christians under its chill and deadly shade. It is entrenched in the Congregational House and cleaves to the denomination like a poisoned shirt of Nessus. Its influence on the temperance cause, as on the anti-slavery struggle, is simply disastrous. And though it opposes some error and teaches much truth it is so obviously mercenary and thoroughly worldly that it keeps its readers ignorant of the anti-secret discussion, and the Prohibition cause has to make headway in spite of it, and the lodges multiply under its shadow like the locusts of Kansas or those of the Apocalypse, and with like deadly effect. The only hope of deliverance is in such papers as that of Mr. H. L. Hastings, which has a wide circulation and the Contributor issued by Mr. Earle, 178 Washington street, the Public Good, and some others. These outside papers are slowly reaching the members of the Congregational churches, and ministers who are Masons or Odd-fellows are at a discount in churches whose pulpits are silent as sepulchres on the lodges which are devouring their young men by thousands, their money by millions and slowly disintegrating the churches themselves.

Meantime the Universalists have held a week's camp-meeting at "Queen City Park," Burlington, Vermont, and the worshippers of familiar spirits follow them with a meeting of twenty-eight days. Huge posters advertise reduced fare from the towns of Massachusetts to these popular gatherings where devils are worshipped instead of Christ, and Sunday railroad excursions whirl the giddy multitudes whose minds are confused by the lodge-worships to these moral maelstroms where science is become seance, and society is being regenerated over the broken law of God, and in contempt of the word and example of Christ. Even here in Northampton, since I was last here, the secret lodges have increased from one to eight, and the people pay their lodge dues by raising tobacco and selling rum.

THE GREAT WORCESTER CONVENTION.

There is a bright side. A Prohibition convention filled Mechanics' Hall in Worcester, built by the beloved Washburne and his associates, on the 8th inst. Eight hundred and forty-nine accredited delegates were present and the entire Worcester press published its proceedings fully, though opposed to the "Third Party." A more glorious convention I have seldom seen. The platform is substantially the American platform excepting the plank repealing the lodge charters. But though Mr. Clapp, the President of the convention, is said to be head of one class of secret temperance lodges, not one word of commendation or even mention of the Good Templars, Sons and what-nots was heard in speech or resolution except the stunted approval of the Knights of Labor for excluding liquor-sellers. But, on the contrary, in Worcester, where Pres. C. A. Blanchard and the Manning brothers had once turned the Masons out of the city offices; where Prof. E. D. Bailey has long labored and made our cause known throughout New England; the senior editor of the Cynosure gave a brief address to delegates assembled the previous evening, and next day two members of the convention nominated, and the convention voted to invite him to the platform as an honorary vice-president. The press and people of Worcester said no political convention had equalled this gathering for years. The enthusiasm was unbounded, and when the resolution was read favoring the ballot for women, it seemed as if the applause would not stop; and this great mass from all parts of Massachusetts were as harmonious as they were enthusiastic. There were two candidates for Governor, Lothrop of Taunton, and Blackmer of Springfield. A show of hands gave Mr. Lothrop the majority, and Dr. Blackmer came forward and moved that the nomination be made unanimous, and he himself was then nominated for lieutenant governor by acclamation.

A COUNTER CONVENTION.

The power of the Prohibition movement is seen in the call for a "Non-Partisan" temperance convention called to meet in the same hall on the 16th inst. A long array of important names are appended to this call and circulars are sent to Mr. David Manning and other prominent Prohibitionists inviting them to the platform of the convention. This is to head off the Prohibitionists and save the Republican party. But it will fail as similar attempts failed to check the rising anti-slavery movement.

One thing must be noted and guarded. Silence on the secret lodges is not sufficient. To be let alone is all that devils asked. The lodges thrived by it. But the people of the United States will not be deceived by the lodge's "possuming" a second time. We must insist on and have an open, fair understanding that no Mason or other man who is under special secret obligations to part of the American people shall be our candidates. We must root out false-worshippers and false-worships.

We leave to-day for New York. We have most encouraging letters for the Chicago anti-secret congress.

ANTI-SALOON REPUBLICANISM.

The national convention gathered in this city last week, through the effort of Mr. Albert Griffin of Kansas, was in some respects a remarkable meeting. It was not lacking in eloquence, nor enthusiasm, nor ability. It was composed of the best element of the Republican party, and in a degree represented the men of conviction and courage who formed that party thirty or forty years ago. Senator Blair of New Hampshire was temporary, and ex-Senator Windom of Minnesota permanent chairman. Part of his address was good enough for any Prohibition meeting, and some of the speeches which followed were wholly.

The speeches by ex-President Chapin of Beloit College, Hon. Hiram Price of Iowa, Hon. Elijah A. Morse of Massachusetts, Gen. Thos. M. Conway of New York, Rev. Mr. Ball of Buffalo, Dr. Hatfield of Chicago, N. L. Prentiss of the Atchison Champion, Kansas, and others, covered all the ground from license to prohibition. Dr. Chapin, wringing his hands apologetically, said, "Call it license if you please. I do not call it license; I call it restriction." Some applauded this definition which the experience of years in every part of the country has proved false. The only restriction to the traffic has been prohibition entirely, or for certain classes as minors and habitual drinkers. Senator Blair would take low license if he could do no better, and he will find that is all he can get until he changes his platform. Col. James of this city made the speech of the convention when he said Chicago was the picket line. The speeches from Kansas and Maine and Iowa are all very fine, and everything is rosy, but here in Chicago we can give you some hard facts, something practical to consider. Here we have some 4,000 saloon-keepers, and all of them politicians." He told how the Republican party was in their control, and temperance men who demanded recognition of their principles in the platforms and nominations were elbowed aside, snubbed and called a lot of cranks. "I want," he said, "to present this question to you from an Illinois standpoint. We have two rum-sellers on our Republican ticket for county commissioners, an office of more importance to us here than that of President of the United States. One of these men keeps a low basement doggerly. Shall we support them?" "No! no!" was the response. A voice asked about the Democratic candidates. "Not one of them is a saloon-keeper," he replied. "Then vote for them!" was the loud demand of the men of conviction in the convention. Such occasional outbursts which proved that men who put conscience before party were there, were warmly cheered by some score of Prohibitionists in the galleries.

Nevertheless the resolutions show that it was not the purpose of the convention to ask too much, when Blaine has just spoken from his throne of power in the party. The radical men protested against the license resolution but were outvoted. They saw clearly that with the standard set so low they could not raise the party above its present level. Nevertheless, though accomplishing little in comparison to its opportunity, the convention will have some effect upon candid men in the party, and so help on the Prohibition cause. The resolutions read thus:

1. That the liquor traffic as it exists to-day in the United States is the enemy of society, a fruitful source of corruption in politics, the alley of anarchy, a school of crime, and with its avowed purpose of seeking to corruptly control elections and legislation, is a menace to the public welfare and deserve the condemnation of all good men.

2. That we declare war against the saloon and hold it to be the supreme duty of the government to adopt such measures as shall restrict it and control its influence, and at the earliest possible moment extinguish it altogether.

3. We believe the National government should absolutely prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors in the District of Columbia, and in all the Territories of the United States.

4. We believe that the best practical method of dealing with the liquor traffic in the several States is to let the people decide whether it shall be prohibited by the submission of constitutional amendments, and until such amendments are adopted by the passage of the local option law.

5. That inasmuch as the saloon business creates a special burden of taxation upon the people to support courts, jails, and almshouses, therefore a large annual tax should be levied upon the saloons so long as they continue to exist. And that they should be made responsible for all public and private injury resulting from the traffic.

6. That the Republican party wherever and whenever in power, should faithfully enforce whatever ordinances, statutes, or constitutional amendments may be enacted for the restriction or suppression of the liquor traffic.

7. That we approve the action of Congress and of those States that have done so, in providing for teaching the physiological effects of intoxicants in our public schools, and that we earnestly recommend to every State Legislature the enactment of such laws as shall provide for the thorough teaching of such effects to our children.

8. We demand that the Republican party, to which we belong, and whose welfare we cherish, shall take a firm and decided stand as the friend of the home and the enemy of the saloon, in favor of this policy and these measures. We pledge ourselves to do our utmost to cause the party to take such a stand. And we call upon all temperance men and friends of humanity—of whatever party or name—to join with us in securing these objects and in support of the Republican party, so far as it shall adopt them.

—General Agent Stoddard went to Princeton, Ill., Saturday evening to make all things ready for the convention on the 21st. A grand time is anticipated.

—Bro. Hinman had, at his last writing, engaged to preach in the United Presbyterian church, Knoxville, Tenn., last Sabbath and to lecture to the students of Knoxville College on Monday evening. He was kindly received by President McCullough of that institution, and also by Lewis Silliman, the leading Prohibitionist of the city, who is in sympathy with our work.

—The nominations of the American party in Iowa are as follows: Isaac T. Gibson, Henry county, Secretary of State; John Palmer, Washington county, Auditor of State; James Mickelwait, Mills county, State Treasurer; Jacob Rodgers, Fayette county, Attorney General; J. W. Wolf, Van Buren county, Reporter of the Supreme Court; For Congress, 1st District, George Heaton, Jefferson county.

—Mr. I. R. B. Arnold, so long and well known in our cause, has been engaged as State lecturer by the Executive Committee of the Illinois Association. Bro. Arnold has been lecturing for several years in connection with an exhibition of fine views with a calcium light. He has provided some new views to take the place of a valuable collection stolen, as he has reason to believe, by Freemasons some years ago, and gives two fine lectures on the religious philosophy of Freemasonry, connecting the lodge by a clear and interesting line of argument with the pagan systems of the world. Bro. Arnold is at Princeton this week.

—Prof. O. F. Lumry, who attended the national convention of labor organizations and Greenbackers, corrects the news item in the Cynosure of Sept. 9th respecting that meeting which was gathered from the daily press dispatches. The convention numbered 200 or over and was held in a hall and not the back room of a hotel. Will not Prof. Lumry give the Cynosure an account of the meeting?

—The Illinois Wesleyan conference met in Wheaton last week with Pres. Stratton's church, and closed Sabbath evening with an interesting ordination service in which two young brethren, Martin and Hurry, were set apart for the Gospel ministry. The consecration meeting which followed was a time of refreshing from the Lord. Rev. William Pinkney was president of the conference and Rev. J. N. Bedford secretary. The opening sermon was preached by Rev. E. I. Grinnell. Secretary Stoddard and H. L. Kellogg of the Cynosure were introduced to the Conference and made brief addresses. Thursday evening the body adjourned to the College Hall and listened to the interesting lecture of Bro. I. R. B. Arnold on ancient and modern Baal worship.

—Bro. O. S. Palmer, whose communications upon the subject of industrial and faith missions have been read with much interest in the Cynosure, was last week Tuesday ordained to the foreign mission work in the Plymouth Church of this city, of which he is a member. A council of thirty was called in which twenty-five churches were represented, and in the ordination services, Professors Wilcox and Scott of the Union Park Seminary, Revs. Arthur Little, Lloyd, McCord and Moore took part. Bro. Palmer expects to go to his work in India about the middle of October, and will settle at Akola about 450 miles inland from Bombay. He has already had several donations of tools and implements for use in the mission and to aid in instructing the natives in industrial arts, thus contributing to make the mission self-supporting.

PRESS COMMENT.

It is not good for Christians to be under bonds. The United Presbyterian quotes a minister as saying that in his neighborhood "nearly everybody belongs to some kind of society"—meaning a secret society, and usually an oathbound one—and then proceeds to say, "that may be true of a good many communities, and if it be, it is a sign of a social condition not agreeable to contemplation. Although he does not mean it, perhaps, yet in spite of himself the fact that he is committed to such an association leads a man to practice an insincerity that he ought to be ashamed of, and it affords him an opportunity to do certain things—often pledges him—that standing alone and independent he would shrink away from. If any man wish to preserve his manliness, let him remain unsworn to any such combination."—Evangelical Messenger.

Benevolence is of course the purely natural representative of the Christian virtue of charity, and, so far as it goes, is admirable. But it is a serious question if the directors of many of the so-called benevolent societies understand rightly what they mean by benevolence. They certainly seem to mistake selfishness for benevolence. For they are intensely utilitarian in all their methods; they do good to others in order that others may do good to them in return. That is the Positivist golden rule. They are to regard as brothers all who belong to their society, but all the rest are to be looked on coldly as "the profane;" as ever, the Masonic idea. Catholics, it is true, are not in much danger from these oathbound, secret imitations of Freemasonry, with professed benevolent intentions added to their ritualistic mummary. Yet it is an age of organization, and it is well to be on guard against abuses that may creep into the best-meant endeavors.—Catholic Review.

The Knights of Labor have lost ground in this vicinity because of the unreasonable course which they took at Brockton. Over forty shoe-factories in that city had been closed by a dispute with the Leather Union. The troubles had lasted for weeks, including the loss of hundreds of thousands of dollars in wages. At last they were adjusted, and the men went back, but had not been at work half a day when they were ordered out afresh by the Knights of Labor, apparently for no other reason than to "secure recognition." Every one was disgusted, the workmen most of all; and, although they obeyed the order, they sent in their withdrawal cards in such numbers that, to prevent a general stampede, the Knights reconsidered their action. This episode, coupled with the growing dissatisfaction among the Knights over the attempt to make war upon the trades-unions, has cost the organization something. The labor interests, however, in one form or another, promise to be a disturbing force this year in politics as well as in business.—Boston Letter to the Advance.

Mason lodges. Was that statement false or true? Of course he felt his bondage, and although I offered him $5 if he was not thus prepared to say so by an affidavit, he did not accept my offer. As I went on to show the people how he had been taught the "glorious morals" of which he boasted, he became very red in the face and left the house.

We ought to begin soon to plan for our State meeting. Where shall it be, friends? We had talked of holding it in the northern part of the State, perhaps at Mansfield. Friends at Greenfield assure me that we will be welcome there. I should be glad to hear from many on this subject.

We need more money to carry on the work. The field where I am now working is new. I cannot expect much aside from Cynosure subscriptions. This is a very needy field and can eventually be made a help to us financially as otherwise. The State Secretary, Rev. S. A. George, of Mansfield, has sent or will soon send pledges to those who have helped us in the past, and I trust he will not be disappointed in his expectation of a liberal response. If you think this is God's work and he has given you means, help us along.

UP AND DOWN IN WISCONSIN.

Among the Advent Brethren near Baraboo.—Pres. Stubb's Norwegian Book.—Open work in Temperance.—Fond du Lac, Waupun, Hortonville and the State Meeting.

OSHKOSH, Sept. 18, 1886.

DEAR FRIENDS:—Leaving Big Creek, Juneau Co., where I closed a nine days' revival meeting on Sept. 5, (my time, while so engaged, not being charged to the Wisconsin Association of course,) I went to Baraboo, Sept. 6, and filled an appointment for a lecture at the "Red School-house" near Baraboo, which appointment had been made by Bro. Albert Watkins. Dr. Cowles took me to the lecture, and I was gratified to see there, besides the doctor and Bro. Watkins and his father, Bro. W. Van Driessen and J. W. Wood, President of the Wisconsin Association. Such a backing was inspiring, though I confess that the presence of so many able and well-posted anti-secretists really disconcerted me somewhat at first. Pres. Wood called the meeting to order, explained our work, and introduced me as the speaker. The audience consisted largely of Adventists, who listened well, and, at the close, invited me to lecture again on the next evening, which I agreed to do. But with the next evening, Sept. 7, came a rain, which made the audience very small, and no collection was taken. However, I received financial help from Bro. J. W. Wood and W. Van Driessen, and was comforted by the kindness of other friends.

Sept. 8th I started for Portage, by way of Madison. Had to wait at Madison over night to see Pres. (formerly Prof.) Stubb of the Norwegian Lutheran Theological Seminary. He gave much attention, while in Europe, to the study of secret societies, and especially to the character of those Masonic lodges which, in the old world, claim to be Christian; and he has published a book in Norwegian, showing the anti-Christian character of these and other forms of Freemasonry, and also of Odd-fellowship and the order of Druids. He received me cordially, and has promised me the opportunity of speaking to his students.

While in Madison I called on Mrs. Eaton, State Secretary of the W. C. T. U., and on Mrs. Olin, wife of John M. Olin, Prohibition candidate for Governor. Mrs. Olin assured me that she had no liking for the secrecy feature of the temperance lodges.

On the 9th I went to Portage, and called on Mrs. Dr. Hurlbut, Eld. L. Whitney, and others. Was kindly received. Father W. and family gave me a home with them. There seems but little opportunity for our work in Portage. Sept. 10th I visited Rio (Springvale) friends; was very kindly treated, some money was given me for State work and more pledged, and I left with the hope of returning after the State meeting.

Sept. 11th I went to Fond du Lac, calling on Pastor J. H. Brockman, of Watertown, on the way. Lord's day, 12th, I preached a. m. and evening, to the Wesleyan congregation at Fond du Lac, with good liberty. Father Durand and Bro. E. D. Warner entertained me very kindly. Next day I called on Bro. Bunker of the Byron Wesleyan church, and from there went to Bro. D. S. Dean's, near Waupun, on the 14th. Bro. Dean took me on that day and the forenoon of the next to see friends in and near Waupun. A meeting of a few such was held at the house of Bro. Ellis Whiting on the morning of the 15th, to consider the advisability of holding our next State meeting at Waupun. Bro. Howland, Young and Dean gave to the funds of the Association. On the evening of the 15th I addressed the opening meeting of the Blue Ribbon Club of Fond du Lac, in response to previous invitation, and was very courteously treated. Sept. 16th I went to the Free Methodist, Wis., Annual Conference at Oshkosh, where I was very kindly received, and where I preached on the 17th. To-day, the 18th, I go D. V., to Hortonville, Outagamie Co., where I am to work a week. My programme is as follows:

Sept. 18-24, Hortonville and vicinity.
Sept. 26, Waupun and Byron or Oakfield.
Sept. 27-29, Martin, Green Co., and vicinity.
Sept. 30-Oct. 1, U. B. Annual Conf., Fennimore, Grant Co.

Oct. 2-4, Fond du Lac.

From this time I expect to work mostly in the country around Waupun, where it is hoped that the State meeting will be held Oct. 19-21, taking time to attend the Wesleyan Annual Conference, which begins in Oshkosh, Oct. 13.

Let us pray and work for the State meeting, and make all sacrifices necessary to attend it, if it can be right to do so. Much depends on its being a strong and successful convention.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

—The Fall term opened very hopefully at Wheaton on the 7th with a better attendance than for years. Prof. Lowe and Misses Hulbert and Blount have taken their places in the faculty and are winning "golden opinions from all sorts of people."

—The school year at Wasioja Seminary opened September 1st, and the thirty-eight weeks of school year will close June 8, 1887. Prof. Paine has an excellent corps of assistants.

—Some 100 new students were entered this year on the roll of Monmouth College through the efforts of Dr. McMichael and Rev. J. A. Henderson. Three new members of the faculty, Profs. Graham and McMillan and Miss Calvin are making a very favorable impression.

—Many readers of religious newspapers have admired the poems of "Marianne Farningham." Her real name is Miss Hearn; she is a member of the College Street Baptist church, Northampton, England, and was lately elected, with the highest number of votes, as one of the public school board of that large town.

—The doctors have an instrument called a pletysmograph, which measures the expenditure of mental force in thinking. Putting one's arm on it, it will record the depletion of blood which goes to the brain when it is actively exercised. It will tell which a man reads the easier, Latin or Greek. We don't remember that we have seen any account of its being adopted as a piece of school furniture to settle whether a boy is really studying or only shamming.—Independent.

—An Anti-Atheistical Society has been organized among the young men of the French Universities, founded on the broadest basis, so as to include Catholics and Protestants, and intended to withstand such influences as that which a few weeks ago gave a grand celebration to the memory of Diderot, who was lauded chiefly because he denied the existence of God.

—The whole number of teachers in the public schools of the States and Territories is 307,804. Of these, 198,000 or nearly two-thirds are women. In the schools classed as secondary, ranking as academies, there are 3,312 male and 4,011 female teachers. In the 286 female colleges there are 617 male and 1,963 female teachers. The special aptitude of women for teaching is urged as a strong argument in favor of higher education for them.—Union Signal.

The Library of the University of Parma, says the Illustrated London News, is well known to be one of the largest and richest in the world, especially in rare and antique books. No less than 80,000 volumes are catalogued, and on the strength of this catalogue an English avant arrived one day in last June in order to consult a manuscript which could not be seen elsewhere. It was nowhere to be found, and the librarian, confident that only some one connected with the place could have removed it, had every member of his staff placed under police surveillance. In the course of a very few hours, the secretary, a certain Cavaliere Passin, was seen walking away with a good sized parcel under his arm and was at once arrested. The packet consisted of books, and in his pockets there were duplicate keys to all the book cases. Five thousand volumes are said to be missing, and several hundreds have been found at Passin's lodgings. The rest he has probably sold at high prices on account of their rarity and intrinsic value.

THE HOME.

IN THE LONG RUN.

In the long run, fame finds deserving man;

The lucky might may prosper for a day,
But in good time true merit leads the van,
And vain pretense unnoticed, goes its way.
There is no chance, no destiny, no fate,
But fortune smiles on those who work and wait,
In the long run.

In the long run all goodly sorrow pays;

There is no better thing than righteous pain,
The sleepless nights, the awful, thorn-crowned days,
Bring sure reward to tortured soul and brain.
Unmeaning joys enervate in the end,
But sorrow yields a glorious dividend,
In the long run.

In the long run all hidden things are known;

The eye of truth will penetrate the night,
And good or ill, thy secret shall be known,
However well 'tis guarded from the light.
All the unspoken motives of the breast
Are fathomed by the years and stand confessed,
In the long run.

In the long run all love is paid by love;

Though undervalued by the hearts of earth,
The great eternal government above
Keeps strict account and will demand its worth.
Give thy love freely, do not count the cost,
So beautiful a thing was never lost,
In the long run.

A NIGHT ON SINAI.

I lay with my head on a stone till sunrise, bitterly cold, I confess, but thinking much of Jacob at Bethel and Elijah's fast near this same spot. The brief, majestic narrative of Sinai takes complete possession of one here. I think that Calvary itself could not bring one so near God. "The mount" which "burned with fire" might have trembled at the divine presence but yesterday; it is also unchanged, so silent, so indescribably sublime. In the still starry nights there are strange noises, rumblings and rushings as of distant avalanches or earthquakes, which the Bedaween say are sounds made by the imprisoned and tormented spirits of Korah, Dathan and Abiram, but which are possibly avalanches of sand or the descent of masses of rock, gradually detached by the action of frost. These nocturnal sounds do not detract from the solemnity of the surroundings. Oh, how infinitely it exceeds all my dreams and anticipations! It stands alone; I cannot compare it with anything; it does not remind me of anything. "This is Mount Sinai in Arabia," is all one can say: and as I think of the awfulness of the giving of the law, in the still night the sound of the cymbals of the convent, changed by the echoes of the desert valley into the sweetest of unearthly music, as it floats up to my tent in this Easter week, speaks at the foot of Sinai of Him who came not to destroy but to fulfill the law, Himself "the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth." Somehow the exquisite sweetness of those chimes had made me revert to my old belief that the monks who dwell under the shadow of Sinai must be holy men who were cultivating an exalted piety in their sublime solitude, but I was soon disenchanted.—Isabella Bird Bishop.

THE RIVER RHONE.

For all other rivers there is a surface, and an underneath, and a vaguely displeasing idea of the bottom. But the Rhone flows like one lambent jewel; its surface is nowhere, its ethereal self is everywhere, the iridescent rush and translucent strength of it, blue to the shore and radiant to the depth. Fifteen feet thick, of not flowing, but flying water; not water either—melted glacier, rather one should call it; the force of the ice is with it, and the wreathing of the clouds, the gladness of the sky and the continuance of time.

Waves of clear sea are indeed lovely to watch, but they are always coming or gone, never in any taken shape to be seen for a second. But here was one mighty wave that was always itself, and every fluted swirl of it, constant as the wreathing of a shell. No wasting away of the fallen foam, no pause for gathering of power, no helpless ebb of discouraged recoil; but alike through bright day and lulling night, the never-pausing plunge, and never-fading flash, and never-hushing whisper; and while the sun was up, the ever-answering glow of unearthly aquamarine, ultramarine, violet blue, gentian blue, peacock blue, river-of-paradise blue, glass of a painted window melted in the sun, and the witch of the Alps flinging the spun tresses of it forever from her snow.

The innocent way, too, in which the river used to stop to look into every little corner. Great torrents always seem angry, and great rivers too often sullen; but there is no anger, no disdain in the Rhone. It seemed as if the mountain stream was in mere bliss at recovering itself again out of the lake sleep, and raced because it rejoiced in racing, fain yet to return and stay. There were pieces of wave that danced all day as if Perdita were looking on to learn; there were little streams that skipped like lambs and leaped like chamois; there were pools that shook the sunshine all through them, and were rippled in layers of overlaid ripples like crystal sand; there were currents that twisted the light into golden braids, and inlaid the thread with turquoise enamel; there were strips of stream that certainly above the lake had been mill-streams, and were looking busily for mills to turn again; there were shoots of stream that had once shot fearfully into the air, and now sprang up again laughing that they had only fallen a foot or two; and in the midst of all the gay glittering and eddied lingering, the noble bearing by of the midmost depth, so mighty, yet so terrorless and harmless, with its swallows skimming instead of petrels, and the dear old decrepit town as safe in the embracing sweep of it as if it were set in a brooch of sapphire.—*John Ruskin in Præterita.*

EFFECTS OF IMAGINATION.

At a large hotel in Suffolk the not uncommon dilemma arose of there being only one room in the house vacant when two visitors required accommodation for the night. It was a double-bedded chamber, or was soon converted into such, and the two guests—who were both commercial travelers—agreed to share it. One of the gentlemen was a confirmed hypochondriac, and greatly alarmed his companion by waking him up in the middle of the night, gasping for breath. "Asthma," he panted out; "I am subject to these spasmodic attacks. Open the window quickly; give me air!" Terrified beyond measure, the other jumped out of bed. But the room was pitch dark; he had no matches, and he had forgotten the position of the window. "For heaven's sake be quick!" gasped the invalid. "Give me more air, or I shall choke!" At length, by dint of groping wildly, and upsetting half the furniture in the apartment, the window was found; but it was an old fashioned casement, and no hasp or catch was to be discovered. "Quick, quick; air, air!" implored the apparently dying man. "Open it, break it, or I shall be suffocated!" Thus adjured, his friend lost no more time, but seizing a boot, smashed every pane; and the sufferer immediately experienced great relief. "Oh, thank you; a thousand thanks. Ha!" he exclaimed, drawing deep sighs, which testified to the great comfort he derived. "I think in an another moment I should have been dead!" And when he had sufficiently recovered, and expressed his heartfelt gratitude, he described the intense distress of these attacks, and the length of time he had suffered from them. After a while both fell asleep again devoutly thankful for the result. It was a warm summer night, and they felt no inconvenience from the broken window; but when daylight relieved the pitchy darkness of the night, the window was found to be still entire! Had invisible glaziers been at work already, or was the episode of the past night only a dream? No; for the floor was still strewn with the broken glass. Then, as they looked round the room in amazement, the solution of the mystery presented itself in the shape of an antiquated book case, whose latticed glass doors were a shattered wreck. The spasmodically attacked one was cured from that moment. So much for imagination.—Chamber's Journal.

Love to Christ smooths the path of duty, and wings the feet to travel it; it is the bow which impels the arrow of obedience; it is the mainspring moving the wheels of duty; it is the strong arm tugging the oar of diligence. Love is the marrow of the bones of fidelity, the blood in the veins of piety, the sinews of spiritual strength; yes, the life of sincere devotion. He that hath love can no more be motionless than the aspen in the gale, the sear leaf in the hurricane, or the spray in the tempest. As well may hearts cease to beat as love to labor. Love is instinct with activity, it cannot be idle; it is full of energy, it cannot content itself with littles; it is the well-spring of heroism, and great deeds are the gushings of its fountain; it is a giant; it heapeeth mountains upon mountains and thinketh the pile but little; it is a mighty mystery for it changes bitter into sweet; it calls death life, and life death; and it makes pain less painful than enjoyment.—Spurgeon.

THE J. J. J.

[The following droll story, written by Prof. Rossiter Johnson some time ago for the Christian Union, is, like most parables, not intended to teach universal truth. So the boys and girls who read the Cynosure may learn the folly of secret societies from the story of the J. J. J.'s, but must not expect to see them all snuffed out in the same manner.—Ed.]

A new scholar who made his appearance at our school one morning attracted considerable attention. He had a high forehead, large eyes, and a wonderfully expressive, mobile mouth. When he had become generally acquainted and familiar, we found that he could almost transform himself into another, or into several persons successively, by simply changing his mouth. We found, too, that he was a wonderful story-teller and joker; and he was so original in all his ways, so entertaining in his talk, so full of suggestions, plans, and expedients for enjoyment, that he soon became a general favorite and had a host of followers. His name was Eliphalet Meech.

Of course all this excited more or less envy and jealousy on the part of certain other boys who had been acknowledged leaders, and who saw their standards gradually deserted.

But the new hero was so thoroughly good-natured, and produced so much amusement which all could enjoy, and which none of us could help enjoying, that the most jealous of them could scarcely hold a continuous feeling of resentment or refuse to join in the general admiration. Their wisest course was obviously to bow to fate, acknowledge his superiority, and become his lieutenants, rather than maintain their independence and lose their followers. This all of them eventually did; all save one.

"Monkey" Roe was a thoroughly good fellow; but he was fond of power and popularity, and would not readily surrender what he considered rightfully his own, what he had fairly earned and long enjoyed. He never recognized the leadership of Meech, and never would.

Among Meech's other doings was the organization of a secret society. It was a crude affair at first, but it gained such immediate fame that he developed and elaborated the plan till a regular rite of juvenile Masonry was established among the boys, and no torture, bribe, or ingenuity of questioning could have extracted one of its secrets from any of them.

The woodshed belonging to the school house was a large, light structure, made by setting posts into the ground to the depth of a few inches, and nailing boards to them. It had no window, but sufficient light came through the cracks. There were large double doors, which were opened only in autumn when the winter supply of wood was put in, and were then fastened with a heavy hasp and padlock. In the side toward the school house was a small door.

It was late in spring when the J. J. J. (for such, to outsiders, was the mysterious designation of the society) came into existence, and its meetings were held in the shed, then nearly empty.

Meech was on the best of terms with his school-fellows; but of course he could not admit all of them to membership in the order, for a secret shared with everybody would be no secret at all. When anyone applied for admission, he always said he would refer it to the Grand Council, and professed to have very little voice in the matter; but it was known that he was the chief officer, and it was pretty certain that no one would be either admitted or excluded without his sanction.

The meetings were held frequently, during intermission or recess; and great was the curiosity to find out what was going on within the shed, or "lodge," as the initiated called it. There was always noise enough, and apparently fun enough, judging from the shouts of laughter. But though the shed was full of cracks, the meetings were always so well attended that, to one peeping through, little or nothing was ever visible except the backs of the crowd who stood around the sides of the lodge-room, while Meech and the Grand Council carried on the mysterious proceedings in a ring in the center.

The initiation of new members seemed to be the favorite rite; and there was abundance of talk, outside as well as inside, of "riding the goat." The goat, which we had good reason for suspecting was in the form of a long, round, smooth stick of wood seemed to be a very fructuous animal indeed. I believe he never failed to bunt his head violently against the side of the lodge when a candidate for membership was sitting astride of him. It was understood that the candidate must succeed in riding him without falling off before he could be admitted to full membership. But if you fell the first time you could have another trial—in fact, as many trials as you pleased; and the riding was so fascinating that no one was ever known to give it up and retire defeated, though there were some perpetual apprentices.

The first password, "lignumvite" (supposed to be a very hard word), leaked out somehow, and at the next meeting a dense crowd of outsiders jammed themselves against the door in one compact mass, all yelling "Lignumvite!" and demanding admittance.

Meech opened the door and blandly invited them to walk in; then he quietly walked out and went away, followed by the Grand Council and all the J. J. J.s. He soon changed the password and established a discipline which prevented any more revelations.

Monkey Roe had never joined, and it was now becoming pretty serious for him. The school-room was lonesome, and the play-ground doubly so. He started an Anti-Secret Society, proclaiming that he was opposed to the principle of secrecy, and reading to the boys copious extracts from three or four old Anti-masonic tracts which he had found in some dusty garret. But he found it necessary to establish a certain amount of secrecy in order to maintain his own organization, which thereby became virtually a secret society. But the fatal difficulty was that all the most desirable boys had been taken into the J. J. J., and there was no good material for the formation of any rival society. The Anti-Secret league was a fore-doomed failure, and its founder became the most melancholy "monkey" I ever saw. But he was still able to "hoe his row," as the sequel proved.

One day I saw that a change had come over him. He had brightened up wonderfully, and I knew something was in the wind. I saw him once in earnest consultation with Johnny Garnett. Johnny was a quiet boy, who only came to school a part of the time, staying away the other part to drive a team for his father.

I knew that an important meeting of the J. J. J. was to be held on the next Thursday evening. Thursday noon Roe took me aside and said:

"If you go and sit on Simpson's fence at eight o'clock to-night, and sit there a while, perhaps you'll see something worth going to—especially if you don't tell anybody."

I thought it was possible there might also be a little something worth seeing before that hour, so I was on the fence at half past seven. Simpson lived directly opposite the school-house, and my seat commanded a full view of the lodge.

I had not been there very long when I saw a boy, who looked very much like Roe, on the roof of the lodge, fixing an iron hook under the edge of it on the side toward me. He soon disappeared, and then I saw a commotion in a large locust tree that stood in the girls' playground, beyond the lodge. I walked around the school-house, and saw a pulley fixed to a limb of this tree, and a rope extending from the lodge to the pulley and thence to the ground. Roe had just completed a measurement, and was tying a knot in the rope at a point between the lodge and the tree.

Behind a clump of bushes I saw Johnny Garnett with his father's team, the horses wearing their harness but no wagon being in sight.

I walked back, and resumed my seat on the fence. It grew dark rapidly, and pretty soon Fred Barnard came and sat on the fence beside me, and then Johnny Baker, and then others, till there were more than the fence could hold. I found that Roe had told each of them just what he had told me.

And now it was evident that boys were arriving at the lodge and passing inside of it, some of them carrying heavy baskets. There was a glimmer of a candle through the cracks, and then another and another, till it was brilliantly illuminated. In the course of an hour it became as full as a hive, and sounds of revelry were heard, laughter and the clinking of dishes.

Suddenly one of the fire-companies, popularly known as the Red Rover Three, came whirling up the street.

"Where's the fire?" demanded the fireman excitedly.

"There," said Roe, who seemed to have accompanied him, and pointed at the shed, where the bright light was streaming from every crevice.

The box of the engine was full of water, and while the firemen were adjusting the hose, which occupied not more than half a minute, I saw that Roe stepped up to the small door of the shed and noiselessly hooked it on the outside.

The instant the water burst from the nozzle in a stream directed toward the shed, Roe gave a shrill whistle, and then we heard the crack of a whip and the rattle of harness in the girls' play-ground. The shed, with a creak and a groan, rose into the air like the lid of a trunk, pivoting on the edge farthest from us.

For one instant, hardly a second it seemed, the flaring lights, the banquet table, and the revelers around it, were plainly visible. The next instant all the lights were put out, and everything completely drenched down, by the flood of water.

Then we heard another whistle, somebody in the girl's play-ground said "Back, Dobbin!" and the shed descended quickly to its former position on the ground.

Yells and exclamations of every conceivable kind were heard inside, and there seemed to be a general rush for the door. But it was securely fastened. While they were throwing themselves against it, and the goat was heard trying to bunt off a board from the side of the lodge, the shadowy forms of a score of boys who seemed to come from nowhere, joined by a dozen who jumped down from the fence, ran up to the scene of the trouble. As they arrived in front of the lodge which had now become a prison-house, a voice that could not be wholly disguised by the trumpet it spoke through, cried:

"Three cheers for the Jolly Jig Jangls!"

The cheers were given with a will, so that for the moment they drowned the tumult inside. Then, as the board which the goat had been bunting at burst off, these mysterious personages vanished as quickly and silently as they had appeared. The one who carried the trumpet leaped over the fence into the girl's play-ground, and then the team trotted away, carrying two riders.

The firemen were bursting with laughter, and as Meech and Fred Vance came first through the hole in the side of the lodge, the foreman held his lantern up to their faces and gravely inquired if they had any insurance.

I never knew whether the foreman really thought the shed was on fire, when he first saw it, or whether he was half in the secret.

Next morning Monkey Roe was heard humming a new song, about "Three Blue Jays that got caught in a shower." Other boys soon learned it, and in a few days half the school were singing it, some knowingly, and some ignorantly. The J. J. J.'s did indeed look blue enough, and every now and then an Anti-Secret boy would approach one of them, brush down his sleeve softly, and say:

"That looks like a new coat. Have you wet it yet?"

It was more than such an organization could stand. I believe the society never held another meeting; at all events, it soon went to pieces. The Roe dynasty was re-established, the majesty of legitimate monarchy being thus vindicated, and thenceforth Eliphalet Meech reigned over a divided kingdom.

TEMPERANCE.

DISASTROUS EFFECTS OF PROHIBITION IN ATLANTA.

Prohibition took effect in the city of Atlanta, July 1. Just listen to the visible effects it has had on the business interests of the city. The present Mayor of the city writes us: "All kinds of business are, I think, better than they were a year ago, except the whisky business." Mr. W. H. Haygood, a leading real estate agent, says: "During the past few months there have been more houses sold on the installment plan than ever before during the same time." Col. John D. Grant and Mr. Chas. E. Brayton, two of the wealthiest men in the city, are mourning over the fact that where last year their houses stood empty, they are now filled with tenants. "Plasterers and paper hangers report more business in fixing-up small houses than ever before." The Chess-Carley Co., wholesale dealers in oils, and the merchants and dealers in provisions invariably answer that their sales are improving, writes Col. G. W. Adair. One stricken groceryman adds: "My business has increased 100 per cent in the last year;" while the large dry goods firm of Draper, Moore & Co., writes: "More improvements, both in the number and amount, are in progress and preparation in Atlanta right now than in Savannah, Augusta, Macon, Columbus and Rome—the five largest cities in Georgia." This is awful—for the whisky men.—Ex.

RUM IN POLITICS.

What have the seven thousand saloons of New York City done for her? They have fastened upon her citizens the most shamefully corrupt government ever endured by a community indulging in the illusion that it was free; they have almost made it impossible for an honest, educated man to touch local politics, much less take office; they have degraded the conduct of public affairs to their own low level; they have brutalized every institution they have had to do with; they have perverted and spoiled the democratic system, making a hissing and a reproach of American citizenship and the suffrage, establishing political shambles, pandering to the worst vices of the worst classes, defiling every thing decent and pure with their ribald scoffing, and producing at intervals, as proof of their quality, tendencies and power, such abominable scandals as that of the Tweed Ring, or the more recent sale of votes in the Board of Aldermen. But evil as are the results of the combination between the saloon and the politicians, it is not just to hold the latter responsible for all the mischief they cause. In truth, they are the result of conditions which could not produce anything better, and it is unreasonable to blame the product while refusing to interfere with the generating agencies. The saloon is an arrangement for the maintenance and propagation of the worst vice with which humanity is afflicted; a vice which destroys every elevating influence, kills shame, manhood, ambition, family affection, honor, all that makes life worth living; a vice which fosters brutality, self-indulgence, and all the train of ignoble and degrading passions and inclinations. Now, the purpose and intent of the saloon being what it is, the developments noted are simply what ought to have been expected when so large a share in the government of the country was permitted to be seized by this sinister agency. The American system of government is theoretically sound. The means of education are accessible to all. But when our children have passed through the public schools and enter into active life, if they wish to take part in public affairs they must descend to the saloon for instruction in politics, and in the same institution the foreign immigrants must graduate before they can exercise the right of citizenship. These are our political schools, in fact, and they give the tone to our politics, city, State and National. The candidate for office finds it indispensable to "make himself solid with" the rum power. He must buy the favor of the saloon-keepers. He must frequent these places and flatter the vanity of those who gather there. Through them he must obtain the votes of the idle, the vicious, the criminal classes. He must become familiar with all the ward "strikers" and loafers. He must be represented at the caucuses which are always held where drink abounds. He must defer to the views of men of the lowest intelligence. He must subscribe to platforms drawn up by demagogues and time-servers. Is it any wonder that self-respecting men so often shrink from these ordeals, and prefer the obscurity of private life to a political career demanding such sacrifice and such debasement? The foreigner who lands in this country obtains the first ideas of its governmental system from the saloon. There he is introduced to the lowest intrigues of factional conflicts. There he is taught that the chief end and aim of politics is to make as much as possible for the "workers." There he is enlisted into one or the other of the great organizations which have reduced party politics to periodical battles for plunder, to contests for the opportunity to misgovern. There he learns that honor and principle are simply "molasses to catch flies," as a notorious politician once expressed it. There he is made to understand that he is not expected to think for himself, but that he must obey implicitly the party mandates, reverence the saloon-keepers of his ward, submit himself humbly to his "boss," and on election day be thankful that he can sell his vote for a couple of dollars or a debauch on bad whisky. This is no fanciful picture. There is not a considerable city in the United States in which purchased votes are not cast by the thousand at every important election, and these votes are almost invariably bought and paid for in and through the saloon.—George Frederic Parsons, in Atlantic Monthly.

Governor Larabee has offered $5,000 reward for the arrest and conviction of the murderer of the Rev. George C. Haddock. His temperance friends are raising a fund for the support of his family.

Writs of injunction against thirty-nine saloon keepers of Sioux City, Iowa, have been granted by Judge Lewis. Original notices were also being prepared and would be served on all interested property owners as soon as possible.

At the recent Republican convention of the eighth senatorial district of Illinois, twenty-two white ribbon women attended the convention, and presented a protest against the nomination of any man for representative who was known to be disloyal to temperance, and whose character was at all questionable, and requesting them to nominate men loyal to temperance. A strong temperance resolution was passed, after spirited debate, and Mr. Partridge and Mr. Fuller were nominated for representatives, both making remarks which gave no uncertain sound on the temperance question. The gentlemen thanked the ladies for their attendance.

—Rev. Dr. J. L. Withrow, of Boston, has declined the call of the Third Presbyterian church of Chicago. Dr. Withrow remains to combat the growth of what he deems an unorthodox and dangerous doctrine among a strong minority of New England Congregationalists, known as the doctrine of post mortem probation.

—The Detroit Methodist Episcopal Conference closed its session at Adrian, Mich., Tuesday last. The members placed themselves on record as opposed to all liquor laws that did not suppress the saloons.

—The Swedish Mission Association of the United States closed its sessions at Rockford, Ill., Wednesday, electing the Rev. C. A. Bjork, of Chicago, President. The Rev. C. M. Youngquist, of Chicago, was chosen treasurer.

—Self-support by converts is a duty not at once perceived. Dr. Gordon mentions that in India the missionaries were perplexed by the disposition of the native Christians to depend on the mission for employment and sustenance. In the paper which represents the Cremorne work in New York City it is definitely stated that the mission cannot be held responsible for the temporal wants of such as are brought to Christ in it, showing that the Hindu and the American heart is the same.

—The United Presbyterian Theological Seminaries of Allegheny and Xenia are reported as opening this fall with an unusually large number of new students.

—The General Conference of the Free Methodist church will convene at Coopersville, Michigan, on Wednesday, Oct. 13, 1886, at 2 o'clock p. m. Arrangements are being made for reduced fare to and from Chicago.

—Of the eighteen or twenty members of the Chinese Y. M. C. A. connected with the Chinese mission of the Third Presbyterian church, Chicago, nine are already engaged in studies preparatory to missionary work among their countrymen, and more are to follow.

—Rev. T. S. LaDue, of Oregon, one of the ablest preachers and most faithful men in the Free Methodist church, is said to be consumptive and probably near the end of his ministerial labors. He is with friends in Minnesota on his way to the General Conference of his church in Michigan.

—The will of the late Pierpont B. Foster of New Haven bequeaths $5,000 apiece to the General Hospital Society of Connecticut, the Young Men's Christian Association, the Young Women's Christian Association, New Haven Orphan Asylum, the Home of the Friendless at New Haven, the United Workers, and the New Haven Gospel Union.

—Twelve United Presbyterian missionaries for the foreign field sailed for their destination on Wednesday, the 15th inst., from Philadelphia. The number sent out upon this occasion was greater than were ever sent at any one time. They are Dr. J. S. Barr and wife, J. R. Alexander and wife, and Misses McCahan and Strang returning to the field, and Misses Corbet, Given, Brown, White, M. D., Wilson and Strang, new missionaries. A reception was given them by the ladies' Missionary Society of Philadelphia, on Tuesday afternoon, and by the Second U. P. Congregation, Dr. Dales, pastor, in the evening.

—The ministers of Allegheny City, Pa., held a special meeting Friday night and adopted measures to prevent the glove fight between Sullivan and Hearld, which has been authorized by the Mayor of Pittsburg. As a last resort they will go into court and petition that the men be enjoined from fighting.

—Pastor Seguin, of the Van Buren street mission in this city, is so encouraged in his work that he has arranged, in connection with Benjamin Bowbeer, of the "Gospel Army," to open a mission on South Clark street with the hope to extend the work to several other localities. The Gospel army headquarters in this country are in Toronto, and Rev. Mr. Baxter of the Christian Witness, London, is its head. At these missions the brethren mean to be faithful against every form of evil, the lodge included, and all Christians wish them the good success due to their efforts.

—When the Rev. Geo. Brown went in New Britain, five years ago, to found a Wesleyan Mission in that unknown land, he went to a race of savages, who attacked and killed some of his South Sea teachers, and warred against one another. Recently, on Mr. Brown's leaving the island 500 of the natives gathered to show their esteem for him and to load him with presents. There are some 30 converts, and tribes which formerly were deadly foes now live in peace. Mr. Brown has explored some 300 miles of the coast and has crossed New Ireland twice.

—The Baptist church has received the following bequests from a banker in Detroit, Lorenzo B. Austin: American Baptist Missionary Union, $5,000; Baptist Theological School at Onzole, India, $1,500; American Baptist Home Missionary Society, $3,000; American and Foreign Bible Society, $1,000; to be used in distributing Bibles in the Southern States, etc., $500; Denison University, Granville, Ohio, $2,000; and to the Baptist churches which he formerly attended in Akron and Middleburg, Ohio, $4,000.

—The receipts of the American Board for the year now closed are, from donations, $384,247, as against $387,013 the preceding year; from legacies, $107,190, as against $121,478, being a total of $491,438 this year, $508,491 last year. It will be seen that of this $17,000 falling off, $14,000 is in the legacies, always an uncertain quantity. There is to be placed against the remaining $3,000, the fact that the donations of last year were swelled at the last moment by an extraordinary gift from Dr. Cheever of $19,000. From all which it appears the regular gifts from the churches are an increase on those of the preceding year.

—D. L. Moody spent September 5 in Keene, where five special services were held, one on Saturday evening and four on Sunday. City Hall was opened and was filled to overflowing. Prof. and Mrs. Towner conducted the singing. At the close of the afternoon service thirty-three persons expressed a desire to become Christians, and nearly half that number gave a similar expression in the evening.

—The Chinese Record tells us of a whole town in China adopting Christianity. In the suburbs was a missionary chapel in charge of a native helper. Last summer the people became angry with all foreigners on account of the trouble between France and China, but the native preacher kept on his work earnestly and faithfully. In midsummer cholera came, and death followed death in quick succession. The terror-stricken people fled to their gods; but the one Christian teacher besought them to come to the true God, who could hear their prayers and save them. They listened to him in their despair, and united with him in asking God to stay the plague, and the plague was stayed that day. The people held a conference, and as a town they decided to accept the new religion and worship the God who heard their prayers.

—At the recent international Congress of the Salvation Army, held in London, it was stated that there are 1,552 corps and 3,602 officers. Twenty-eight thousand, two hundred weekly, and 1,466,400 yearly services are held. The newspaper of the army is printed in nineteen different languages, and the Salvation banner waves in nineteen different countries and colonies.

—A great grandson of William Carey, the pioneer Indian missionary, son of J. S. Carey, Esq., of Tiverton, England, has been appointed by the English Baptist Missionary Society to the charge of the mission station at Howrah, near Calcutta. He is the third William Carey, now living, who has devoted himself to Indian missions. "Instead of the fathers shall be the children."

—The Japanese have so high an appreciation of Christian morals that when they secure foreign teachers for their high schools they try to get Christian teachers.

—The latest reports from the Korean Mission of the Scottish United Presbyterian church, on the border of Northern Corea, state that a hundred men and boys have been baptized, and the work is rapidly spreading.

—The Independent Presbyterian church of Savannah, Ga., has been independent from the start. It received a grant of land from George II. in 1756, and now owns a magnificent church property in the center of the city, consisting of a church building of granite erected in 1817, and costing $100,000; a parsonage, costing $17,500; and a lecture-room, which cost about $35,000, and is the architectural gem of the city. It owns, in addition, endowment property valued at $70,000.

MICHIGAN STATE HOLINESS CONVENTION.

The annual meeting of the Michigan State Holiness Association was held at Dutton, Mich., a little village about ten miles from Grand Rapids, lasting from the 14th to the 17th of September. The meeting was conducted by brethren S. B. Shaw, Samuel Shirk, and T. H. Goodrich and sister L. A. Mains. The meetings were much blessed of God. The Spirit of the Master was manifested all through the convention. A number were sanctified and one or two saved. Deep conviction is fastened on the people, and we pray that the seed sown will bring forth much fruit for the Master. This work is doing much good in uniting the hearts of Christians in different denominations, and in bringing them to a nearer relationship with Jesus. The Holiness School is in a flourishing condition. God is with us and provides for us. It is conducted entirely on the faith line. Both the school and association are thoroughly anti-secret. Let all the readers of the Cynosure pray for us. M. SPITZ.

LODGE NOTES.

The five Page county (Iowa) lodges have a membership in the aggregate of 240. During the last year one initiate was received only. Three raised, five received from other lodges, three reinstated. Making in all twelve added, provided none have been counted twice. Meanwhile thirteen took their demits and three died. A net loss to the fraternity of four members in the county. The Clarinda lodge was the only one receiving an initiate. The Grand Lodge report shows the disbursement of $100 for the relief of widows and orphans by the Grand Lodge during the last year. The lucky widow was the wife of a Past Grand Master. The total receipts by the Grand Lodge during the time were $34,700. A charitable institution is it?—Western Crank.

"My dear," said a young wife to her husband, who had already fallen into the habit of going to the lodge in the evenings, and who was just preparing to go out, "I am going up the street to see the superintendent of mails at the postoffice." "Ah! on what business, may I enquire?" "Well, I want to see if he can give me any advice about getting in an habitually late male on time." The husband blushed, looked foolish, and said he guessed he wouldn't go to the lodge.—Bz.

A secret organization for the sole purpose of purifying the politics of Pittsburgh and Allegheny City has been formed. The organization includes over seven hundred business and professional men of the two cities, and it is the intention not to take active part in any political fight until the membership has reached 10,000.

The Knights of Labor, Labor Union, and other workmen's associations at St. Louis will combine and nominate a full city, Congressional and legislative ticket.

Knights of Labor of the Third Virginia district Friday night nominated William H. Mullen, member of the National Executive Committee of the Knights, for Congress.

The British Trades Union Congress at Hull, England, Sept. 7, resolved to urge the government to increase the number of factory inspectors. The resolution says that the various acts passed for the benefit of the working men and women of Great Britain are becoming a dead letter and will become practically obsolete unless their operation could be more closely supervised.

The trouble between the striking union brewers of St. Louis and their former employes has taken an interesting turn, and the union men find it difficult to supply the demand for beer which is not boycotted by some one or other. The union has boycotted beer brewed by the firms against which they are striking, and the latter refuse to sell to the saloons who sympathize with the strikers.

"Ineffable Temple of Honor" is the name of a new temperance order recently organized in Florida by Dr. Stephen Fish, who wrote its rituals and gave it its name and inspiration. In order to have a stronger pledge and more binding obligations than those of the present temperance orders, a new organization was formed with obligations as binding as the Masonic.

Elizabeth Rodgers has been appointed Master Workman of District Assembly No. 24, Knights of Labor, at Chicago, to succeed J. B. Murphy, deceased. She is the wife of George Rodgers, a labor agitator, who holds a position under the city government of Chicago. She is 39 years of age, and has had eleven children, eight of whom are living.

Grand Lecturer A. A. Carlton, of the Knights of Labor, whose home is in Massachusetts, regards the coming convention at Richmond as the most important ever held by the knights. There is a more conservative feeling among the leaders of the order than there has been before, and this he thinks will have a good effect on the convention.

Lawrence H. Ripley, of Holly, Mich., nominee of the Democrats of the Sixth congressional district, is a member of the Masonic lodge and chapter at Holly and of the Knight Templar Commandry at Pontonville. He is also a member of the G. A. R.

The committee of the grand lodge of the colored Masons of the jurisdiction comprising the States of Nebraska, Kansas, Iowa and Missouri, appointed at the recent session at Springfield, Mo., to locate the building to be erected for grand lodge purposes, are expected to report soon.

The three Knights of Labor on trial in St. Louis on the charge of conspiring to injure the Missouri Pacific Railroad Company's property were acquitted.

BUSINESS.

SPECIMEN NUMBERS.—For ten cents we will send the Christian Cynosure for five weeks to any address, thus giving them a chance to examine the paper and subscribe if they think best. Could you make better use of a dollar of the Lord's money than to send to ten of your friends five copies of the Cynosure?

THE CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE

still remains at $2.00 per year, but the N. C. A. at its annual meeting continued the offer for another year of the special rate of one dollar and fifty cents per year in advance.

One month	.15	One year	$1.50
Two months	.25	*Two years	3.00
Four months	.50	*Three years	4.50
Six months	.75	*Four years	6.00
Eight months	1.00	*Five years	7.50

*To any one who will renew their subscription for two years twenty cents worth of any of our publications will be sent, or forty cents worth for three years, or sixty cents worth for four years, or eighty cents worth for five years. The renewal of your subscription for several years at a time will benefit you some, but the cause more. Try it!

PLEASE BE PROMPT in paying for your papers. It costs the reform and its friends many dollars every year to send notices that subscriptions have expired, that arrears are due. Five cents is not a large sum by itself, but when it is multiplied by hundreds and thousands, the amount lost to the cause is realized to be great. Can you not inaugurate a reform in this matter, and renew a little before your subscription expires, and if in arrears pay up at once? Would it not be a good thing to do?

SUBSCRIPTION LETTERS:

The following have made remittances of money to the Cynosure from Sept. 13 to Sept. 18 inclusive:

"A THRILLING WARNING."
THE Man Traps of the City,

BY THOS. E. GREEN.

Mothers—place this book in the hands of your sons.
It treats of
The Tiger and His Den.
Cups of Plomo.
Embezzlement.
The Devil's Printing Press.
Etc., Etc., Etc., Etc.

A book that is sensational, not from excited rhetoric or florid figures of speech, but from the facts that flow like melted lava from the pen of the writer. It is a book of timely warnings, where sin and crime are shown of their mark, robbed of the glamour with which they have been surrounded by the purulent literature of the day, and painted in strong, true colors. The life of the prodigal is here shown in its true light, not as a life that, though wicked, has its dignity, but as a life that is a disgrace and in future life to be abhorred.—WESTERN CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

THE HISTORY OF ANTI-SLAVERY
IN THE

BY REV. AUSTIN WILLEY.

514 pp., 12 mo. With NINETEEN PORTRAITS.

Price, Postpaid, $2.00.

Mr. Willey gives the best history of the times just before the present generation, which is precisely the history least apt to be known. He gives us the surface of the sea under the billows which swept off three million pair of fetters from our national decks. His book shows more accurate insight into the causes which produced the rebellion, and gives more clearly the working of those causes, than any other writer. He shows more clearly the moral force of the ballot and necessity of a new party to carry a fundamental reform than any one who has treated of it. We advise every young man and every reader of the Cynosure to obtain and read that history.—Pres. J. Blanchard.

NATIONAL SUICIDE,
AND
ITS PREVENTION.

BY OSCAR F. LUMRY, PH. D.

Prof. Lumry's book, "National Suicide and Its Remedy," will be read with profit even by those who do not accept its doctrine, that taking interest for money loaned, one or more percent, is sin, taking something for nothing. For, as Goldsmith said of his Vicar of Wakefield, "Even his fallings lean to virtue's side."
—Cynosure.

Dr. Lumry is a man of ideas and never fails to make his readers understand just what they are. Every sentiment he writes has such an air of honesty that it will in a measure disarm those who read to criticize. It is a good book to set people to thinking, whether they believe his theories or not. The book is well worth a careful reading and study.—Index Geom.

On all the points named they differ radically from those which prevail in the organization of society. Either they are true or false. It is a curious fact that all of them have been stigmatized as crazy, and yet nearly all of them have been for some years steadily gaining the adherence of men of intellectual ability.—Times.

Literary Leaders.

The greedy grasp of monopoly is broken. The short-sighted policy of seeking $1.00 profit from each of 1,000 readers gives place to the more liberal plan of asking a few cents profit from each of a million readers, ($1.00 multiplied by 1,000 equals $1,000, but 2 cents multiplied by 1,000,000 equals $20,000). Surely the most brilliant products of American literary genius are wanted by the millions. The expiration of copyright enables me now to publish beautiful editions of some of the most famous writings of EMERSON, IRVING, PRESIDENT HAWTHORNE, and others. I here describe three volumes which I offer as representative of their authors, and as specimens of new styles in book-making which I have recently introduced.

Emerson says: In the highest civilization the book is still the highest delight. He who has once known its satisfactions is provided with a resource against calamity. Angels they are to us of entertainment, sympathy, and provocation, whose embalmed life is the highest feat of art.

Ideal Edition is the name I have adopted for the new form and style in which I issue many celebrated works. It is almost universally pronounced unique and beautiful, as neat and graceful as it is convenient, easy for the eye, perfect in form for hand-holding and equally well adapted for the library shelf. Description is inadequate. See it!

Nature and other Addresses is the volume which I have chosen to represent Emerson. It is the work which most greatly contributed to his fame. It treats of: 1, NATURE; 2, COMMODITY; 3, BEAUTY; 4, LANGUAGE; 5, DISCIPLINE; 6, IDEALISM; 7, SPIRIT; 8, PROSPECTS; 9, THE METHOD OF NATURE; 10, LITERARY ETHICS. It is printed from LONG PRIMER type, on fine heavy paper, bound in fine cloth, beveled boards, gilt top, price, 40 cents; half Morocco, marbled edges, 65 cts.

Irving. WASHINGTON IRVING'S two most celebrated works are "The Sketch Book" and "Tales of the Alhambra." These two famous books I have published in one volume, in large, beautiful, leather type, with a fine portrait of Irving, very finely bound in half Morocco, marbled edges. The only other edition published, known to me, which at all compares with this, is issued at the price of $3.00. As a sort of "Literary Coup D'Etat," to win the book-buyers of the continent, I offer this volume, for the nominal price of 50 cts.

An Enigma. "How you can publish good books at such low prices is an enigma. It is perfectly wonderful, this constant stream of first-class books and the low price they are offered at."—FRED MYERS COLBY, Warren, N. H.

Great Offer. As the most effective means of advertising these and numerous other standard and popular works which I publish, I offer, for a short time only, sample volumes of the books described, as follows: For 25 CENTS a copy of EMERSON'S "Nature," etc., as described, will be sent post-paid. For 40 CENTS a copy of PRESIDENT HAWTHORNE'S "Mosses from an Old Manse," as described. For 50 CENTS, IRVING'S "Sketch Book," and "Knickerbocker," as described. This gives the opportunity of securing a specimen of each author, and each style of binding, at only nominal cost; they will be sent as specified, only, at the reduced price if wanted otherwise, full price will be charged.

Discounts Books sent post-paid at prices named, or by Express at discounts as follows: Over $5.00 at 20 per cent; over $15.00 at 25 per cent discount. Illustrated Catalogue of Choice Books, 182 pages, 4 cts.; Condensed Catalogue, Free.

JOHN B. ALDEN, Publisher, 393 Pearl St., New York.
The Alden Book Co.: Clark and Adams Sts., Chicago; 440 Yonge St., Toronto.

John Ruskin says: Life-behavior very short and the quiet hours of it few, we ought to waste none of them in reading valueless books; and valuable books should, in a civilized country, be within the reach of everyone, printed in excellent form, for a just price.

Prescott's Miscellanies best represent this author, in the estimation of many, and I therefore offer, in one volume, his biographical and critical essays on: 1, CHARLES BROCKDEN BROWN; 2, CERVANTES; 3, SIR WALTER SCOTT; 4, MOLIÈRE; 5, ITALIAN NARRATIVE POETRY. In typography and binding this volume is nearly uniform with the "Nature," etc., of Emerson. In fine cloth, beveled boards, gilt top, price 40 cents; half Morocco, marbled edges, 65 cts.

Beat Alden! "Evidently the only publisher in the country who can beat John B. Alden at furnishing first class books at low prices, is that gentleman himself!" He has surpassed his former ventures.—Morning Star, Boston, Mass.

HOME HINTS.

LIME WATER.

The housekeeper should never be without a bottle of limewater in the house. To have it always ready in good order, with little expense, place in a tall quart bottle of any kind a gill or so of good lime just slacked with water. Then fill the bottle with rain or other pure water, and allow it to stand quietly, well corked. The lime will settle, leaving clear lime water at the top. Pour this off gently, as wanted, adding more water as needed. Lime water, even when closely corked, often deteriorates; the carbonic acid in the air unites with the lime and settles as an insoluble carbonate on the sides of the bottle, which is nearly impossible to remove. This will spoil the bottle for any other use. Therefore select one from the store room which is not valued, but which has a good tight cover. A wide mouthed bottle is preferable.

The lime should be removed and fresh put in once a year or so, unless kept very tightly corked. A pint of cold water dissolves less than ten grains of lime, and warm water still less. The uses to which lime water may be put are innumerable. If good milk disagrees with a child or a grown person, three or four tablespoonfuls of lime water added to a pint of it will usually help digestion and prevent flatulence; it also counteracts pain from wind in the stomach caused by eating acid fruits. Overeating of candies and other sweets will sometimes cause acidity, for which this is a sovereign remedy.

A tablespoonful for a child two years old to a gill or more for an adult is an ordinary dose, while considerable will have no bad results; in fact, it is a simple anti-acid and slightly tonic. A small quantity put into a mug with the water for cleaning the teeth will harden the gums and prevent soft decay, which is a serious evil which many desire to avert. For burns and scalds, to two parts of linseed oil add one part of lime water, and apply with soft linen.—American Cultivator.

CURATIVE PROPERTIES OF CELERY.—An English writer proclaims cooked celery as a cure for rheumatism, which it certainly will not harm if it fails to cure. We read as follows: "Celery, cooked, is a very fine dish, both as nutriment and a purifier of the blood. I will not enumerate the marvelous cures I have made with celery, for fear the medical men should, like corn dealers, attempt to worry me. Let me fearlessly say that rheumatism is impossible on such a diet. Plain, let me say, cold or damp never produces rheumatism, but simply develops it. The acid blood is the primary cause and the sustaining power of the evil. While the blood is alkaline there can be no rheumatism, and equally no gout. I must return to cooked celery. Cut the celery into inch pieces, and boil in water until soft. No water must be poured away unless drank by the invalid. Then take new milk, slightly thicken with flour, and flavor with nutmeg; warm with the celery in the saucepan; serve up with diamonds of toasted bread around the dish, and eat with potatoes."

Memory Culture.

By ADAM MILLER, M. D.

A practical and easy system by which any person, old or young, can train themselves to memorize anything they choose—

THE CLERGY. Their Sermons;
THE STUDENT. His Lessons;
THE BUSINESS MAN. Items of Business.
The author of this work was put to the most severe public test, a few days ago, by reporters of all the leading Chicago daily papers. The commendatory notices published the following day showed how well he stood the test:

"The author, an old man, claims to have a memory more to be trusted by training under this system than even while he was young.—CHICAGO INTER-OCEAN.

"Most ingenious; enables any one, who familiarizes himself with the system, to carry an immense mass of digested information, ready for production on demand. By experiment we have tested the author's mnemonic resources, and been moved by them to wonder.—ADVANCE.

BETWEEN TWO OPINIONS.

BY E. E. FLAGG.

Author of "Holden with Cords," "A Sunny Life," "Little People," etc.

The Best Story of the Reform.

Price, only $1.00.

Published by THE NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

This latest and best of Miss Flagg's works is now ready in handsome print, neatly bound. The story begins in a quiet New England home, and paints its homely joys with a delicacy and truthfulness worthy the hand of Harriet Beecher Stowe. The scene then changes to a thriving, growing, palpitating young Western city, and with great power and startling accuracy the writer leads us behind the scenes that we may see the machinery that works the liquor traffic and labor troubles. The story of the strike, the mob, the attempted assassination, the saloon-keeper's wiles, the curse of his trade, the power of the Christian faith to change him to a messenger of mercy, the criminal and the hidden power that shields him from justice, the land robbers' tricks, the dark and secret conspiracies of the lodge—these and all the incidents of the book are portrayed with rare tact and great power of description. It is emphatically a book for the hour. And what is better and yet more striking, the incidents are facts, and every one a powerful and convincing argument against the lodge and the saloon.

Every temperance man and woman should read this book. No temperance story like it was ever planned, much less ably executed. A wonderful light is thrown upon the difficulties in the way of prohibition. Learn how they may be avoided.

Every one who loves to read a good story, chaste and elegant in expression, in thought, true in incident, deeply interesting in its narrative, should read this

READ THESE NOTICES FROM THE PRESS:

The Free Methodist, Chicago.

"Between Two Opinions" is a story, its incidents vouched for as facts, which presents a powerful argument on these questions and must attract thousands of readers among our thinking and observant people. The plot of the story is neither startling nor novel, but it develops a wonderful strength in following the experiences of people in the common, everyday walks of life.

Free Press, Birmingham, Iowa.

It differs from the popular story, "The Bread-winners" of a year ago. It greatly differs from that book in that it is written from the Christian standpoint, and its beautiful and touching descriptions of home life and home duties and heroic self-denials will awaken a responsive echo in every heart, that has not by dissipation lost the taste for the pure joys of home.

The Religious Telescope, Dayton.

The author, Miss Flagg, is a brilliant writer. The stirring questions in American politics are undoubtedly prohibition and the labor movement as championed by the secret unions of working men, which direct the strikes that with more and more frequency occur in our cities. "Between Two Opinions" is a story, its incidents vouched for as facts, which presents a powerful argument on these questions, and must attract thousands of readers among our thinking people.

The Christian Conservator, Dayton.

This is a charming book, written in an attractive manner. It is so full of sunshine and so radiant with light that one is enlightened, warmed, and, before they are conscious of it, set against the lodge. The style gleams, glows and sparkles. It is dignified and simple. It is the right book to place in the hands of your wife or daughter to superintend co-operation with you in anti-secrecy work. Every minister's wife should read it, and then, if her husband is not an Anti-son, he should take his turn next and become one.

The American, Washington.

We are reading, in spare moments, Miss Flagg's new book, "Between Two Opinions," and the estimate we have thus far put upon it is that it is masterly both in style and argument. One is insensibly made to feel that he is reading facts and not fiction; that the book is not a play upon the imagination but an unravelling of mysterious circumstances which have an important bearing upon current events.

THE BROKEN SEAL;

Or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Gov. Wm. Morgan.

By Samuel D. Greene.

One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper covers, 40 cents; per dozen, $4.00.

This deeply interesting narrative shows what Masonry has done and is capable of doing in the Courts, and how had men control the good and bad in the lodge and protect their own members when guilty of great crimes. Price, 25 cents per dozen.

SECRET SOCIETIES ILLUSTRATED.

Contains the signs, grips, passwords, emblems, etc., of Freemasonry (Blue Lodge and Subordinate degrees of the York Rite), Adoptive Masonry, Revised Odd-fellowship, Good Templarism, the Temple of Honor, the United Sons of Industry, Knights of Pythias and the Grange, with affidavits, etc. Over 200 cuts, 16 pages, paper cover. Price, 25 cents per dozen. Sold by the National Christian Association, at Headquarters for Anti-Secrecy Literature, 221 W. Madison St. Chic. Mo.

Law and Order, Boston.

The book takes high ground for prohibition of the liquor cure, for woman's ballot for home protection, and for a better and more honest brotherhood than is forced by their obligations upon the members of secret orders. It is, therefore, a valuable book for several large classes of American readers.

Christian Instructor, Philadelphia.

There are important questions pressing upon American politics to-day; two of them are prohibition and the labor question as connected with the secret unions of workmen. This work is an exposure of the twin evils, secret societies and the saloons. The truths are given in the form of a story; not startling, but thrilling experiences of home life that are vouched for as facts. The evidences presented of the impossibility of reaching the saloon keeper so long as he and the officers of the law are sworn brothers in the den of some secret society, are conclusive enough to awaken the most careless sin, obtuse member of society. It is a valuable book for the masses to read.

Evangelist, Berea, Kentucky.

The object of the volume is to illustrate the practical workings of Secret Societies, and especially to show how the Lodge upholds the saloon, and this very important design is wrought out with much skill, clearness and power. By reading it temperance people may learn much about the difficulties in the way of prohibition.

The Standard, Chicago.

It is written in the interests of reform, more especially temperance and Anti-masonry. The title of the story suggests the special aim of it, which is to protect against all "falling between two opinions;" in other words, it is a plea for radicalism. The story is vigorously written, and will interest even readers who do not altogether believe in its doctrine.

The Pacific, San Francisco.

It is a story intended to do service against the saloons, and in favor of Woman's Christian Temperance work, and especially against the secret orders—Freemasonry, Odd-fellows, the Knights of Labor, etc. No reflecting man can doubt that any combination of picked classes and individuals is liable to great abuse. It is obvious, also, that secret orders are specially capable of being used in a selfish and unprincipled way.

REVISED ODD-FELLOWSHIP ILLUSTRATED.

The complete revised ritual of the Lodge, Emancipation and Rebekah (Adler's) degrees, profusely illustrated, and guaranteed to be strictly accurate; with a sketch of the origin, history and character of the order, over one hundred foot-note quotations from standard authorities, showing the character and teachings of the order, and an analysis of each degree by President J. Blanchard. The ritual corresponds exactly with the 21st degree. Bound in the most elegant Grand Lodge form. In cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $8.00. Paper covers, 75 cents; per dozen, $6.00.

Fresno, California, is a bustling little town about half way down the State from San Francisco to Los Angeles. It would hardly be supposed that the wheat farmers thereabout have any alarm from the prospective emptying of the crowded provinces of southern China upon the Pacific coast, according to the prophecy of O'Donnell and Ravlin, yet it is reported that in order to preserve the country an "American" party is to be formed in this far-away part of the San Joaquin Valley, which is to save the country by keeping out the Chinese. That is Irish not American. Call things by their right names.

While the Congregational pastors of this city were discussing "Our churches and the Temperance Cause" in their meeting last week, Rev. Mr. Gilbert, formerly of the Advance, but now representing the Congregationalist, remarked that every live church was bound to be a reform society and that any church which should seem indifferent to the evil of intemperance would stultify itself before the world. That was well said, and Dr. Gilbert's moral courage will yet more appear when he repeats the words, but saying "secret societies" instead of "intemperance."

But special attention is invited to Dr. Gilbert's further remark upon the name of the party which has taken the saloon fight most prominently into politics. Prohibition, he said, is not a winning name. It does not pleasantly coincide with the American instinct of liberty, and is particularly offensive to foreigners who come here for the sake of freedom strained as may be their old-world ideas of that boon. The word is too narrow, there should be a better. The name of the old Abolition party might have been a good one for a time in order to help crystallize a thought, a conviction; but a party with that name never would have won in this country. The Republican party came along with a banner that awakened no prejudice, that presently became instinct with glorious meaning. The criticism is fair, as we believe Gov. St. John himself will confess. And since the great army of rumsellors and rum-makers, brewers, distillers and what not are quite uniformly foreigners, what better name can be suggested for a party which would have rights of the King of kings confessed, and the American home protected from every subtle foe, than AMERICAN?

The anti-Chinese rioters have professed to excuse their cruelties, which were charged with preventing all religious access to their victims, by pointing a scornful finger at the small number of Chinese converts. They are largely to blame for this meager result, and the United States official reports are now setting to their account the troubles beginning to be visited upon American missionaries in China. Minister Deuby, at Pekin, writes of the last assault upon the Methodist Episcopal Mission Hospital at Chung King, June 6, "It grew, as all our evils in China do, out of troubles in the United States." At this place the mob broke down the hospital gates, and wounded, by stoning, a lady connected with the institution. On the 19th of June the mob destroyed the mission property at Chung King. A month before outrages were perpetrated upon Rev. A. A. Fulton and his wife and Miss Mary Fulton, of the American Presbyterian mission at Kwai Ping. Placards appeared on the walls declaring that "foreign devils" must go in three days (language borrowed from this side the Pacific). The mission buildings were looted and burned and the missionaries were driven to Canton. The Chinese authorities were indifferent about the massacres at Rock Spring and Seattle; they manifest as little regard for the protests of our representatives against Chinese mobs.

The dreaded cattle plague has broken out again in the vicinity of Chicago—this time in the proper place, the distillery sheds. The State authorities and the immense stock interests of Chicago are alarmed, one for the herds that sprinkle our generous Illinois pastures, the other for the vast trade in preserved beef. It has been determined that 3,000 cattle in the infected quarters shall be killed and the disease stamped out. Their investigations show that most of these 3,000 cattle are fed on distillery slop for milk or for beef. Large canning establishments get their swill fed beef from these crowded, filthy, disease breeding stables, and milk dealers peddle the product of the swill for the innocent and unprotected babes of Chicago. Of course the whole cattle interest of the State must suffer, and the foreign market for Chicago canned goods will be uneasy, but so long as the infamous business of turning wholesome grain into filthy swill for cattle and accursed fiery poison for men we shall rejoice in such judgments of God upon the business, until righteousness shall prevail and the curse is removed. It is a pity the poor human beings who get the worst part of the distillery product are not taken into the account as well as the cattle.

The Knight Templar Masons were greatly provoked at the ordering of the clouds last week, by which their grand parade of lodge vanity and expensive man-millinery was stopped. Two days later the parade came off with a paltry 1,500 men in line, according to the report in the Tribune of this city. The papers are also full of reports of the slighted Chicago Masons, who found the rivalries of St. Louis stronger than the mystic tie of the lodge. There were parades and prize drills and banquets and receptions and the squandering of thousands of money as usual, and after the smoke has cleared away the inevitable wreck of morals upon wine and women will come to light.

The Odd-fellows were more fortunate in Boston. Their parade numbered some 9,000, and all was gay and festive with that part of the performance. But the military degree suffered from the jealousies of men suddenly exalted, in their own esteem, by grand titles, and a gay dress. The Patriarch's Militant, or in sober speech the young men who played at soldiering, were to have their drill contest; but the Eastern lodges learned that a Chicago company were sure of the prize, and broke up the arrangement. This was most wrath-provoking, as the Chicago men had spent some $10,000 or more in preparation for the event, and had beside got together the great excursion of 160 cars which ran all through the Sabbath toward Boston. The revenue of the Sovereign Grand Lodge of Odd-fellows was reported to be $613,000, while the total relief was in the usual proportion of about one-third—$247,000. The headquarters are to be removed from Baltimore to Columbus, Ohio, and there may be hereafter some improvement in this respect.

The spectacle of Monday must have struck the members of the Commons as one worthy of being remembered. The leader of the Irish party was the leader in the debate, and he was supported by the man who has been three times Prime Minister, and who is recognized as one of the greatest of English statesmen. The men who in Mr. Gladstone's fiercest struggles deserted him must have felt some compunction when the leader of the Liberals came to their support at a time when it was a little embarrassing for him to give it and almost vital for them to receive it. The Parnell land bill was an Irish measure framed by the Irish party, indorsed by the Irish people, and it was advocated by the man who had labored for years to advance the interest of Irishmen among the Englishmen. The government tried to evade the issue at this session, but had to face the music, and what had been marked down as an uneventful session became an interesting one. The bill came up last night and was rejected by a vote of 297 to 202.—Inter Ocean.

THEIR NAME IS LEGION.

BY REV. H. C. PIERCE.

It is truly surprising to the thoughtful mind to see how fast our secret orders are multiplying. We have formed a list of seventy-six orders, besides the trade unions, which are perhaps twenty-five or thirty more. Society is controlled in a great degree by these cliques, cabals and oath-bound leagues. Many a one, though not a member of these clans, is foolish enough to do their bidding and tremble at their nod. But, thank God! there are some thousands now as of old who do not bow the knee to the worship of this secret Baal, the Image of the Beast. Modern apostates worship the Image; and the same condemnation rests upon them as upon the Beast. Spiritual harlotry is the attempted union of divine and heathen worship. It is an unlawful marriage, spiritual adultery. This was accomplished in the Babylonian mother by means of the Image which was made about the year A. D., 1099, when the Knights of St. John were founded. Every secret oath-bound clan since that day, whether Catholic or Protestant, stand upon the same basis; hence, Rome was termed the Mother of Harlots!

It is not mere differences in religious rites that constitute harlotry; it is the union of the church with the secret worship of Baal. The worship of the ancient religions were esoteric, but Jesus came to set up an "open method." "In secret have I said nothing." His Gospel was for the poor, the laboring class, yet he devised no secret system. The operation of cliques and clans was inconsistent with the fair, square, upright rules of honesty and fair dealing which he proposed.

But the labor reformers of our day have fallen into the grievous mistake that secret work is necessary to accomplish their ends. But let me tell them, as a laboring man, as a labor reformer, as an uncompromising opponent to all and every species of monopoly, extortion, land grabbing, usury and political oppression, that in the night of heaven the end will not justify the means. God has forbidden by divine inspiration the secret oath (Lev. 5: 4), and he has never seen fit to repeal that law. Several Jewish laws were abrogated. The holy days, feasts, meats, priesthood, divers washings, new moons and Jewish Sabbaths, were done away. See Heb. 7th and 9th; Col. 2: 16, and elsewhere. But he never did repeal the laws against secret oaths, the marriage of blood kin, nor necromancy, except so far as the penalty of temporal death is concerned.

We deeply sympathize with all labor reformers, but it pains us to see them leave that great text book of reform, the Bible, and run into secretism and communism where their bark is sure to strand.

A new order has lately arisen in Texas called the Farmer's Alliance. We copy the following from their Ritual:

I— in the presence of the Heavenly Father and these witnesses do solemnly affirm that I will never reveal any of the secrets of the Alliance to any one, unless by strict test or in some legal manner I find him entitled to receive them. I will conform to the Constitution and by-laws of the Alliance, and I will act in harmony with, and endeavor to promote the unity of the members. I will never wrong or defraud a worthy member, but will always assist and protect him and his interests when in my power to do so. I will always speak the truth when talking to a member, and will assist him in bearing the burdens and crosses of life. I will advise and do all in my power to keep any member from engaging in any immoral conduct that will be likely to bring reproach upon him, his family, or the Farmer's Alliance. I will never propose for membership or sanction the admission of any one of whom I have any reason to believe is an improper person; neither will I oppose the admission of any one solely on account of a personal matter. I will always recognize and answer all lawful signs given by a worthy member of the Alliance. I furthermore solemnly affirm that if I should be expelled from the Alliance for any cause whatever, I will keep this obligation sacred out of the Alliance as when a member. So help me God."

They have a pass word, a room word, a degree word, a grip, a sign of degree and several others. They open and close with prayer. The candidate must be a farmer and a believer in a supreme being. The candidate is placed at an altar with hand on the Bible when taking the obligation. Then follow three short addresses, as in most other orders, by a lecturer, the chaplain and the president. I have belonged to eight secret orders in my time, and find but little difference in the lectures and general instruction. They are for the most part made quite plausible, hence furnish a species of cloak for the evils likely to arise from secrecy.

An examination of the oath above, shows that like all similar obligations of most of the secret orders, it emphasizes their duty "never to wrong or defraud a worthy member," and will always speak the truth when talking to a member." This gives tacit permission to defraud and lie to others. They may deny it, but it will be so construed by thousands. So the Mason promises not to violate the chasity of a brother's wife or daughter, but there his obligation ceases. The whole thing is undoubtedly Masonic, with the intention of popularizing the secret empire and gaining recruits for Hiram Abiff.

People ought to know that nearly every one of these modern orders are founded by Freemasons, and when the new order wanes, as it will after a short and inglorious career, the "tried and faithful" will be led hoodwinked into Masonic lodges to help perpetuate selfishness, clanism and a ritualistic religion.

We desire the address of every labor reformer in this State who is in favor of the Open Workers. Let us inaugurate a movement that will survive all these temporary secret organizations and finally triumph over all oppression.

LODGERY AND SLAVERY—A PARALLEL.

The United States is a theatre to which the eyes of the civilized world was turned during our civil war, which ended slavery as an American institution. Slavery was the true cause of that war—a despotism utterly inconsistent with the freedom which had been declared by our Pilgrim fathers and incorporated into our national Constitution.

As slavery was, so lodgery is. Lodgery pervades and largely controls public sentiment as slavery did. Alike they have been or are regarded as consistent with the laws of God and man. Slavery was defended by preachers and members of churches, and by pleading political parties; and, until the war compelled the proclamation of freedom to the slave, our people were blind to the sin they had so long committed against the colored millions of men who are now enjoying the God-given rights of conscience in civil and religious liberty.

As slavery was, so lodgery is. Alike despotic in principle, they exact the full surrender of the will of one man to that of another, and command absolute, blind obedience to the Master. As the sacred unity of the family relationships were torn asunder by slavery; nay, could not rightfully exist under it, so it is with lodgery in its compulsory breach of family confidences between man and wife, father and sons, mother and daughters.

But slavery did not bind its victims by oaths as lodgery does. The conscience of the slave was freer than that of the bondmen of the lodge. Strange as it may seem, it is the fact that at this moment some of our popular newspapers and writers regard this oath of the lodge as a means of blessing to its members; for example, this from the Chicago Tribune of May 11th last, in reference to a new secret circular by "Mr. Powderly, Grand Master of the Knights of Labor, addressed to the various assemblies of that secret oathbound organization." And then in reference to his proposed oath against liquor says: "If Mr. Powderly could extend this oath among the wage classes and make it effective he would immortalize himself and lift working men out of their troubles. Wise, brave words are these." And the Tribune compliments the secret circular by the heading, "Powderly's Wise Words."

MORMON BLOOD ATONEMENT.

[Kate Field in the North American Review.]

In the thirteen articles of faith of the "Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints," there is no mention of the doctrine of blood atonement, which Judge Baskin, counsel for the Gentiles of Utah, recently assured a congressional committee had been practically enforced during Brigham Young's reign. In replying, Mr. Jos. W. West, a Mormon, absolutely asserted that he "had never heard of such monstrous doctrine as that of blood atonement." Later on, Mr. John T. Caine, Utah delegate to Congress, indignantly exclaimed:

"A case must be despatched if such statements as these regarding blood atonement can be made. Mr. Baskin has said that Brigham Young was no fool. If you believe that Brigham Young was not a fool, you will believe that it (the doctrine of blood atonement) could only be taken in a figurative sense."

"Blood atonement? Ah, you fancy we mean something awful," once upon a time said a Mormon Elder to me, smiling. "This signifies that the blood of Christ atones for the sins of the world. Then again, the Bible says, 'If a man sheds blood, by man shall his blood be shed.' We don't believe in hanging. That is not shedding blood."

Let us investigate. In 1856 an awful so-called "reformation" took possession of Utah. The leaders under the influence of Jedediah M. Grant, one of Brigham's counsellors, went mad on the subject of religion, and called everybody to repentance. All who were not married were hurried into matrimony, and those already married were forced into polygamy. "Blood atonement" was then announced from the pulpit by the prophet and his two counsellors. For several years human blood was shed on the slightest provocation. Did one man bear a grudge against another, he died in some mysterious manner. A Mormon court of investigation could never discover how. Was a man obnoxious to any of the church officers, he disappeared, and was never heard of again. John W. Long, a clerk in Brigham's office, the only person who heard the conversation between Brigham and the messenger sent from George A. Smith, just before the Mountain Meadow massacre, and who wrote out the instructions which the messenger carried back, was found dead in a ditch, "drowned" in three inches of water, "accidentally," of course, since that was the decision of the Mormon jury.

"The time is coming," declared Brigham Young in 1856, "when justice will be laid to the line and righteousness to the plummet; when you shall take the old broadsword and ask, Are you of God? And if you are not heartily on the Lord's side, you will be hewn down."

It was preached throughout the wards that "the good sheep would know the good shepherd's voice, and would follow him, but the goats would not follow him, and they should have their tails cut two inches below their ears!"

The originator of this God-given principle delivered his first sermon on blood atonement on Sept. 21, 1856. After berating the saints in general, he turned his wrath upon "the old, hardened sinners."

"They are almost, if not altogether, past improvement, and are full of hell; and my prayer is that God's indignation may rest upon them, and that he will curse them from the crown of their heads to the soles of their feet. I say that there are men and women that I would advise to go to the president immediately, and ask him to appoint a committee to attend to their case; and then let a place be selected and let that committee shed their blood. We have those amongst us that are full of all manner of abominations, those who need to have their blood shed, for water will not do, their sins are of too deep a dye. You may think that I am not teaching you Bible doctrine, but what says the Apostle Paul? I would ask how many covenant-breakers there are in this city and in this kingdom? I believe that there are a great many; and if they are covenant-breakers, we need a place designated where we can shed their blood. We have been trying long enough with this people, and I go in for letting the sword of the Almighty be unsheathed, not only in word but in deed. I go in for letting the wrath of the Almighty burn up the dross and the filth; and if the people will not glorify the Lord by sanctifying themselves, let the wrath of the Almighty God burn against them, and the wrath of Joseph and of Brigham, and of Heber, and of high heaven. . . . Brethren and sisters, we want you to repent and forsake your sins. And you who have committed sins that cannot be forgiven through baptism, let your blood be shed and let the smoke ascend, that the incense thereof may come up before God as an atonement for your sins, and that the sinners in Zion may be afraid."

So much for Mormon history as reported by church stenographers. Yet, no less an authority than George Q. Cannon, first counsellor to the Mormon president, stated in an interview several years ago, that the "talk about the doctrine of blood atonement originates in the fact that we do not believe in hanging. We think that if a man sheds blood, his blood should be shed by execution." On Sunday evening, Oct. 12, 1884, Elder Penrose, editor of the Mormon church organ, the Deseret News, arose in the Twelfth Ward meeting-house of Salt Lake City and preached a sermon on Blood Atonement. He admitted that it was a principle of his religion, but that the time had not yet come to carry it out. The elder declared that it only applied to such as had joined the church and apostatized. Why, then, did John D. Lee and the other murderers at Mountain Meadows call upon the Lord to forgive the sins of the one hundred and twenty Gentile men, women and children, whose throats they were cutting as they called?

Here, Gentiles, is an admirable illustration of the devious ways of Mormonism. George Q. Cannon denied blood atonement five years ago. High priests repudiated the doctrine to me three years ago. For reasons best known to the church, one of its cleverest elders publicly avowed the principle in 1884. Now before the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives, one Mormon elder declares that he "never heard of the monstrous doctrine of blood atonement," and another Mormon elder, the Utah delegate to Congress, having heard of it apparently, maintains that this doctrine "could only be taken in a figurative sense." An unprejudiced public shall decide whether such an expression as "spilling his blood upon the earth" can be construed figuratively. Mormons insist upon interpreting the Bible literally. They are the most literal people on the face of the earth. Brigham Young and his holy counsellors were the last men in this world to use figures of speech, and that they meant what they said is illustrated in the following story told me by a truthful woman during my residence in Utah.

"When they tell you that they have never blood atoned, they tell what is false," said one who for years was a Mormon, and whose life has been a prolonged struggle for existence. "Listen to a true story. In London I knew a Mrs. Mansfield, a friend of my mother, to whose boys I gave music lessons. Through Thomas Brown, a Mormon elder, Mr. and Mrs. Mansfield were baptized into what they believed to be the true faith, and Mansfield, when dying, made Elder Brown promise that he would take charge of his wife and children. Brown, who had said he was married, settled Mansfield's estate, and soon informed the widow that his wife had died. Within two years the elder married Mrs. Mansfield and brought her to Utah, where the poor woman discovered that Brown's first wife was still living. Taking Mrs. Mansfield down South, he finally brought her back to a broken-down place in Salt Lake City.

"One Sunday in 1861, on leaving the Tabernacle, I met Mrs. Mansfield in rags and tatters. In England she wore satins. Mrs. Mansfield had a beautiful daughter 'Daisy,' whom Brown was determined to marry. 'I'd rather see her dead than married to that brute,' said poor Mrs. Mansfield; but her opposition only made Brown the more determined.

"I intend to marry her, sick or well," he declared, when Daisy fell ill, and called upon Heber C. Kimball to perform the ceremony, at which I was present. The unhappy girl was propped up in bed, and when asked whether she accepted Brown as her husband, never replied. A few minutes later Daisy died, and her mother thanked God audibly. Mrs. Mansfield's conduct was so rebellious that she made an enemy of Brown, and finally sealed her doom by revealing to her boys the secrets of the Endowment House. 'I shall not live to return to England,' she said, 'but I want you to go back and tell our friends and warn people against Mormonism.' When Brown accused her of breaking her oath she did not deny it, whereupon he ordered the boys to go with him to Brigham Young's for a settlement of the property.

"Soon after, the boys came to me with terror-stricken faces. 'Oh,' they cried, 'you can't imagine what we've got to tell you. We were deceived. Brown took us to a place where something was thrown over our faces. Then we were conducted down stone steps into a room lighted with candles. There they brought poor mother almost naked. We were asked whether she had told us about the Endowment House, and we said "no," but Brown contradicted us. They cut mother's throat and disemboweled her before our eyes, and then told us to leave the Territory in twenty-four hours or we'd be treated in the same way.'

"There was no time to be lost. I dressed the boys as country girls, put old sunbonnets on their heads, gave them a letter to an Englishman named Low, who had apostatized and lived on a ranch in Idaho, and had them safely conducted as far as the Warm Springs, three miles out of town. Those boys never were heard of. The next day —, who had been concealed in the currant bushes about my house, said to me: 'It's a very good job for you to have let those boys go, for if they had remained over night you would all have been murdered.'

"I came from England in 1860, when sixteen, because I had a sister here whom I wanted to persuade to return. I was fond of traveling, and I accompanied an English family I knew. We had a comfortable carriage, and had a splendid time crossing the plains. It was like a pleasure party. Once over, I found it almost impossible to get back. Brigham Young insisted upon my marrying—and in those days you had to do as you were told. I never was a good Mormon, and when I went through the Endowment House I kept my mouth shut. I was a second wife. My husband had been a Danite, and one night I followed him and saw things I ought not. The Mormons suspected me. In 1872 I was invited to a surprise party, and made up my mind to go, when the wife of a leading man begged me to stay at home. 'If you go you'll never get home alive,' she said. The night was very foggy, so I dressed in father's clothes, took a stick and walked out. Presently in a dark place I recognized two men, one a relation. After going round the block I returned home.

"In 1876 the Mormons were so afraid I'd help Judge Howard, in ferreting out dubious matters, that I was constantly followed when I went out. One day I met Judge Howard, and he wanted me to give evidence about some people in California. If they were implicated in the affair under consideration at the time, I'm sure they obeyed orders from the church, and left the country in disgust and to escape detection. A man was brought back, gave the necessary information, and was sent home again. The Mormons didn't know what I'd say to Judge Howard, and wanted me out of the way. In July of '76, while visiting a friend, I was asked by her to try some water from her new well, which I did, but it had such a peculiar taste that I drank very little. That little, however, made me feel so ill that I went home and sent for the doctor. I had been poisoned with corrosive sublimate.

The woman who had given me the water came to see me early the next morning, saying, 'I've been thinking about you all night.'

"Well you might," I replied.

"Then she confessed how terribly she felt, and how she had been ordered to poison me. She was a good woman, and I'm sure she wouldn't do such a thing now.

"Besides owning property, my husband has an income of $250 a month. I don't live with him; neither does his first wife. He has a third, who was a hired girl. I am allowed one dollar, sixteen cents and four mills a week for the support of my two children, whom I am educating out of the Mormon church. We have relations in England of good position, and if we go back I do not want to be ashamed of my children. Most Mormons don't care how their children are raised; I do. Don't use my name; I've suffered so much that I have no more spirit to fight. I must earn my living, and I'll make no more sacrifices."

After these significant quotations, and after this equally significant sketch from life, I think the public will agree with me that either Brigham Young, the prophet, his counsellors, and the editor of the Deseret News, are liars, or blood atonement is a principle of the Mormon faith. Behold the two horns of the dilemma. To my way of thinking, "God's people" are impaled upon both.

DOMESTIC BARBARITY OF POLYGAMY.

A correspondent of the Boston Commercial Bulletin thus concludes a piteous story of Mormonism: In about three weeks the wife returned and found the hired girl, who had been left in charge of the house, installed as wife Number Two. Naturally, there was quite a scene, and, as the husband disliked scenes, he divided the family, taking the new wife to a ranch that he owned, several miles from the city. He had not previously developed any fondness for country life, but he now spent all his time at the ranch, merely stopping at his former home for dinner when he came into town on business.

On one of these trips he found his wife hanging distractedly over the cradle of her baby, who was in the worst stages of malignant disorder. As the house was not in holiday trim, and no one had much time to devote to him, he thought he would make his visit brief, but as he turned to go out his wife said:

"You will surely stay with us to-night. The doctor says the baby cannot live till morning."

"Oh, it's not so bad as that, I hope; doctors don't know everything, and to me the little fellow seems to be getting better. Anyhow, I must go back. Jane would be frightened to death if I should leave her alone on the ranch. Besides I have promised to take her to a dance to-night."

He went, and the wife and mother were left alone with the little sufferer. Jane was duly escorted to the dance, but while the husband was paying her this attention his youngest born was struggling in the agonies of death, and when morning came the mother sat alone beside a little waxen figure, whose tossings and moanings were ended forever. And yet the man who furnished this exhibition of utter heartlessness was no worse naturally than his fellows. Perhaps if he had been told, ten years before, that he would spend the night at a dance while his child lay dying, he would have said: "Is thy servant a dog, that he should do this thing?"

A friend of ours who had been a devoted wife for many years, and who had borne all manner of ill treatment from her husband and his second wife, was driven at length by the tortures she endured to attempt suicide. It happened that she took an overdose of the poison that she hoped would end her misery, and the attempt was unsuccessful. While she was at death's door her husband cursed and reviled her, and when she was so far recovered as to be able to totter about the house he told her with an oath that he wanted her to make sure work of it next time, and that he wished she was dead and out of the way.

"And yet," said the unhappy wife, "no woman ever had a kinder husband than he was during the first twelve years of our married life, and even after we came to Utah he was never unkind to me until he became infatuated with that girl. Then, as Mormonism not only gave him the privilege of marrying her, but made it his duty to do so, he began to regard me in the light of an obstacle to his happiness, though heaven knows I proved how far I set his happiness above my own when I consented to the marriage."

"I believe my husband was one of the best men living when I married him." So said the first wife of a Mormon Apostle. "I know that he loved me above everything on earth, and nothing but the baleful influences of Mormonism could have made him what he is now. He was one of the few sincere fanatics who upheld Brigham Young's claims after the death of Joseph, and Young's word was the same to him as the voice of the Almighty. So when he was told to take another wife, he felt that he had received a command from heaven that he dared not disobey. I know his sufferings were almost equal to mine on the dreadful night that preceded his marriage with the girls chosen for him (there were two of them), but having once surrendered his manhood and his conscience to the keeping of Brigham Young the downward course was easy. When he took additional wives (and he continued to do so long after his hair was gray), it cost him no struggles of mind, and no thought of my broken heart and blighted life marred his happiness; yet once he would have borne anything to save an hour's pain."

CHRISTIAN WORK IN UTAH.

The Congregationalists were pioneers in Christian anti-Mormon work, sending their first missionary, the Rev. Norman McLeod, to Salt Lake in December of 1864. A little more than two years later, the Episcopalians opened a mission in the same city with the Rev. D. S. Tuttle as bishop. With the opening of the first Pacific railroad, in 1869, the Presbyterian followed, the Methodists the year after, with the Roman Catholics not far behind. The Baptists broke ground in 1872, but soon suspended work, nor made a permanent beginning until 1881, while the Lutherans postponed their entrance into Utah until 1883. To these seven denominations, which outside of Salt Lake, Ogden, and a few other of the large cities, have each exclusive occupation of fields, should be named the Josephite Mormons, who reject the rule of John Taylor, abhor polygamy, and believe heartily in obeying the law. These, several years since, began to send their elders to call back their apostate brethren to the first principles of Joseph Smith's gospel.

It was early discovered that Christian schools would be invaluable as adjuncts to church work, and Bishop Tuttle founded St. Mark's within a few months of his arrival. The Methodists made an educational beginning in 1870. In 1875 the Presbyterians opened schools in both Salt Lake and Mt. Pleasant, and began at once and rapidly to increase the number. Salt Lake Academy was founded in 1878, under Congregational auspices, the year after several schools of lower grade were started in neighboring settlements, and a year or two later the New West Education Commission pushed vigorously forward.

Progress for the first ten years was meager and painfully slow, as well as gained at terrible expenditure of spiritual force. The Mormon church was most bitter and unrelenting in its opposition, and the Mormon mind and heart were found to be full of idols. Probably more than half the gains have been within six or eight years. A few statistics will give a view of results, so far as figures can set them forth.

The Episcopalians have purchased and own in buildings, etc., real estate worth $140,000, the Presbyterians $130,000, the Congregationalists, Methodists, and Catholics about $75,000 each, the Baptists $25,000, and the Lutherans $5,000. And the educational and religious institutions costing thus to found not less than $500,000 in the aggregate, are maintained at a cash outlay of at least $150,000 a year. Thus the Congregationalists are now expending annually in Utah $45,000, the Presbyterians $42,000, and the Methodists $21,000. Within twenty years not less than one million dollars have been devoted by the Christian churches of the United States to the moral and intellectual regeneration of Utah.

Seventy-eight schools are maintained, of which ten have an academic side, and altogether give occupation to 175 teachers, and instruct each year not less than 7,000 children and youth, drawn largely from Mormon families. The Presbyterians have 31 schools, with 54 teachers and 1,900 scholars; the Congregationalists have 28 schools, 49 teachers, and 1,750 scholars respectively; the Episcopalians have 5 schools, 25 teachers, and 763 scholars; the Methodists have 10 schools, 15 teachers, and 806 scholars. The direct benefit of these schools is incalculable, but the indirect results are even greater. The Mormons being compelled to compete, bestir themselves to secure a higher grade of teachers, to improve their teaching methods, and lengthen their school year by several months.

And finally, to crown all, 34 churches have been gathered, ministered to by 52 clergymen, and containing a membership of 1,648, or, including 850 Catholics and 350 Gospelites, 2,848. In the Sunday-schools are gathered 4,790 children, not including the two denominations just named. If, to the 175 teachers, consecrated women, and many of them from the best houses and educational institutions of the East, and to the 52 ministers, as a rule men of rare devotion, we add, as we should, some 40 wives of ministers bearing their full share of burdensome toil, and 11 other women wholly given to missionary work, we shall have a total of almost 300 representatives of the churches applying themselves heart and soul to the redemption of this single territory.

At first the enforcement of the Edmunds Bill against polygamy, causing intense excitement and kindling prejudice to a flame, hindered seriously the progress of both church and school work. Strictest orders were given that children should be taken from the "Gentile" schools, and in numerous cases through abject fear of ecclesiastical penalty the mandate was for a season obeyed. Preaching audiences, too, fell off. But for a year the growth in attendance has been steady and quite general. Many seem ready to break with the church, and will as soon as it is made certain beyond a peradventure that the arm of the Government is irresistible, and the Nation is determined that polygamy and theocratic rule must go. Religious interest unwaned and almost undreamed of has marked the season just closing.

Nor can it be counted other than exceedingly fortunate and highly providential that for years before the courts were in readiness to make savage assault, and compel the Mormon church to conform to decency and to the moral sense of Christendom, and so to break the pernicious power of the priesthood, men and women of mighty faith and prayer were preparing instrumentalities by which the people, sorely deluded and long oppressed, might be rescued and won to the light of intelligence and to the blessed freedom of a pure Gospel. Surely, with such forces co-operating, and the Divine Spirit inspiring all and lending might, a better day is at hand for Utah of evil name.—Independent.

REFORM NEWS.

BRO. HINMAN IN TENNESSEE.

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., Sept. 20, 1886.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I reached Knoxville on the evening of the 14th, and next day I called on friends and renewed old acquaintances. I have since been most kindly entertained in the pleasant home of Pres. McCulloch of Knoxville College, whose kindness and hospitality are only equaled by his devotion to correct Christian principles and their practical application to all the relations of life. I need not say that Knoxville College—for the education of the colored of both sexes, has been, and is a marked success, and its influence is widely felt in Tennessee and the South. Its large, well built and beautifully situated college buildings, with the magnificent view of the city, and the mountains in the distance make it one of the most desirable places to be and to rest. Knoxville, with its thirty thousand people, is one of the oldest, most enterprising and growing cities of the South. It was the first capital of the State, and has beside Knoxville College, the State University and the State School for the education of deaf mutes. Besides, there are numerous large manufactories. There is a direct railroad communication with Cincinnati and Louisville, as well as the northeast and southwest. The first road started, which was to connect this city with the coast by the way of North Carolina, has never been built farther than Maryville—16 miles. It is now probable that it will be ere long completed.

Many fine buildings have been erected since I was here four and a half years ago, among which are a large and elegant court house, a high school for girls, and the Slater Training School for colored girls under the management of Miss E. L. Austin, who has for a series of years devoted her time, her talent and her means to the education of the colored people of the South and of this city, and who is indefatigable in her devotion to the cause of Christian culture. She has not failed to see the disastrous power of the secret lodge system, and has heretofore, and will still aid us in our work. There has been since I was here a large extension of the street railroad system which now reaches almost every part of the city.

The original settlers of Knoxville were largely from the North of Ireland, and were sound Presbyterians. The impress which they made on society in its forming state is still felt. The numerous Presbyterian churches and colleges in East Tennessee are the heritage from such an ancestry. I have yet to find a Presbyterian minister in Tennessee who does not feel willing to say that he is opposed to the secret lodge system. Nevertheless the lodge is very strong, and ministers and churches are conservative. Precisely the same kind of demoralization that was wrought out by the influence of slavery has been effected by the lodge system, and Christian men are largely intimidated by it.

Nevertheless there are some who are willing to stand up and be counted as opponents of both the lodge and the saloon, and should our national meeting be held here it would meet with a considerable response. It was my privilege to preach to a good congregation at Maryville College yesterday, and last night to lecture on Africa. I am expected to night to lecture on the secret lodge system. I go from here to Maryville, and after I return to Nashville by the way of Chattanooga.

I send herewith a brief statement of the churches and lodges of Knoxville, for both white and colored. There are thirty churches, 23 for whites and 7 for colored. They are as follows: Five Baptist, 1 Christian, 2 Congregational, 3 Episcopal, 1 Hebrew Synagogue, 3 M. E. churches, 3 M. E. South, 1 African M. E. Zion church, 6 Presbyterian churches, 2 Roman Catholic, 1 United Brethren, 1 Lutheran, and 1 Northern Presbyterian. There are 42 secret lodges, of which 6 are for colored and 36 for whites. Of these 12 are Masons, 9 Odd fellows, 3 Knights of Honor, 4 Ancient Order of United Workman, 1 Royal Arcanum, 3 United Order of the Golden Cross, 1 American Legion of Honor, 1 Knights of Golden Rule, 2 United Order of Columbia, 1 Sons of Temperance, 1 Catholic Knights of America, 1 Irish Benevolent Society, 2 I. O. Good Samaritans of N. A., 1 Knights of Wise Men. Besides there are trades unions and Knights of Labor. It will be seen that the altars to Baal are more numerous than those built to the Lord. Among the colored people especially there are many who profess to worship at both. Nevertheless a testimony is given, especially at Knoxville College, where no student fails to learn that he should "have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness." I spoke last night to a good audience and had a most respectful hearing.

THE PRINCETON CONVENTION.

The local enthusiasm at our Illinois State Convention last week was as happy a surprise because of the local interest as there could be disappointment at the limited attendance from abroad. The friends throughout Illinois who were not present lost a grand opportunity for rekindling their zeal and faith, and replenishing their armory of facts and arguments which must be with God's help the weapons of our warfare.

Excellent preliminary work had been done by several "elect ladies" of Princeton; by Secretary Stoddard, who reached the place on the Saturday before the convention; and by Bro. I. R. B. Arnold, who has been engaged as State Lecturer. The Freemasons attempted the annihilation of our General Agent, but he put on his armor like "Valiant-for-the-Truth," and made them know the temper of his sword. The calcium-light exhibition of Bro. Arnold in the Baptist church drew a crowd Monday night, and for three succeeding nights Opera Hall was full and overfull.

The convention opened Tuesday evening with a fine address by Elder J. L. Barlow, president of the Association. He was followed by State Lecturer Arnold who turned his piercing and powerful lime light upon the paganism of the lodge, but stopped in the midst of his instructive entertainment with a promise to continue next evening.

The annual reports were read Wednesday morning, and an address was heard from Mrs. O. F. Lumry of Wheaton, president of the W. C. T. U. for the Eighth Congressional District of Illinois. The address, though mainly on prohibition of the liquor traffic, was an earnest exposition of the principles underlying other reforms also. Prohibition of the evil indulgence of sensual appetite was ordered by the Lord at the first, even before the woman was created this injunction was laid upon Adam. The relations of license of local option, and of entire prohibition were discussed. The father of high license in Nebraska, Mr. Hardie, was now in favor of entire prohibition and ashamed of his former opinions. That measure has resulted in getting the liquor business into the hands of the lowest and most unprincipled dealers. The fight for high license occupies the temperance people with a quarrel while the devil goes right on with his work. The poorer people who drink actually pay the license and so bear the expense of street improvements, leaving the rich to enjoy them. The experience of many towns was conclusive that low license was better than high, and free liquor is better than either. The fallacy was shown of quoting the Bible in favor of moderate drinking. The hand-writing is upon the wall of the temple of Bacchus, but in their blindness and stupefaction the devotees cannot see their impending doom and ruin. The sneers and doubts of people at the weakness of reform work was answered effectually. There is but one "if" about the end and utter destruction of every evil device of men and devils. If the Lord lives, they must have an end. If he dies we will give up the struggle. We must study all the related reforms. We are not to be charged as being people of one idea. While we may be at work, especially in one line, we cannot forget others that may be of equal importance to our neighbors. The W. C. T. U. has forty lines of work in carrying out the noble object for which that great society was formed. Hygiene, heredity, national finance, etc., have been taken up. Miss Willard says we have to adopt the do-everything policy. What have secret societies to do with the temperance reform? people ask. The time is coming soon when the secrecy question will come into our temperance work. I believe the lodge has been the Achan in our camp for years. We must be ready when the battle comes to stand in our place and win. Secrecy drew the attention of the temperance workers from the main issue, and, as Dr. Charles Jewett testified, the temperance lodge work has put that reform back fifty years. We must do the Lord's work in the Lord's way, and that is the open way, as Christ in secret said nothing.

Dr. Wishart, of Monmouth, was called out for a brief speech in the same line of thought. The Bible argument for prohibition and the question of the two-time theory he presented in a clear and earnest manner.

The election of officers resulted in the following choice:

President, Elder J. L. Barlow.

Secretary, H. L. Kellogg.

Treasurer, W. I. Phillips.

Vice-presidents: Rev. W. H. Chandler, Plymouth; Rev. Israel Brown, Dover; M. A. Gault, Chicago; Rev. T. H. Hanna, Monmouth; Rev. Joseph Travis, Chicago; Rev. D. S. Faria, Sparta; Rev. W. W. Blanchard, Paxton; Rev. W. C. Smith, Westfield; Peter Howe, Wenona; T. W. Baird, Tonica; S. E. Holyoke, Galesburg; Rev. O.

Juul, Chicago; Mrs. H. W. Hodgman, Princeton; Mrs. O. F. Lumry, Wheaton.

Executive Committee: T. B. Arnold, W. F. Manley, A. G. Laird, Mrs. M. E. Cook, Mrs. L. N. Stratton, W. I. Phillips, F. Britten, Mrs. O. F. Lumry, H. L. Kellogg.

Rev. Mr. Beckman, of Galesburg, had proposed to give an address, especially adapted to the Swedish friends, but sickness in his family prevented, and Pastor E. Edman kindly consented to make a few remarks in the Swedish tongue Wednesday afternoon. A number of short speeches followed, by Mrs. Hodgman of Princeton; Bro. Rhodes from near Pontiac; Rev. Geo. English and Rev. Bro. Newcomer of Princeton.

John Bradley, of Wyandot, wished to leave his testimony. He joined the Odd-fellows in Mansfield, Ohio, in 1851. John Sherman, now Senator, was a member of the same lodge. He had seceded and wanted to be known as forever opposed to secret societies. He answered several questions by Secretary Stoddard about the initiation in that order, showing that the ritual is made public, and correctly so. Bro. Bradley says that Sherman, who was Noble Grand at the time, and was some 34 years old, came up to him after the initiation was over and said, "Now, Bro. Bradley, if you are ever called upon to testify in court and the question of Odd-fellowship is brought in, it will not be wrong for you to conceal the secrets of the order in spite of the oath you take in court, and if you ever get into trouble, just make it known and we will help you out." Bro. Bradley was then a wild, reckless, unregenerate young man. He believed at the time and yet believes that Sherman meant to have him understand that it was right for him to commit perjury against the State rather than reveal anything covered by his lodge obligation (which is sometimes said not to be an oath, yet was by John Sherman regarded as more binding than a civil oath). He also understood that he was to go to the order to be cleared if ever he got into any wild or criminal scrape which was likely to bring him to punishment. Ohio has no reason to be proud of this part of the record of her Senator; and Sherman has himself evidently repented of his early folly, for in his official connection with the Washington Monument dedication he expressed some repugnance to secret societies.

Wednesday evening was the high tide of the convention. The large hall was packed, and many were standing when Pres. C. A. Blanchard gave his masterly address. Bro. Arnold followed for half an hour, bringing American and Egyptian pagan Masonry together and establishing their identity by the highest Masonic authority, all brilliantly pictured before every eye and burning the truth indelibly into the memory.

Rev. C. B. Ebey, of Aurora, addressed the convention next morning in connection with the presentation of the report of the committee on resolutions, which were adopted after some stirring speeches, as follows:

The blessings of the past year and our hopes for the year to come upon the work in our State call for our devout gratitude to God and for our renewed consecration to the reform; we therefore resolve:

1. That the present times, in which the spirit of lawlessness and anarchy is, through the power of organized secretism, trampling upon the laws and bidding defiance to the civil authorities, loudly appeal to the friends of light and liberty to put forth more earnest and powerful efforts against the darkness and despotism of the lodge.
2. That the gross violation of the law of the Sabbath by Masons, Oddfellows and other secret orders by their official action is a clear evidence of their anti-Christian character, is contrary to good order and Christian civilization, and justly exposes these orders to rebuke and condemnation by every Christian citizen.
3. Since the official report of the condition of the Good Templars throughout the world shows that the order is going down in almost every quarter, the total loss last year being over 153,000, while the present membership is but 270,000; since the best and ablest supporters of the temperance cause like Henry Wilson, John B. Gough, and Charles Jewett, who were for a time members of secret temperance orders, have given us their testimony against these orders as injurious to the movement they attempt to sustain; and since it is a fact which the most indifferent may see, that the temperance reform has, through the open efforts of the W. C. T. U., the American and Prohibition parties, and the churches, been carried far beyond the secret societies, eclipsing their efforts and rendering their organization a needless burden to our communities; we, therefore, overlooking the past, call upon the Grand Lodge or Lodges of the Good Templar society and their subordinate bodies, to disband their organization, and use the time, the energy and the means which will otherwise be squandered in simply turning the wheels and grinding out the ceremonies of a secret lodge, in promoting the holy cause of temperance by those Scriptural, open and manly methods which in the providence of God are soon to crown this reform with glory and success. We, moreover, respectfully urge all churches, conferences and papers and temperance meetings to second our request, and secure an object so desirable and helpful to American society.
4. While as Christian reformers, we maintain our special work, we yet rejoice to aid in every lawful way all other Christian reforms related to this, and

Resolved, that we bid the Woman's Christian Temperance Union God-speed in their noble work so nobly projected and carried on; and we hail the movement suggested by Miss E. E. Flagg of Massachusetts, in her open letter in the Union Signal of August last, that the Union adopt as a special line of work the salvation of American homes from the blight and curse of secret societies.

5. We can never do our whole duty towards the secret lodge till we vote as we pray; and we recommend all patriots to join with us in supporting for civil office only such men as are free from secret obligations to a part of the community, which of necessity prevents them as legislators or executive officers from doing justice to the whole. We commend also the prohibition reform and pray that it may be separated from lodgery, and thus a union with anti-lodge voters be made possible.

6. For every accession to the reform press which antagonizes the destructive influence of the lodge we are thankful to God, and we commend such papers to the patronage of our people, but especially the organs of our movement in Chicago and Washington; and we will devote a proper time of this convention for securing subscriptions and pledges for the Christian Cynosure.

7. Bro. I. R. B. Arnold, having been engaged as State lecturer for Illinois, and the engagement being ratified by the Association, as he will present the religious aspect of Freemasonry in a new and striking manner by the aid of a calcium light; we urgently recommend that the friends of the reform throughout the State aid our lecturer to the utmost of their ability in securing appointments, audiences, halls and expenses, and in every way endeavor to raise the work of the reform in Illinois to the highest possible efficiency.

8. As the constitution of this Association, adopted at Bloomington in May, 1872, needs amendment, and there is no provision in the document for such amendment; and since the Association has not for years followed strictly the article respecting officers and their duties;

Resolved, that the executive committee be requested to present at our next annual meeting a revised constitution which shall more nearly conform to the practice and experience of the Association, and that the officers elected by this convention hold their position for the year.

9. The sincerest thanks of this convention are hereby given to the friends of our work in Princeton for their generous hospitality and self-sacrificing kindness in providing for our entertainment.

Dr. Wishart's address Thursday afternoon on the organization of the counteracting influences which should be directed against the lodge, and the nature of lodge worship was a forcible presentation of the argument on those points and made a strong impression upon all. Several lodge members were present during its delivery. The first national organization made in this reform, he said, was at Pittsburgh in 1868, to operate against the dark and secret organization of the lodge. From that beginning we have gone on to form State and local organizations and put in order the machinery of the press and the lecture work for the education of the people upon this great subject. There yet remains much that we may do to perfect our systems of operations. The necessity of separating ourselves and our children from corrupting influences, such as we believe to exist in connection with the secret fraternities, is absolute. Masons are united in a bond known as the mystic tie; Odd-fellows have their three links as the symbol of close and obligated association. The lodge always pretends that the relation of its members are closer than those existing among ordinary men. But among these members are ungodly men, guilty of crimes, disobedient to God, who hate Christ. Can intimate relations be held innocently with these men? The true child of God can not sit in the seat of the scornful. I know that Lot dwelt in Sodom and came near falling in the destruction of that city, yet Lot vexed his righteous soul with their ungodly ways. So men who may be trapped into these lodges if they hope to retain fellowship with Christ and his people must protest against the iniquities of the lodge and separate themselves from it.

The religion of the lodge I believe to be devil-worship. They who reject the Lord Jesus Christ reject the Father and worship a deity of their own imagination. The unanimous voice of all commentators is that they who reject the Lord Jesus Christ reject God the Father also. There is no true God but the God of the Bible; so those who worship any other deity worship in vain, and those who worship idols and divinities of their own creation "sacrifice to devils and not to God." Dr. Hodge of Princeton Seminary writes in his commentary on Corinthians that we are shut up to either the worship of God or the worship of Satan. This is the uniform conclusion of all commentators. The god of Masonry can not be the true God, because he must be accepted by men of all kinds of religions. It must then be that the worship of the Masonic lodge is paid to Satan. These Masonic lodges are therefore only so many pagan temples.

I used to think sometimes the language of Antimasons extreme and fanatical, but after careful examination am convinced they are right; that the lodge is heathenism in its worship. Masonry, Odd-fellowship, the grange, profess to bring men to a heaven of felicity. They have a regeneration, but it is not spiritual. It is only the Masonic regeneration. Masonic holiness does not consist in being conformed to the law of the Bible, but conformity to the religious authority of the lodge which may be the Koran or sacred writings of Confucius or Zoroaster. I desire to be with Christ in heaven,—that makes the Christian's heaven, but we cannot find Christ in the Masonic heaven, the Grand Lodge above. I earnestly appeal to any member of the lodge present to examine this matter, see how the lodge compels you to a worship from which Christ is cast out and which must therefore be a devil worship, the end of which is destruction.

During the afternoon of Thursday the convention adjourned to the call of the chair to give an opportunity for the formation of a local association which shall include the county. Fourteen names were put on the roll; Rev. George English was elected president, Mrs. Zearing, secretary, and Mrs. Hodgman, treasurer. This new auxiliary begins with enthusiasm and faith and will bless the whole region about with its beneficent labors.

In addition to the committee chosen last year, Rev. William Wishart, D. D., of Monmouth, Mrs. L. H. Plumb of Streator, Mrs. H. W. Hodgman of Princeton and Mrs. O. F. Lumry of Wheaton were chosen to represent the Association in the National conference to be held in Chicago. By request of the president Mrs. O. F. Lumry presided Thursday and performed that duty very ably and acceptably.

The work of Bro. Arnold on the last evening was excellent. He threw upon the canvas a series of fine views of Palestine and lectured upon them, giving such a striking refutation of infidelity and able condemnation of the lodge as every one who heard must remember and ponder. His exhibition of pictures is one of the finest, and with the accompanying lectures form a very popular entertainment, which, at the same time, is a remarkable exposition of lodge paganism.

—The missionaries in mid-China, sent by the Church Missionary Society of England, have offered to maintain, out of their own small stipends, an additional missionary. Such an offer ought to prove a sharp spur to some of our churches at home.

CORRESPONDENCE.

EDMOND RONAYNE TO THE ILLINOIS CONVENTION.

The voice that has so powerfully exposed and arraigned the Masonic lodge in all the Northern States has seldom been heard of late in our reform meetings; but that Bro. Ronayne still maintains his earnest faith against secretism, the following from an eloquent letter read in the State meeting at Princeton amply testifies:

CHICAGO, Sept. 16, 1886.

DEAR BRO. STODDARD:—I have been promising myself for some months back that I would try and attend the Illinois State meeting this fall, but now that the time is near at hand, I find that I cannot be present and so I write you a few lines to express my entire sympathy with the object of your meeting, and to bid you a hearty God-speed in your opposition to secret societies, and particularly to Freemasonry which (the more I consider it and the more I see of its daily operations), I look upon as the greatest curse of the American people at the present day.

There are many reasons why I desired to be in Princeton, Ill., this coming week, and among others I may state that many of the most prominent Masons of that city sat with me in the Grand Lodge of Illinois for a number of years, and especially during the administration of D. C. Cregier of Chicago, and James A. Hawley of Dixon, and it would afford me peculiar pleasure and delight to have an opportunity of telling them once more of the great antiquity of Freemasonry, and how it is cursing and blighting human society to-day in this American Republic, as it formerly corrupted and cursed the civilization of Egypt, Greece and Rome before its pagan ceremonies and accompanying shameful practices were prohibited by the royal decree of the Roman emperor. There is one thing, however, connected with Masonry which has always appeared to me to border very closely on the mysterious, and that is, that in these last days of the nineteenth century, and in the very midst of our advanced civilization, men of intelligence and respectability and claiming and possessing the right of American citizenship, should become so debased and demoralized, to say nothing of the absolute ungodliness of the thing, as to assume the horrible and blasphemous oaths of Freemasonry, and to bind themselves under its awful and blood-curdling death penalties.

Suppose that nothing had ever been known or said about Freemasonry in this country, and suppose that during the recent Anarchist trial here in Chicago it had been brought out in evidence that Spies and his fellow-conspirators and the whole brood of Socialists throughout America, when joining the society were denuded of their clothing, hood-winked and with a stout rope around the neck or body, and in this pitiable condition were caused to take a most horrible oath, binding them to eternal secrecy as to the workings of their society—to keep one another's secrets, to assist one another even at the risk of life, whether right or wrong, and to blindly and unquestioningly bind themselves to obey the rules and regulations of their leaders, as they may from time to time be made known to them: and suppose that in order to make these horrible oaths the more binding they were each one of them further sworn to have their throat cut across and the tongue torn out, the left breast torn open and the heart plucked out, and their body severed in twain, the bowels taken from thence and burned to ashes, and the ashes then scattered to the four winds of heaven—I say, suppose all this had been brought out at the late Anarchist trial and published in the Chicago daily papers as the undoubted secret work of the American Socialists, what would the general public think about it? Would they not rightly conclude that men who would be guilty of such horrible doings, were in heart no better than human fiends, and that the sentence of hanging would be entirely too mild a punishment for such barbarous wretches? And yet all this and very much more is what every Freemason in Princeton—minister and layman, has sworn to do; and what is still worse, if anything this side the bottomless pit could be worse, when charged with these outrageous practices they add falsehood to all the rest of their vile and uncouth buffoonery, and absolutely deny that they are guilty of such vicious and wicked swearing.

I would like to see Freemasonry crushed out of existence. It is no good, and Masons themselves, I mean the great majority of them, know it. But it is a mystery—the germ and root and manifesting the very spirit of "the mystery of iniquity," and so they stick to it even in spite of their better judgment. I have no doubt whatever but that Freemasonry with its countless brood of secretism in every form, together with Socialism, Anarchism, Nihilism and Materialism, will in the near future, form the great basis of that mighty platform upon which "the Man of Sin," the Anarchist will stand, and that Romanism will furnish the prophet in the person of its Pope that shall cause the whole world to wonder after him. For these reasons the voice should be earnest, and the tone entreating in urging upon all God's people to "Come out from among them and to be separate and not touch the unclean thing," and warning them in the very language of the Holy Ghost to "have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them." Your brother in the truth of Christ,

E. RONAYNE.

ANOTHER CONVENTION LETTER.

Peter Howe, Esq., of Wenona, Ill., was one of the warm friends of the State Association whose face was missed at Princeton; but along with $20 for expenses he writes of some interesting facts in Princeton history:

WENONA, Ill.

Until to-day I thought I would be in Princeton to see (if I can't hear) what is said at the convention. I often think I would like to see some of the old buildings I helped to erect. The summer of 1840 I worked on Shurleff College at Alton, Ill., some three years after E. P. Lovejoy was killed. In 1841-2 I worked on the State University at Columbia, Mo. The summers of '43 and '44 I worked in Princeton, Ill., on the old court house at $1.50 per day, and also helped build the first brick store and dwelling in the place for Benj. Newell. This was about the time Henry Clay in a speech in Congress called us Northerners "Mudsills," "Greasy mechanics," "Small-fisted farmers," etc. Well, I was a greasy mechanic once and now am nothing but a small-fisted farmer. Then I was a Freemason, but I aimed to do honest work (and no oath swindles) and I have got along to be past 70 without any lodge help. It seems like a dream to go back to 1843 when I first heard Owen Lovejoy in Princeton preach against slavery; it was that brought me to see the "sum of all villainies" in its true light. And Nathan Brown in the American Baptist turned the lodge wrong-side out in my view, and now the Cynosure is the big gun to expose the lodge and bring it down, I hope soon. May harmony rule in your convention and much good be done is my great desire.

P. HOWE,

CHICAGO PULPITS.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Christians would naturally expect the first sermons after vacation to be peculiarly full of the Gospel. But in our city papers the pleasing words are chiefly of travel, and of the bountiful hand of nature—to use the words of the philosophical Professor Swing: "Nature has said along with Christ, 'If ye shall ask anything in my name I will do it.'" This is probably a new reading to most of our readers whose only asking of the Father is through Christ. However true it may be that God has made nature to produce fruit from seed to reward the industry of man, we cannot admit the propriety of a preacher exalting nature to equality with the Son of God. There is enough of open infidelity among us, and more than enough of other gospels deluding the unwary without having our pulpits pandering to their fancies and making void the Gospel of the Son of God, who is the only way to the Father. If Prof. Swing were a Freemason like Drs. Thomas and Lorimer, such teachings would be in keeping with the religion of Masonry and palatable to their Masonic hearers while church members. In the three leading city papers we have twelve columns devoted to sermons in different churches: two columns for Talmage of New York, two for Prof. Swing, two for Sixth Presbyterian church (J. H. Worcester), and the rest of the space has a mixture of Methodist, Episcopal, Baptist, Congregational, Unitarian and Catholic. The reporters must have their hands full to give each class a satisfactory outline. The readers of the Cynosure lose little by the absence of such reports from your columns, for they can get more true Christianity in ten minutes' use of the New Testament than in hours reading of the heterogeneous mixture of man's wisdom with revealed truth so often seen in our Monday morning papers. T. H.

HARD TIMES BUT GOOD COURAGE IN SOUTHERN ILLINOIS.

SPARTA, ILL.

I am sorry to say that pecuniary straitness makes it impossible for us to send a delegate from this country to the State convention. Our wheat crops failed for two years—this year a partial crop at prices not more than covering cost of production—and failure of corn from drouth leaves the people with barely enough for subsistence and taxes. Many people are in debt and have not been able to pay interest these three years. Lands are mortgaged and are fast passing into the hands of capitalists. The only source of income is milk. But milk at 75 cents per hundred pounds only keeps people along. It is impossible to lay up and make a fortune as in former times.

I have no doubt Providence means all this apparent evil for good. People were living too fast. Extravagance was the rule; economy was unknown. The rising generation lacked the virtue of their parents. But if the present pressure continues it will of necessity bring back the old-time virtue. I have no doubt it will prove a blessing in disguise. But meanwhile it paralyzes our plans and cripples our efforts.

I have not lost my interest in the cause of open and fair dealing. I see still more clearly than I did before that God will destroy secret societies by their increase and the mutual conflict of themselves. We shall stand still and see the salvation of the Lord. Meanwhile our testimony is needed and light to show that all secret societies are of the same origin and tend to oppose the best interests of society at large. Our part is that of John Baptist, to cry, "Repent ye for the kingdom of God is at hand." The revelations of the present declare that it is near, even at the door. Society cannot much longer bear secretism. The criminality of stated secrecy is now quite apparent to those that have eyes to see. The machinery of secrecy is much better adapted for the devil's work than for any good. Those that prepare and keep in readiness the machinery that is fitted to design and place dynamite bombs for the destruction of government, person and property, are the real enemies of society as well as the actual perpetrators of crime. To the so-called benevolent secret orders we say: You are the originators. Spies, Schwab, Parsons, and Co. are taking up the work you have well begun and are showing better than the "Anti's" can how inimical to public interests the whole business of secret associations is.

Let the light shine. The day is beginning to dawn. The work must be pushed to a close. God's time has almost come. "It is time for thee to work for they have made void thy law." The laboring man ought to see that between heartless corporations and secret societies he is about to lose his liberty both for Sabbath day and week day. The worst of it is the spoliation is made with his own consent. It is in vain to say they are forced to join a secret society or work on the Sabbath. True manhood can not be forced. When conscience acts it will find a way.

But our times are noted for pliable consciences. Men make necessity of their own weakness. A minister at Bloomington once said in a public meeting that a converted railway engineer asked him what to do, as his family depended on his earnings. The advice was to "protest against it and go on." Unless we suffer for our principles we shall lose them.

I say to you, peace and prosperity. I shall labor with you in my own sphere and in my prayers.

Yours truly,

D. S. FARIS.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE WRITINGS OF JOHN.

LESSON II.—October 10, 1886.—Jesus Before Pilate. John 18:38-40.

GOLDEN TEXT.—I find in him no fault at all.—John 18:38. [Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. Pilate an example of the time-serving politicians who now deliver up Christ to be crucified by yielding their convictions of right to the popular clamor. vs. 28-32. There is in Revelations a terrible sentence which classes together the fearful and unbelieving. The coward, afraid to stand up for the truth, is apt to reach the same practical result as the scoundrel who openly professes his disbelief. Pilate was really one of the murderers of Jesus as much as Caiaphas. There is no doubt that he sincerely desired to save him, or rather to avoid the responsibility of judicial murder. This desire to shirk responsibility and lay it on the shoulders of others is not only weak and cowardly, but the attempt usually turns out as in Pilate's case, a miserable failure.

2. Pilate's lost opportunity. vs. 33-38. To the Roman governor the man before him must have seemed a mere fantastic visionary. He had no understanding of such a kind of kingship as that to which he laid claim, a kingdom not of this world, and whose servants were forbidden to defend it with carnal weapons. With calm, undaunted majesty Christ meets his half-mocking question, "Art thou a king, then?" with the most decided affirmation. He came into the world to bear witness to the truth—the truth about himself, his divinity, his Messiahship, his relations to God as his Son, his relations to man as King and Saviour, and not one iota of the truth would he conceal to save his life. Thus he was a perfect example for all witnesses to truth in the coming ages. To Pilate as to the whole heathen world the truth was the philosopher's stone, continually sought but never found. Could it be that this simple peasant Jew was in possession of a secret undiscovered as yet by the wisest savants? In exactly what spirit he put the question, "What is truth?" it is difficult to say, but we know it could not have been asked in sincerity, for instead of waiting for the answer which might have held for him eternal life, he turns abruptly away, and the lost opportunity passes by as lost opportunities always do—forever.

3. The Choice—Barrabas or Christ. vs. 38-40. Instead of pursuing a just, straightforward course and releasing Jesus at once, it occurred to Pilate to take advantage of the usual Jewish custom of releasing a prisoner at the Passover. But when he himself had pronounced Christ innocent of all fault, what consistency or justice was there in releasing him like a condemned malefactor? He gained nothing by his weak vacillation. Not this man but Barrabas, "is the cry of the rabble. So our politicians who truckle to rum and Mormonism will gain nothing in the end. Men choose Barrabas instead of Christ whenever they silence their own convictions of right in order to be on the popular side. On nothing is this more frequently done than in reference to the question of Masonry. How many ministers and professing Christians choose the lodge god, his hands stained with robbery and murder, to the pure and innocent Jesus! The politicians who deliver up Christ to be crucified in the persons of the weak and helpless victims of the rum Moloch, are acting to day the part of Pilate, and if placed in his situation eighteen centuries ago they would have done no better. In their cowardly fear they too would have delivered up Christ to his crucifiers.

LIGHT FROM THE WORD.

When was the first attempt made to evade personal responsibility? Gen 3:12, 13. How is Christ's kingdom described in Dan. 2:44; 7:14? Must both nations and individuals always choose between Christ and Barrabas? Deut. 30:19, 19.

From Peloubet's Notes.

Mockery of Jesus by the Servants and Others.—In the court of Caiaphas's palace, from three to five o'clock Friday morning (Matt. 26:57, 58; Mark 14:65; Luke 22:63-65). When the preliminary examination was through and the members of the Sanhedrim thought they had charges against Jesus sufficient to condemn him to death, they adjourned till day-break, for a larger assembly, and because a meeting before that time was illegal according to their rules. During these hours of waiting those who had Jesus in charge began to mock him. That a prisoner condemned to death, poor, with no followers, could be their Messiah, whom they expected with a splendid court and magnificent army, seemed to them supremely ludicrous. And so, blindly, they mocked and jeered the best of men, the King of kings, who has even now manifold more followers than Rome in her glory could boast.

The Sanhedrim, re-assembled at daybreak, condemn Jesus to death.—Council chamber near the temple gate, Shushan; five o'clock, daybreak, Friday morning (Matt. 27:1; Mark 15:1; Luke 22:66-71). This meeting was a morning session convened to ratify formally what had been done before with haste and informality. Both the hour and the place of the former meeting were illegal, as well as their forms of trial. Therefore it was expedient that a regular and legal sitting should be held as early in the morning as possible. This was in their regular place of meeting, for Luke's "They led him into their council" might better be rendered "into their council chamber." One object of this morning session was to consult how they might put him to death; for although they had condemned him, they had no power to execute the sentence.

Pilate's interview with the Jews outside the Judgment Hall of the palace.—Vers. 28-32 (Luke 23:2). About six o'clock A. M. (John 19:14, which refers to the beginning of Pilate's trial.)

"But that they might eat the Passover." Here is a curious illustration of the fallibility of conscience in this supposition of the Pharisees who feared defilement from entering the house of a heathen, but none from the endeavor to secure by fraud and violence the condemnation of their Lord.—Abbott.

"Take ye him and judge him according to your law." Try him in your own way, for it is your law, not the Roman, he has broken, and inflict such punishment as is allowed to you by the Roman government. They could excommunicate him, and scourge him, etc., but not put him to death. But this did not satisfy their wishes, or carry out their plans. Even Pilate recoiled from such injustice, and from being a mere tool in their hands.

"Signifying what death he should die. Rather, by what manner of death, that he should be crucified. Had the Sanhedrim executed him as a blasphemer or a false prophet, he would have been stoned.

Pilate examines Jesus within the Judgment Hall.—Pilate's palace. About six o'clock Friday morning (John 19:14). Vers. 33-38 (Matt. 27:11; Mark 15:2; Luke 23:3).

"And said unto him, Art thou the King of the Jews?" In all four Gospels these are the first words of Pilate to Jesus, and in all four there is an emphasis on "thou." The pitiable appearance of Jesus was in such contrast to the royal title, that Pilate speaks with a tone of surprise.

—Cambridge Bible. The emphasis of the question is remarkable. The word "thou" stands in the original at the head of the sentence, as if Pilate would say, "Thou, thou so humbled, despised, handed over to me as a malefactor,—art thou the king of the Jews?"—Schoff. The question may mean either, "Doest thou claim to be king?" or, "Art thou the so called king?"

"Or did others tell thee of me?" In the political sense which a Roman naturally gave to the term, "King of the Jews," Jesus could repudiate the title; but in the religious sense given to it by every believing Jew, Jesus must accept it, whatever might be the consequences of his avowal. Otherwise he would have given occasion to the report that he had denied being the Messiah. Everything thus depended on the question whether the charge proceeded from Jewish or Gentile lips.—Godet.

"My kingdom is not of this world." Not a political, secular kingdom like the kingdoms seen in the world. It was to be over the world, but entirely different in principles, in methods and aims from the kingdoms with which Rome dealt. And therefore it would not come in competition or rivalry with the Roman government.

"That I should bear witness unto the truth." He was a king, a leader, a ruler in the kingdom of the truth, and he came to teach its great principles. Every other kingdom was founded on force, on selfishness, on conquest, on the losses of those overcome. Christ's kingdom was founded on truth, on reality, on the true principles of righteousness.—P.

"Heareth my voice." Opens his heart to his teachings, and obeys. Prejudice and self-interest lead men to reject him. But since what Jesus teaches is absolutely true and good, no one can be a sincere searcher after truth, and reject his teachings.—P. Here Jesus opens the door of salvation to Pilate. If Pilate had been candid and earnest, he would have sincerely inquired further. It was probably the crisis of his fate.—G. W. Clark.

Pilate's second conference with the Jewish leaders.—Outside of the judgment hall. About six o'clock Friday morning. Ver. 38 (Matt. 27:12-14; Mark 15:3; Luke 23:4).

Pilate sends Jesus to Herod.—Herod's palace. Still early Friday morning (Luke 23:5-12). This is Pilate's second effort to release Jesus.

Pilate attempts to throw the decision upon the Jews.—Outside Pilate's palace. Vers. 39, 40 (Matt. 27:15-28; Mark 15:6-10; Luke 23:18-25).

IN BRIEF.

There is a great deal of red tape in the French army. It took a French soldier, who was reported to be dead, five years to prove that he was alive.

Illegitimate births are steadily on the increase in France, the figures being 68,227 in 1880, 70,079 in 1881, 71,305 in 1882, 74,213 in 1883, and 75,754 in 1884.

Less than four out of each hundred Americans lived in cities in 1790. The city population had increased in 1840 to 8 per cent, and is now 22. There are only seventeen States with more people than New York City.

It is estimated, taking the report of 1880 as a basis, that there are now 100,000 practicing physicians in the United States. It is also estimated that 75 per cent of them carry and dispense, in whole or in part, their own remedies.

There is a regular Japanese bank in New York City, with every facility for the transaction of banking business, sale of bills of exchange, letters of credit, purchase of specie, etc. The gentlemen connected with the bank are all natives of Japan, and men of intelligence, refined and highly educated. Several of them speak English fluently.

A curious skull has been found on the shore of Carpenter's Island, in Chester River. It is about ten inches in diameter, measuring from the protuberances on the sides. The maxillary bones are shaped like a bird's beak and extend twelve inches beyond the skull. The whole resembles the head of a huge bird, which, were it not for the position of the eye sockets, that point backward, and the orifice for the spinal column at the base of the brain being so high, it might be placed among that order of animals. The bone is evidently modern, as small particles of dried flesh are attached to portions of the skull. The upper jaw was full of large teeth. The finder calls it a modern ichthyosaurus. — Wilmington, Del., Special.

Rev. Dr. Henson, of Chicago, lectured at Chautauqua, his subject being "Fools." Rev. Dr. Vincent, who is somewhat of a wag, introduced him as follows: "We are now to have a lecture on fools by one— (long pause and loud laughter)—of the wisest men of the country." The lecturer advanced to the desk and responded as follows: "I am not half so big a fool as Dr. Vincent— (long pause and loud laughter)—would have you suppose."

An old Scotch lady was told that her minister used notes. She disbelieved it. Said one, "Go into the gallery and see." She did so and saw the written sermon. After the luckless preacher had concluded his reading on the last page, he said, "But I will not enlarge." The old woman called out from her lofty position, "Ye canna, ye canna, for your paper's give oot!"

Mr. Broadhurst, the first English workman to become a cabinet minister, is described as a sturdy, thick-set man, with a determined mouth and a merry twinkle in his eye. His determination and his humor go together to make up an admirable character. They enable him to be persistent and pleasant at the same time. He will joke you into agreeing with him, just as he is always ready to agree with you in joking with him. He is as shrewd as he is sentimental, and has an eye for what is practical as keen as a hawk's. No man is better fitted to give advice to his friends. He is a great favorite in what are called the upper circles of politicians as any in the house. He is a devout Wesleyan, a widower, and a lover of a good story and a quiet dinner.

The Christian Cynosure.

J. BLANCHARD.

HENRY L. KELLOGG.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 30, 1886.

A HEBREW PROPHECY said: "There shall be a famine, not of bread, but of hearing of the word of the Lord." Let one look over the newspaper exchanges in any office and see the miserable dearth of principles, and even of facts and reform notices which concern humanity, and say whether the Hebrew prophet was not right. These things must be, but the end is not yet.

THE VENERABLE DR. GEO. B. CHEEVER writes to a friend concerning the Wheaton Baccalaureate: "Have you seen Pres. Blanchard's sermon on The New Departure? It was the most powerful production I have ever known from his pen. It was published in the Cynosure. If you should have preserved that paper I would be greatly obliged if you would enclose it to me. I desire to make use of it in an important direction."

DR. RICHARD S. STORRS does not return from his summering at Shelter Island till October. He has been sick, and is said to be still infirm. Dr. Howard Crosby is hale and sound. He warmly approves of the principle of the proposed Chicago "Congress of Christians," and has written the editor of the Interior and a note (introductory) to Dr. McCosh on the subject. He made college secret societies unpopular while Chancellor of the New York University by advising his Faculty to wholly disregard and ignore them. He once belonged to one in college, but has had nothing to do with one for forty years but to write and print against them.

THE ANTI-SALOON CONFERENCE in Chicago Sept. 16th drew from the whole United States by the whole power and prestige of the Republican party 187 delegates. The Prohibition third party convention in Worcester just one week previous had 849 accredited delegates. The Chicago Republican anti-saloonists disagreed on their fifth article, which was strongly opposed by Mr. Wright of Iowa and by Mr. Dodge of Michigan, because it recognized license and taxation of liquor. The Worcester convention was harmonious and enthusiastic throughout. The New York Tribune gives no number of delegates to the misnamed Non-Partisan Worcester convention, which met the next week. Its promoters sent printed and written circulars to such men as Mr. David Manning, beseeching them to take seats on the platform. From all we can learn from the papers it was regarded as a Republican cry for aid, and was a flat failure. The New York Herald (Ishmaelites) says of the Chicago meeting:

A Republican magnate from the center of the State was found at a telegraph office chewing his finger nails and waiting for news from Chicago. He was fully as solemn as his Democratic contemporary, but he had hopes, which was more than could be said of his political adversary. Said he:

"We had to do something to kill the third party, or weaken it if we couldn't kill it, and the anti-saloon movement ought to fill the bill. Of course all the temperance people belong to our party, and if it hadn't been for that infernal St. John"—here the speaker looked like a fiend in agony—"we wouldn't have lost the State, and the—well, the offices in '84."

EARTHQUAKES AND VOLCANOES.

"He looketh on the earth and it trembleth. He toucheth the hills and they smoke," Ps. 104: 32. If a believer in the God of the Bible should attempt to depict what has happened and is happening in Charleston and "in diverse places" around our globe, he would involuntarily fall into the above language. We have carefully read what the newspapers have to say, and not one, from first to last, even suggests what makes earthquakes in a way to enable us to guess when a shock is coming or what natural cause produces it; why volcanoes bellow, or why the earth shakes; what makes the sulphurous smell in cyclones in the air, as well as from the earthquake crevasses about scoured and desolated Charleston; or how these tremors cross the sea from London and Smyrna, as the dispatches showed they did. In such times the Scriptures say, "The wise men are fools." The geologists have long been expounding the earth's inwards, but they are dumb like the rest of us, when earth shakes, volcanoes belch, artesian wells send up mill-streams, and cyclones destroy towns and villages, and none guesses where or when or how they will strike.

One thing is apparent. The people of the most favoured realm on the globe, into which the earth's populations are pouring on either coast, are substituting lodge-worships for the worship of God; putting the Bible out of schools; turning religion into sorcery without a law or Gospel; praying to such spirits as have leisure to harm them; turning even insurance companies into temples of self-projected religion; and putting Christian civilization into their cauldron, to reconstruct society by legitimizing murder and lust. May it not be that God, "by whom all things consist," is displeased, and arising to shake terribly the earth."

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

"DEACON GILES'S DISTILLERY.."

NEW YORK CITY, Sept. 18, 1886.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I spent night before last in the beautiful mansion of Dr. Geo. B. Cheever, brother of Rev. Henry T. Cheever, so well and gratefully known to our readers. He has built his home on the crown of a smooth highland, dark with forest trees. He is heart and soul with the proposed Congress against the lodge in Chicago, and will write for it when the convention is held; but about four score years, with abundance of literary labors, will prevent his speaking to us.

Dr. Cheever is the Cervantes of the temperance cause. When the writer was a student in Andover, he (Cheever) was a young pastor in Salem, Mass. Dr. Beecher's "Six Sermons" had blazed like meteors against intemperance; but liquor drinking was popular, as was duelling and Knight-Errantry when Cervantes wrote Don Quixote; and the effect of his "Deacon Giles's Distillery" was nearly as great as the effect of that wonderful book. The popular liquor was "New England rum," and New England was not ashamed of it. The distillery in Salem was owned by a deacon, who kept Bibles in a corner of it. Substituting fictitious names, Mr. Cheever wrote a legend, expressing this revolting combination of occupations and ideas. His story leased the distillery to the devil, disguised as a gentlemanly liquor-dealer, who summoned fiends to run it. The work went bravely on by night. The old building racked and roared. Blue sulphurous flames, suggesting something lower than earthquakes, affrighted belated travellers and alarmed the astonished city. But the distillery stood in the morning, and never had alcohol been manufactured so fast. And under the double motive of money and drink, both said to have been influential with Yankees at that day, the deacon's speculation might have been popular; and, as the devils took their pay in Bibles, his mission might have worked in hell as those early missions worked in Africa in the days of John Newton, when missionaries were sent out in slave-ships ballasted with rum. Morning came; the fiends departed:

"Each clutched his book and out he run
From Deacon Giles's distillery."

But alas! daylight revealed on the long rows of barrel-heads, filled and mounted, inscriptions in bluish red light, revealing the true nature of the liquor within; and even following the casks to the saloons, and appearing over the doors and on the signs, such as: "Consumption sold here," "Poverty by the barrel," "Crime by the glass," "Liquid fire and distilled damnation, wholesale and retail," "Murders, Delirium Tremens and Suicides, warranted pure." The distiller and his patrons employed a ruffian, Elias Ham, to cowhide the young clergyman in the street; and, though none of them were named in the legend, they imprisoned him for libel in the county jail.

But the jail was carpeted and turned into a prayer-room and parlor; and the vivid truths placed by Mr. Cheever's imagination on those casks of liquor are now the courts of indictments in courts; and saloons are nuisances at common law.

Mrs. Cheever is justly proud of her husband, but not so good a reformer as he. She hates and dreads Jesuitism, the head secret society of the world; and because the Pope hates Masonry, she leans in favor of the lodge. But because popery and Masonry fight each other, like pugilists, to see which shall get the stakes, their fighting does not prove they are not friends at bottom, and of the same sort.

PROHIBITIONISTS AND THE LODGE.

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 25, 1886.—Our friends of the Christian Statesman and Instructor are deeply in earnest for the National Congress against the lodge at Chicago. They will aid it with their presses, they say; pray for it, and attend if it not impracticable at the time. They warmly approve of the Chicago committee of seven, and await their action with interest.

I have been and conversed with Mr. Van Fleet, Gov. St. John, Dr. Emory Potter, and Mrs. W. I. Pond of Saratoga; Mr. Knight of Worcester; Drs.

McCosh and McCloskie of Princeton College, Dr. Funk of the Voice, New York; Gen. Fiske, who is now canvassing for Governor of New Jersey, with increasing prospects of being elected; and yesterday I conversed with Mr. Joshua L. Bailey, who declined the late nomination for Governor of Pennsylvania, and Rev. I. C. Babcock, head and leader of the Good Templars in the State. Every one of the above named has been in the secret temperance lodges, and only the last, Mr. Babcock, has expressed the least unwillingness to give them up, and he, though he has been a Mason, yet dislikes the lodge, and only adheres to and defends the Good Templars because he honestly believes the temperance cause would suffer financially if the lodges should be given up. Mr. Babcock has been a laborious and successful worker for temperance.

I was delighted with my acquaintance with Dr. Funk of the Voice. He is opposed to secret societies, and said American politics were, in their nature, hostile to secret cabals. He suggested whether we could not unite politically in only open methods, and leave the religious discussion of the secret orders to the clergy and religious conventions. He is a prudent, practical man, and his paper "voices" the Prohibition party admirably. In the cause of Prohibition, wherever we have been, the progress is astonishingly rapid. "Truth springeth out of the earth, and righteousness looks down from heaven." But Satan is not dead or inactive, and will never yield till God's key is turned on him.

I go back to Princeton to-day, and visit some more of the good men in that admirable place. I hope then to see Messrs. Talmage and Storrs of Brooklyn, N. Y., and will take time to speak of the men and things which bear on the proposed Chicago Congress and the deliverance of this land from the scourge and curse the most dangerous of all, because pulpit, press and platform are silent while it crawls steadily on. THE APPEAL TO THE GOOD TEMPLARS.

We call attention to the report of the Illinois convention held last week at Princeton, and especially to the resolutions, which make a most unusual, yet we believe, reasonable, request of the order of Good Templars in this country. The resolution asks that they disband their lodges, give up their secrecy, and go to work like honest men and Americans for the temperance cause pure and simple, according to their long-standing professions.

The reasons for this request are three: 1. The fact that so many thousands are leaving the order from the conviction that the mission of temperance lodges is done. The Illinois Grand Lodge of Good Templars, just met, is reported in the papers as having gained 2,200 the last year; whereas the reports published by the "Right Worthy Grand Lodge" at Richmond in May last show that Illinois actually lost 6,100 members. California lost 8,300; Maine, 9,500; Michigan, 5,000; Pennsylvania, 6,200; Wisconsin, 7,200; and the whole order, 153,000.

2. The best temperance workers of the past and the present were and are against the secret order business.

3. God is against it, for it is manifest that the agencies through which his Providence is operating mightily for the overthrow of intemperance have put the cause so far ahead of the lodges as to be almost out of their sight.

If the Good Templars are honest in their professions of temperance, they must see that every reasonable consideration calls on them to leave the husks of the lodge and give them undivided effort for temperance and victory.

The request of the State Convention that their action be re-echoed by the temperance press, by conferences and temperance meetings, we hope will be heeded. The order will thus hear the voice of thousands who are devoted to the reform and will more willingly follow a counsel which seems wise to many of their fellow-citizens.

AN UNSAFE TEACHER.

The Christian Standard of Cincinnati was so very critical upon the remarks in the Cynosure about infants and their salvation, that it is surprising upon what a false hypothesis it assumes to advise respecting the religion of Freemasonry. When accurate information upon the philosophy of the lodge is so easily obtained, it must be a very low Christian "standard" that can say there is not much religion about the lodge, and it may not be wrong to be a member, as in the following reply to a correspondent:

Is the Masonic fraternity a worldly institution? Is joining it conforming to the world?

J. W. McCARROLL.

There is certainly not much religion about the Masonic institution. It does not claim to take the place of the church. It aims, we believe, mainly at earthly good. It does not follow from this, however, that it is wrong, or conforming to the world, to become a member of it. We know good men who belong to the Masonic order, and they see nothing wrong in any of its obligations. Other good men who have been members see much to condemn, and feel it their duty to warn the people against the institution. Without pronouncing on the merits of the controversy, it is safe to say that Christians do well when they are careful that the religion of Jesus Christ shall occupy the first place in connection with all their good deeds.

From what version of the Bible does the Standard get its notions of worldly conformity? or what exceedingly genteel prophet or apostle made it "safe" to say that men "do well" to be "careful" about whether their good works have a good percentage of Christianity or not. We mourn for men who have no better standard or adviser in religion than this.

THE ILLINOIS STATE LECTURER.—The commendation of Bro. I. R. B. Arnold by the State convention has not a particle of flattery in it. His calcium light pictures and ready comment as he threw them brilliantly one after the other upon the canvasses were undoubtedly one of the most popular and attractive parts of the convention. He appeals to the reason and conscience of men by two senses—hearing and sight. The most vivid impressions are believed to be those received through the eye; and few who follow Bro. Arnold through his explanation of the Egyptian, Grecian and Norse mythologies, and marks the striking identity of Freemasonry in its religious philosophy, will ever forget that the lodge is pagan and as it rejects the name of Jesus Christ must be anti-Christian. These lectures should be heard in every town in the State. The expense is easily met by a small admission or a collection. Let there be a welcome for the State lecturer in every town, and let the friends write early to this office to engage a visit.

QUESTION YOUR CANDIDATES. Make lodge men feel the loss of your vote.

—Bro. W. B. Stoddard wrote last week from Chillicothe, Ohio, where he remained over the Sabbath, going on to Circleville and Fairfield county. His lectures at New Vienna and Samantha were well attended and interesting.

—Daniel Hill of New Vienna, Ohio, the projector and original editor of the Friends paper, the Christian Worker of this city, gave good assistance to the Ohio lecturer and is to speak at the annual convention in that State. He is a leader among the Friends.

—The Prohibition State ticket for Ohio is as follows: Secretary of State, Rev. H. R. Smith; School-commissioner, Rev. L. M. Hagood (colored); Supreme Court judge, Gideon T. Stewart; Clerk of the Supreme Court, H. J. Way; Board of Public Works, A. Teachout.

—A remarkable letter appears in the Conservator of Dayton stating that the debts of the United Brethren missionary society and educational institutions amounts to between $300,000 and $400,000. The divisions in the church fostered by Shuey, Weaver and others in order to admit the lodge is making these debts an increasing burden, with possible repudiation or bankruptcy in the end.

—The Kansas Prohibitionists nominated at Emporia, for Governor, C. H. Branscombe; for Lieutenant-governor, D. W. Houston; for Secretary of State, N. B. Klaine, of Dodge City; for Auditor, C. H. Langston, (colored); for Attorney-general, W. S. Waite; for Treasurer, Wm. Crosby, of Valley Falls; for Superintendent of Public Instruction, Mrs. C. A. Cuthbert, of Belle Plain; for Associate Justice of the Supreme Court, V. B. Paten, of Emporia.

—The Living Way of Memphis is increasing its list of pastors who are willing to be known as opposed to the lodge. The late attack of its enemies has not resulted so disastrously as its authors desired; on the other hand Bro. Countee's determined stand for his rights as a Christian and an American are having suitable recognition. The Gate City Press of Kansas City and the World of Indianapolis speak in warm sympathy with his work.

—In reprinting August 19 the resolutions of Merrill Lodge of Good Templars, Los Angeles, Cal., Capt. A. D. Wood, editor of the temperance organ for Southern California, the Weekly Censor, was mentioned as a member. This was an error from incorrect information. This lodge was one of the largest in the State and wealthiest, and its rejection of the authority of the Grand Lodge of California, in connection with most of the lodges in the southern part of the State, is prophetic.

—Pastor Seguin, the ex-Romish priest of this city, is hard at work solving the problem often asked by ministers and churches, "How shall we reach the masses." He has determined to go down in the slums and meet the hoodlums themselves. Last Sunday he opened the third mission among those he intends opening and keeping this year with the assistance of God and those who understand what it is to work for God's glory. Harmony Hall on Union St., near Indiana, was full of what is termed in Chicago "the tough ones." There will be four meetings in the evening in that place. Bro. Seguin is in need of means to pay the seats.

—In a private letter to Pres. J. Blanchard received at this office Elder Nathan Callender says: "I am encouraged by your noble testimony in Saratoga, N. Y., Aug. 29th. Your plea for a union of the reform parties meets my conscience and my judgment. Can we not in the next year accomplish such a union? Let all just measures be employed to effect an end so important. Are lodge-bound men so infatuated with lodgery as to persist in lugging this obnoxious carcass into the sacred temple of reform? Such words as you placed before such a body of thinking men, must and will tell. Making much allowance for the blinding power of lodgery on the people, still it seems to me that such facts, such arguments must produce a good effect."

PERSONAL MENTION.

—Rev. M. A. Gault is spending two weeks lecturing in the vicinity of Sioux City, Iowa.

—R. J. Gault, youngest brother of Rev. M. A. Gault and a graduate of Monmouth College, is attending the Theological Seminary at Alleghany this year.

—Rev. C. C. Foote of Detroit is spending a time with a sick son at Mt. Etna, Iowa. May the days of such service—though of love—be cut short.

—Pres. J. Blanchard visited Princeton, New Jersey, and Philadelphia last week and then returned north to Saratoga on the homeward way. Mrs. Blanchard was meantime visiting relatives at Tarrytown on the Hudson.

—H. L. Hastings, editor of the Christian, Boston, and author of one of the most popular and complete answers to the mouthings of Ingersoll, kindly called at the Cynosure office a few days since on his way to Minnesota. He is to return this week and speaks Wednesday evening in the Chicago Avenue (Moody) church, and possibly at other points in the city before returning to Boston. Bro. Hastings has the honor of suffering imprisonment for the truth's sake. It will be remembered that last year he was arrested, along with Dr. A. J. Gordon, the evangelist William Davis and others for preaching on Boston Common Sabbath afternoon. They were fined or the cases dismissed. But the matter was too serious for such a disposition. Bro. Hastings renewed his preaching last spring, believing that he had a constitutional right to speak quietly to those who wished to hear the Gospel. He confined himself, however, to a simple reading of the Word of God; yet the Irish Catholic and saloon influence was so strong among the Boston officials that he was arrested even for this, and the local court decided against him, and he went to prison for a few hours, appealed to the higher court and there gained what he had endured so much to secure—a decision in his favor and in favor of freedom of speech as guaranteed by our Constitution. Mr. Hastings is a remarkable man and is accomplishing in connection with his publication house at 47 Cornhill, Boston, a remarkable work.

—Our reform singer, Bro. George W. Clark, of Detroit, lately visited Port Austin in Huron county, Michigan, and has the following appreciative notice in the News of that place:

"Those who could appreciate 'sweet sounds' coming from the human voice, were well entertained by the recent visit to Port Austin of Mr. Geo. W. Clark, the famous composer and singer. We first met Mr. C. at the great Southwestern Liberty Convention which met in Cincinnati in 1845, continuing its sessions three days. He was then in the vigor of manhood, and his musical voice thrilled the vast assembly as no other could. Our last place of meeting was at the Prohibition State Convention at Lansing in July, and it was to fill a promise then made that he spent a few days among the people of Port Austin. He added to the interest of the memorial services Sunday morning by leading in the musical department; and in the afternoon he entertained a gathering of young people with remarks and songs. Concerts were also given Sunday and Monday evenings, at which large and appreciative audiences were present."

TO MICHIGAN READERS.

Let there be a grand rally at our coming semi-annual gathering commencing Oct. 12. All our meetings are important. It has come to pass that the first impressions a community gets of a cause, come from the interest manifested by attendance from abroad. Our cause is a peculiar one. We are necessarily few, and at each meeting of this character there should be a good showing from abroad. To do this there will necessarily be sacrifice; but blessings are always attended with sacrifice, and one great lesson Jesus taught was self-denial.

We have no programme to announce. Pres. C. A. Blanchard and Bro. Stoddard are to be here, no preventing providence, to occupy the evenings of the convention, and helpers will be present to make the day services pleasant and profitable.

Now let us have a good attendance. Let all who possibly can get here on the noon trains from each way, Tuesday, Oct. 12. Let us put in full time Wednesday. See notice elsewhere, as to meeting trains, etc. H. A. DAY, Secretary.

TO THE FRIENDS IN NEW HAMPSHIRE.

As you will see, by the official notice of the Secretary Rev. S. C. Kimball, the tenth annual meeting of the New Hampshire Christian Association is to be held in Manchester. We need a general rally at this meeting. My friends, do you see that we do? If not, look at it again and look till you see the truth, and then I think you will see it as I do. Look at the situation as related in many ways to the prosperity of Christ's kingdom and your heart will burn with a holy desire to see measures devised and efforts put forth that will secure the blessing of our Heavenly Father in our work.

We need first to come together and praise the Lord for what has been done. Then let us begin now to arrange our affairs with a purpose to attend the meeting, and persuade all we can to come with us to aid in the good work of the Lord.

Second. Let us see to it we are willing to do or give whatever the Lord wants us to do or give.

Third. Let us earnestly pray with faith-filled supplications that the Holy Spirit would prepare us to come together and grace our meeting with his presence. For the Holy Spirit only can sanctify our hearts and impart wisdom to enable us to show our fellowmen that they are in bondage to infidelity, Sabbath desecration, the rum traffic, secret societies and the anti-Christ spirit and customs, of our age, and enable us to lead them to Jesus who alone has power to deliver them from this bondage and bring them into the light and liberty of the children of God. ISAAC HYATT.

THE NEW HAMPSHIRE ANNUAL MEETING.

The tenth annual meeting of the New Hampshire Christian Association will be held in Arcanum Hall, No. 939 Elm St., Manchester, October 23, 24, 25, beginning Saturday at 2 o'clock p. m. and closing Monday evening. Our president, Rev. Isaac Hyatt of Gileford, will preach the annual sermon. The General Secretary of the N. C. A., Rev. J. P. Stoddard, has written favorably of attending, and is hereby cordially invited to do so. Henry J. Pierson and wife, evangelists of Boston, are expected to lead the devotional meetings. Sunday afternoon session will be addressed by Christian women, including Miss Annie M. Ray of the N. H. W. C. T. U. Miss E. E. Flagg of Wellesey, Mass., Mrs. L. E. Saulpaugh of Goffstown, Mrs. Caroline W. Bixby of North Weare and others. Other able and pious men will address the convention. A full programme will be published at the earliest possible moment. We should be glad to welcome to our meeting Bros. Campbell of New York, Conant of Connecticut, Pratt, Leadbetter, McFall, Lincoln and Graves of Massachusetts, Laird and DeWolf of Vermont, Goddard and Jackson of Maine and other friends of reform. Manchester can be conveniently reached by rail from any direction. Friends will go directly to the hall which is only a few minutes' walk from the depot. Horse cars are also available. Should any arrive before the hall is opened, they can report to Elder Charles L. Baker, 12 Wilson Road, which is also convenient. Entertainment free to members of the convention and invited guests.

We gather in the name of the Lord to advance pure religion and to resist the popular evils that have well nigh fastened themselves upon the church. We expect the Lord to make bare his arm for the encouragement of his people and the confusion of his enemies. One service will be held for those who wish to consecrate themselves fully to the Lord, and another for those who wish to present their bodies for Divine healing. S. C. KIMBALL, Secretary.

THE HOME.

SHOW US THE FATHER.

Show! Can He show
To mortal eye
What mortal eye was never made to see?
Can man the Father of eternity
By vision know?
Crimson and gold
Of early dawn,
Topaz and emerald and amethyst,
In radiant flashes through the sunset mist,
He can unfold;
The stars of snow,
The pearls of dew,
Chalice of flower, cedar of Lebanon,
Mountain of lightning-riven rock whereon
The sun-rays glow;
In time of spring,
A dainty shred
Of sky, wrought deftly for the bluebird's vest,
A gleam of light where orioles make their nest,
And sit and sing;
Love's angel face,
The tender-eyed
And delicate, lit with the sweet, soft rays
Of mother fondness, all life's weary days,
God's gift of grace;
These patiently
He showeth us.
What more? For that wild prayer, "Show me," he said
The darling seen in the rock-cleft hid.
"Thou canst not see."
Yet mystery—
Listen O heart!—
"Not know me, and so long hast with me been?
He that hath seen Me hath the Father seen."
Now dost thou see
That Christ hath trod,
With feet of love,
Wearily, our sad way on earth, that He,
By the dread sacrifice of Calvary,
Might show us God! —Sel.

ON DRY LAND.

On dry land was an excellent place for Jonah, but it would have been a very bad place for the fish that swallowed him. Every creature needs to be in its element, elsewhere it is in trouble, and exposed to constant danger. Beasts, birds, and fishes all have their proper sphere. Within it they are a success; out of it they are a failure.

So in human life, men never succeed well when out of their element. A dandy in a blacksmith shop, or a country bumpkin in a fashionable parlor; a Christian in a scene of worldly pleasure, or a worldlying in a place of spiritual worship; all feel the inharmoniousness that exists between them and their surroundings.

Especially is this true when worldly people intrude themselves into the church of Christ, and undertake to introduce their worldly arts and practices among the people of God. Sometimes it occurs that among a company of humble disciples there comes some wire pulling politician, some designing, crafty, selfish worldlying, who at once proceeds to use in religious circles the arts which he had learned and practiced in connection with secular business and politics. He manages the church, he controls the Sunday-school, he runs the society, he stands at the head of everything, he rejoices to know that his word is law, and that all who disapprove his course must stand aside.

He expects to succeed in managing religious enterprises, as he has in directing worldly or political affairs. To his surprise, success does not crown his efforts; the enthusiasm he looked for is lacking; instead of a party of political hangers-on, shouting his victories, following at his heels, he finds a company of lowly disciples of the Lord, refusing to tread in his steps, and turning sadly away from the scene of his triumphs. Some may have courage to boldly withstand and openly rebuke him; most suffer in silence, but fail to respond to his calls, to indorse his projects, or countenance his course.

He is astonished. He expected to ride upon the crest of the wave, and make a name which should endure. He forgot that there can be no real religious prosperity without the blessing of God, and that no man, however adroitly he may deceive man, is able to deceive the Almighty. No craft or guile can be hidden from Him whose eyes are as a flame of fire. The Holy Spirit, which searches all things, cannot be imposed upon by specious reasoning, political craft, or worldly clap-trap; and hence there is disappointment.

The trouble with such a man is, he is out of his element. He has climbed up in the church without leaving his worldly principles behind him; he has endeavored to put on the new man without first putting off the old; and he is trying to run religious institutions without reference to Christian principles. He is out of his place, and would feel far more at home in the mud and mire of political chicanery.

But he runs his race, until at last, checked by the bold rebuke of the fearless, baffled by the passive resistance of men who will not yield to his machinations, and deserted at last by the unthinking crowd who, though ready to recognize success, have not the slightest idea of following a defeated commander, he abandons his leadership, and drops disgusted out of sight. He is gone never to return. He has found at last that there are spiritual powers with which he cannot cope. He has learned that he is out of his element, and he betakes himself to more congenial scenes.

It is a blessed day for the church of God when one of these "unclean spirits like frogs" leaps from his perch on dry land, where he does not belong, and dives out of sight into the mud, where he is more at home. And however much men may pity his failure, and deplore his fate, yet they rejoice that they are well rid of an uncomfortable and unpracticable man. The best thing a fish out of water can do, is to get back again, as quickly as possible; and the best thing a man out of his element can do, is to find his way back where he belongs. A politician who has worked himself into the church; a wire-puller who has learned to manipulate religious institutions; a pettifogger or a rogue who has undertaken the management of the work of God, does well to take himself out of the way with all possible dispatch. A man who cannot preach himself, but claims the liberty of controlling and gagging men who can preach; a man who cannot write, but who wishes to rule and domineer over those who can write; a man who has little standing at home, but who goes among strangers and strives to acquire standing abroad, is soon found out; and the best thing he can do is either to seek to be fitted for the Lord's service, or else to get back into his element, where he can wallow in slime and mire, and crook and turn himself to his heart's content. The church of God was never made to be ruled, run, and controlled by worldlyings, politicians, pettifoggers or men destitute of stability or moral principle. The sooner such men find their element and their place, the better for themselves and all concerned. —Christian.

LOVE THE BRETHREN.

"We know that we have passed from death into life, because we love the brethren. He that loveth not his brother abideth in death." 1 John 3: 14.

If, therefore, you find that you love Christians as Christians, and because they are Christians, you may not only express the hope that you have been born again, but you may know it. There are, however, many young converts who are seriously troubled when this scriptural evidence of regeneration is presented to them. They are acquainted with persons who are not Christians, whom they tenderly love; and perhaps they are acquainted with professors of religion, for whom they do not feel any peculiar affection; and hence they are apt to doubt the genuineness of the work of grace in their own hearts.

Now you should remember that you are not required to feel any repugnance towards your unconverted friends; neither is the ground upon which love for the brethren rests congeniality of natural tastes. It is a higher ground than this, which a simple illustration may enable you to understand.

There formerly lived in a Western State, a couple, who lost by death their only child—a beautiful little girl; the mother's health rapidly declined under the burden of her mighty sorrow. During their temporary stay in an Eastern city, they visited an orphan asylum, and found the children assembled in a large room of the building to engage in some exercise. At first the bereaved mother looked upon the scene with the same sadness and indifference she had exhibited during their journey East; but suddenly her eye resumed its former brightness, and the blood came again to her pale cheek, as eagerly pointing to one of the orphans, she exclaimed, "Oh, I must have that child, I must have that child for my own." The superintendent was standing near, and inquired why that one child out of scores around her, had excited such special interest. "Because," she replied, "she is the very image of my own lost little Mary."

This, then, is the reason why you will love the brethren. It is because they bear the image of your beloved Lord, and wherever you behold that image, no matter among what denomination of Christians it may be found, if you are a Christian you will certainly love it, and find your heart going out to Him on whose character and life it is impressed.—Rev. James H. Brookes, D. D.

OUR PRESIDENTS.

Father Washington left us united and free,
And John Adams repelled French aggression at sea;
Boundless Louisiana was Jefferson's crown,
And when Madison's war-ships won lasting renown,
And the steam-boat was launched, then Monroe gave the world
His new doctrine; and Quincy his banner unfurled
For protection. Then Jackson, with railways and spoils Left Van Buren huge bankruptcies, panics and brolls.
Losing Harrison, Tyler by telegraph spoke;
And the Mexican war brought accessions to Polk.
Taylor lived not to wear the reward of ambition,
And Fillmore's sad slave law stirred up abolition:
So, compromise falling, Pierce witnessed the throes
Of the trouble in Kansas. Secession arose
Through the halting Buchanan. But Lincoln was sent To extinguish rebellion. Then some years were spent Reconstructing by Johnson. Grant lessened our debt;
Hayes resumed specie payments; and Garfield was set
On Reform, which, as Arthur soon found, came to stay,
Now for President Cleveland good citizens pray.

RESULT OF DISOBEDIENCE.

The following true story will show the necessity of living dutiful and obedient lives; and also will point out the moral: Disobedience to parents will always result in punishment.

"Come, Frank, let us go over to old Tommy Hanson's orchard and get some apples; only yesterday I saw them, and they made my mouth water; he has gone to the mill, and there's nobody home but old Mrs. Hanson, and she's lame and can't catch us," said Johnny Dobson, a youth of about twelve years of age, who was then playing truant.

"That's all nice enough, but I'd rather go to the creek and get Mr. Foster's boat; it is only tied to the bank by a thin rope, and my jack-knife will soon part it. We can sail down the creek a mile or two, and then go around by the orchard and get the apples. Mr. Foster said he was going over to the mill with father—"

"And how will we get the boat back to its place before Mr. Foster returns?" interrupted Johnny.

"Oh, he's a mean old fellow anyhow, so we'll let the boat drift down the creek into the Dalaware, and it will serve him right for his meanness," said Frank.

There was a third boy in the group, who had not yet spoken. This lad was called Payson. He was a boy about the age of the other two; he had been a good boy, but was led off by wicked companions. His father had told him not to go out that afternoon, as he would want him to go on an errand in about an hour. Whilst his father had gone up-stairs but a short time, he slipped out into the back yard, jumped over a neighbor's fence, and, hastening off a short distance, joined his wayward confederates. After listening to the other boys, he now spoke:

"I don't know about them apples, as Tommy Hanson has got most of them off the tree, and I think we might have our trouble for nothing; you know it, Frank. As for the old boat, it leaks; and as I was nearly drowned once, I'll back out of that game. Now I'll tell you what we can do; only a short distance from the orchard there's a bird's nest, and there are three nice little birds in it. Mr. Green says so, and he ought to know, for he lopped off some dead branches of the tree, where the nest is, only yesterday. There will be a bird for each one of us—I'm in for this. I know you'll go, Frank, and the majority rules," said Payson.

After a little further parley, it was decided that Payson's proposal was the best, and the three bad boys started off to rob a bird's nest. All were in fine spirits, as they anticipated a good time, and each would soon be in possession of a nice little bird.

Arriving at the tree, Payson was selected to climb it and rob the nest, as he was the most active and supple. Never thinking of what his father told him, nor of the command, "Honor thy father and thy mother, that thy days may be long upon the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee," he nimbly ascended it; up he went, higher and higher; he crept far out on a limb, away out on its end. He heard the little birds chirping; poor little things! What a shame and a pity! What a sin to tear them away from their loving, watchful mother! Then the mother-bird flew away alarmed, and he saw them stretch their tiny necks, as if affrighted. Just when his hand almost touched the nest, the limb snapped and Payson fell to the earth! His wicked companions fled, and two men passing by seeing the senseless boy bore him to his father. He was taken to the hospital, where for a time his life was despaired of, his arm was dislocated at the elbow and broken in two places. The doctor told three of his uncles, who called to see him, that he would get well, but with a stiff arm.

Readers, all his trouble came upon him through his disobedience to his parent. How sinful to rob a poor bird's nest! Shun evil company; the way of the transgressor is hard; remember this true story of Payson's disobedience and its results.—Youth's Evangelist.

DRINK WATER.

"Of course I will drink water," says George. "The horse and the ox drink it, and how strong they are! The trees drink it, and how tall they grow! My dog Tray drinks it, and how wise he is! I'll drink it, too, for I would like to be strong and grow tall and be wise."

"I'll drink water, too," said Clara. The birds drink it, and how sweetly they sing! The flowers drink it, and how bright they look! My pets all drink it, and they are gay and loving and happy. So if I wish to sing smoothly, and look bright, and be gay and loving and happy, I will drink water. And I will try to get all my friends to drink it, too; for I see that in the houses where they drink beer and gin and rum they are not so good and happy as they are in the houses where they drink water."

And what says the man who has grown up to years and seen much of the world? He says those men do the best work who do not use alcoholic drinks. The coalman can carry more coal in a day when he drinks water than when he drinks beer. The men who work in the heat and blow glass and make up iron can do more work if they take no strong drink. Men who work in the fields can work more hours if they drink only water, or water with a little oatmeal or fruit-juice in it.

Men who work in banks or on railroads can be trusted more safely if they do not even drink wine or beer. Men who have money of their own take better care of it if they do not drink. Men who drink die off three times as fast as men who do not drink. Three-fourths of the men in prison would not be there if they had drank only water. So the good man who has seen much of the world says water is the best drink.

And we will all drink water.—Youth's Temperance Banner.

PROUD OF HIS SISTER.

The Chicago Tribune relates the case of a young man who was regarded as a phenomenon, because he took his sister to all the best entertainments, and actually devoted himself to her during the lecture and concert season. Being praised for his unusual attention to his sister, the young man promptly and proudly replied:

"No, there's nothing wonderful or extraordinary about it. She is the only woman I know in whom I have the most thorough confidence. She is always the same, always pleased and affectionate, and to tell you the candid truth, I'm afraid she'll go and marry some of these imitation men around here and be unhappy all her life.

"She has nobody else to look to, and I'll take care she does not have to look to anybody else. I suppose some day a genuine man will come along. If he's a genuine man, I won't object. Until he does come, she's good enough for me; and if ever I find as good a girl, I'll marry her."

The example is most commendable. A young man would do well to seek his sister's society until he finds another lady as good as his sister.

THE APPLE IN THE BOTTLE.

On the mantel-piece of my drandmother's parlor, among other marvels, was an apple in a bottle. It quite filled up the body of the bottle; and my childish wonderment constantly was, "How could it have got there?" By stealth I climbed upon a chair and examined the bottle to see if it would unscrew or if there was a joint in the glass. I was satisfied by careful observation that neither of these theories could be supported; and the question remained to me an enigma and a mystery. One day, walking in the garden, I saw it all. There on a tree was a bottle tied, and within it was growing a tiny apple. The apple on grandmother's mantel-piece was put into the bottle while it was little, and it grew there. More than thirty years ago we tried this experiment with a cucumber. We laid a large bottle on the ground and placed a tiny cucumber inside it. It grew until it almost filled the bottle, when we cut it off the stem and filled the remaining space in the bottle with alcohol and corked it up tight. We have the cucumber now; and it looks as fresh as when first corked up. So sins will grow, if allowed in the hearts of children.—Youth's Companion.

A DOG'S MEMORY.

Last summer a dog owned by a gentleman in New Jersey broke his leg. A doctor who was visiting in the place set the leg and cared for the dog until he was entirely well. The doctor went away, and has not met the dog from that time until a few days ago, when he was driving through the village. He saw the dog, who came up to the carriage and recognized the doctor at once, although he had not spoken. The dog showed the wildest joy, barking and jumping about the carriage, even following it up for some distance. I wonder if dogs ever forget to be grateful!

"A boy twelve years old was the important witness in a lawsuit. One of the lawyers, after cross-questioning him severely, said: 'Your father has been talking to you and telling you how to testify, hasn't he?' 'Yes,' said the boy. 'Now,' said the lawyer, 'just tell us how your father told you to testify.' 'Well,' said the boy, modestly, 'father told me that the lawyers would try and tangle me in my testimony; but if I would just be careful and tell the truth, I could tell the same thing every time.'"

Christianity is the regeneration of our whole nature, not the destruction of one atom of it.—Robertson.

TEMPERANCE.

SENATOR WINDOW AS A PROHIBITIONIST.

In the late Anti-saloon Republican convention in this city, after the loud applause that welcomed him had ceased, Mr. Window addressed the conference at length on the great issue before them.

Republicans, he said, had here assembled under call, as true and loyal Republicans, and through the Republican party it was hoped to work out what would be of great good to the American people. He had not the slightest thought of trying to organize a new political party. Such a thought had entered into the purpose of few, if any, of the delegates to the conference. The old party that had freed the slave; that had dignified human labor; that had enacted the homestead law, giving homes to the homeless; that had saved the Republic in war and maintained her honor in peace; that had rescued it from Democratic bankruptcy and advanced it to the first place among the nations of the earth—this party was good enough for Mr. Window. Remembering its history, he was guaranteed that embracing this new issue it would carry it on to victory as it would every other issue it had undertaken. It was an issue as grave as any party had faced in the past and almost as difficult, but the grand old party had not hesitated then and it would not now. They had met as Republicans, who did not believe in the right of the saloons of the country to dominate the country. They had not met to dictate but to indicate the opinion of a large portion of the party that the Republican party would do well to meet the issue tendered it by the liquor power of the country.

The liquor power could be regarded from two standpoints—the moral and the humanitarian and the political. The former was the higher, but the convention had met to consider the question in its political aspect. The liquor power had gone into politics to stay, and had challenged the whole country to meet it or submit. In Minnesota no man was allowed to be voted for who did not bow down to the Moloch of the infernal regions. Considered from an economic aspect the enormous waste by saloons was simply incomparable. Sixty thousand men a year became the victims of the traffic, and from five hundred thousand to six hundred thousand were yearly on the way. The loss in the productive power of this army, at $1.50 a day, could be easily figured, as well as could the extent of taxation necessary to support crowded almshouses and jails.

The loss to the country in this way was estimated at $900,000,000 per annum. He could not say if this was right, because the Democratic party in Congress had refused to authorize an investigation into the liquor traffic, but taking the half of this amount if the government should levy one-tenth part of the tax which the saloons levied there would be a rebellion in less than ninety days. They were told they could not interfere with this business because there was a great deal of invested capital, but the government could better afford to pay $1,000,000,000 and then make one grand bonfire of all this property, and still the Nation would be richer at the end of the year. The Nation could better afford to pay the cost of the late rebellion every fifteen years than permit the rum traffic to go on. The great issue must be met and conquered or the country would be lost. The saloon in politics was an ally of anarchy, and struck deadly and most damning blows at the most tender and vital part of the Republic. The home and the ballot-box was the holy of holies in a true republic like ours. Destroy the homes and you strike at the heart of the Republic. If 500,000 of these homes, instead of continuing nurseries of order, religion, truth, and patriotism, were converted into drunkards' homes, who could estimate the power of the poisoned dagger? The other most sacred treasure of the Republic was the ballot, and here again the saloon had struck a most deadly blow. If there was one evil greater than another it was the corrupt use of money in connection with the ballot. Let it be once understood by the people that elections were not carried by the choice of the people, but by the use of money, and you have struck down all confidence in the future of the country. When you have gone to the polls conscientiously only to find that fifteen men were marshaled in a saloon around the corner to entirely overcome your vote you cease to have much interest in the ballot. There was no organization until the saloon power came into the field that openly boasted it intended to carry the election by the use of money. Some party must meet it on political grounds. Saloons were the colleges that teach anarchy, disorder, riot, and ruin.

The saloons had captured the Democracy body and soul. At the last Democratic State convention in Minnesota the saloons had put in power a man who was the incarnation of saloon tendencies. In the last fifty years the cities had grown four times as fast as the country. If such continues the increase, when as now the vast plains no longer attracted settlers, how great would be the governing power of the saloons in the large cities. The saloons elected the Mayors and Councils of Chicago. If there was a Chicago gentlemen present the speaker apologized. New York, controlled by its bosses and saloons, had become a Sodom of political corruption; yet in the National election New York State was often counted on to turn the scale, and it was New York City that turned the scale for the State, so we stood a rum-ridden Nation to-day. The saloons were officered 200,000 strong, and there were, say, five men controlled by each, making 1,000,000 of men against temperance, and with the purpose to wield their power. Was there patriotism enough in the land to rise and rescue it from such domination? The money power of the saloon was greater than the money power of the late Confederacy. But courage as well as cowardice was contagious, some one had said. There were enough people in the Republican party to rally to the standard. They were not all teetotallers, for some took an occasional glass, but they were not yet ready to be governed by the rum power.

The Prohibitionists were men of excellent principle, but they would do better to follow their own theories more than they did. Mr. Window then drew an historic parallel for the reproof and instruction of Prohibitionists. The old abolitionists, he said, had denounced slavery as the sum of all villainies and the Constitution of the United States as the instrument of the evil one. Then came the Free Soil party, saying we must be law-abiding and observe the Constitution. Then they joined the Republican party and elected the grandest patriot modern or ancient times ever saw—Abraham Lincoln. Now supposing the Republican party should take a stand for the restriction and repression with the ultimate purpose of destroying the rum traffic, why should the Prohibitionists, who have been traveling under the abolition standard, stand aloof? With such an issue the Republicans would fight with the Prohibitionists for the repression and suppression of the traffic, and by their united efforts they would make a notable day in history.

THE MURDERED HADDOCK.

One of the most interesting and impressive services ever held in Fort Austin, Mich., was that of a late Sunday morning, at the M. E. church, in memory of Rev. Geo. C. Haddock, the temperance martyr, shot by saloonists at Sioux City, Iowa. Tasteful and appropriate decorations and mottoes, with beautiful flowers, had been arranged by the W. C. T. U., and a large audience were present. After the usual opening, an account of the assassination was given by Wm. F. Clark, Sr. The character of Rev. Haddock was presented by Dr. Clemon. Some lessons to be drawn from the event were most forcibly presented by Rev. Mr. Farnum, of Cincinnati. Geo. W. Clark, of Detroit, sang two or three songs; one prepared for the occasion to the tune of "Old John Brown," was given with great effect, the audience joining in the chorus. Similar services to the above are being held all over the country.

LITERATURE.

ALDEN'S CYCLOPEDIA OF UNIVERSAL LITERATURE. Vol. IV. Cable to Clarke. Pp. 477. Price 60c. John B. Alden.

The continuation of this useful work to the name McDonald Clarke gives us specimens of the writings of such American authors as Geo. W. Cable, Alexander Campbell, Andrew Carnegie, the wealthy iron mill owner of Pittsburgh, Geo. B. Cheever, Will Carlton and others, along with Cæsar from the Latin, Cervantes and Castellar from Spain, Calvin and Chateaubriand from France, Carlyle and Chalmers from England, and so through the whole range of literature which has been written or translated into English. The biographical notices are brief, of necessity, but the selections are well edited and the volume is remarkably cheap.

DEEP BREATHING as a means of Promoting the Art of Song, and of curing the Weaknesses and Affections of the Throat and Lungs, especially Consumption. By Sophia M. A. Ciccolina. Translated from the German. Pp. 48. M. L. Holbrook & Co., New York.

The author of this small volume is a singer of some note, and after an experience in loss of voice which is shared by many, she happily recovered the use of that noble organ. Her experience is given briefly in this enthusiastic essay on the voice and the organs of its production. The method of breathing, she advocates so eloquently and practices with so good effect upon invalids, is what is known as the abdominal, long ago practiced by the old Italian singing masters, but sadly out of date in our times of corsets and tight lacing. A thousand blessings would follow the general practice of breathing herein advocated. Music teaching in our public schools should make this object a part of the training. An appendix contains valuable facts concerning the atmosphere.

MEDICAL HINTS on the management of the Singing Voice. By LENOX BROWNE, F. R. C. S. Pp. 77. M. L. Holbrook & Co., New York.

The reader of this pamphlet will not be disappointed if he has high expectations from an author of so high repute among musicians and such eminent practice as his position as Surgeon to the Royal Society of Musicians, to the Royal Albert Hall Choral Society, and to Her Majesty's Italian Opera indicates. The book is thoroughly practical and should be studied with care by those to whom God has given the pleasant voice of song. Illustrations are used when necessary to more perfectly elucidate the text.

The publishers of the American Agriculturist will forward a copy free to every person who has been a subscriber to that paper, but is not now one (provided they send their name on a postal card), to the end that they may see the great improvements that have been made in this periodical.

A feature of the coming year of the Century will be a series of papers on "The Food Question," written by Professor W. O. Atwater of Wesleyan University, who for years past has been engaged in special investigation in this field. The object of the articles is to present some of the results of late scientific research which have a direct bearing upon our daily life,—such as, the substances of which our bodies and the foods that nourish them are composed; the digestibility of food; the proportions of nutrients appropriate to different classes of people; food and the labor question; food and morals, etc., etc. This subject is an important and almost neglected branch of the labor problem.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—The Seventh-day Baptist General Conference was held last week at Milton, Wis. The Missionary society reports that the receipts this year amounted to $15,000. The society has missionaries in China, England, Holland, and in ten States.

—A convention of colored journalists has lately passed a vote expressing their approval of the course of Mr. Moody toward the Negro race in his campaign last winter in the South.

—The corner stone of a new Young Men's Christian Association building was laid at Worcester, Mass., on August 27. The dedication address was made by Dwight L. Moody.

—At a recent meeting of delegates from various trades societies in New York City, composed of clerks in several retail businesses, letters were read from the Rev. Dr. Moldenke, of St. Peter's Lutheran church, and the Rev. Dr. P. F. McSweeney, promising to urge members of their congregation to make no purchases in retail stores on Sundays. The prevalence of the opening of retail stores on Sundays, in the east part of the city, is deprecated alike by the clerks who are compelled to labor on that day, and by those having the religious welfare of the people at heart.

—A meeting was recently held in England to bid farewell to a party of emigrants to embark for South Africa to found a new colony on total abstinence principles. Eight men; women and children compose the party. They proceed to some part of Kaffraria.

—There are twelve foreign missionary societies in Germany, supporting 517 missionaries, with 2,560 native helpers, having in charge 193,975 converts, of whom 73,000 are communicants. The total contributions to these societies last year were $1,276,800.

—William Taylor is moving up the Congo and its tributaries with eleven of his picked missionaries.

—Last year 10,000 converts of the Wesleyan Missions in Sierra Leone and the Gold Coast of Africa raised a jubilee fund of $75,000.

—The Rev. W. F. Bainbridge has been made Superintendent of the City Mission and Tract Society of Brooklyn, and the Rev. George F. Pentecost, D. D., has been added to its Board of Directors. Mr. Bainbridge says: "If the proposal to locate fifty missionaries immediately in the destitute districts of Brooklyn be carried out, then the supply would be only one quarter in proportion to that of London, where there are five hundred missionaries and loud calls for more."

—The two churches in Charleston—St. Michael's and St. Philip's—which have been ruined by the earthquake, both possess great historic interest. The tower of St. Michael's was the chief or only beacon in the period of the Revolution, and was painted black when the assailing British fleet was anticipated, in order to prevent their use of it as a guide to the harbor; black against a blue sky was a less certain land-mark than white. Close beside the church is the tomb of John C. Calhoun. Both St. Michael and St. Philip were frequent marks of Federal gunners during the war. St. Philip's was founded in 1711, though not used until 1723. Its tower was 200 feet in height.

—The permanent committee on temperance, in its report this year to the General Synod of the Presbyterian church at Minneapolis, said: "Apart from the Christian church, the W. C. T. U. is unquestionably the most potent factor in the temperance reform." The Rev. Dr. Smith, of Allegheny, Pa., was elected chairman of this committee for the ensuing year. He is a strong prohibitionist, and husband of the W. C. T. U. State president of Pennsylvania.

—A convention of evangelists and mission workers is being held this week in Maria M. E. chapel, Chicago. The evening services are conducted by Rev. F. A. Hardin, D. W. Potter, Rev. C. S. Uzzell, A. J. Bell, Colonel George R. Clarke, Rev. Mr. Haley. George D. Elderkin, of Oak Park, conducts the singing. Evangelists, mission-workers, and all interested in Gospel work are earnestly invited to be present.

—Dr. T. C. Starr of California who has brought several tons of honey to this city for sale, has donated 120 pounds to Bro. W. T. Ellis's house for reformed men.

—A serious fire has occurred at Arthington or Namo Station (English Baptist Missionary Society) on the Congo. The stores, which were built of grass, with their contents, were completely destroyed. Baron von Nimptsch, Chief Administrator of the government of the Congo Free State of Leopoldville and one hundred and forty Kaffirs rendered assistance in vain. The loss is about fifteen thousand dollars. Arthington is the only station on the river in connection with this society whose houses and store buildings were of grass. The fire is supposed to have originated in the carelessness of boys who were hunting rats. It is expected that the London Baptist churches will meet the loss without going to the Provinces.

—An Inter-denominational or Pan-evangelical Conference opened on the 29th ult., at Valley Camp, about nineteen miles from the city of Pittsburgh. The attendance was quite large, including many prominent ministers of various denominations from all parts of the United States. Among the denominations represented are Lutheran, Baptist, Episcopal, Protestant Methodist, United Presbyterian, Reformed Presbyterian, and other Presbyterian churches. The opening address was delivered by Rev. M. L. Gotwald of Springfield, Ohio, his theme being "Union without Absorption the Glory of our Christianity." Among other subjects discussed were: "Our Nation a Christian Nation and the Outgrowth of Christian Principles;" "How can we best subserve the interest of our American Sabbath?" and "What should be done to meet the demand made by liquor dealers and infidel clubs that the laws protecting the Sabbath and regulating the liquor traffic should be repealed?"

—The colored Baptists of the Northwest have sent two missionaries to the Congo field, and are showing increased interest in that mission. They have a membership of about 930,000 in the United States; and though many are very poor, it would be worth the sacrifice required to send the Gospel to the land of their fathers if, like the churches of Macedonia, "the abundance of their joy and their deep poverty abounded unto the riches of their liberality."

AN APPEAL TO THE FAITHFUL.

Did I not know that there were those who read the Cynosure who are fully consecrated to God with all their substance, willing to listen to worthy calls for aid, and willing to respond, I would not burden these columns with this letter. But being in the large family of Our Father, I feel free to present the following facts before you all:

Last June a church within the bounds of Ingham charge was sold by the sheriff in default of the payment of a certain mortgage, which has been hanging over it for about five years, and upon which the surrounding community has not been able to pay the interest. There is ability in the vicinity, but it is in the hands of Masons or their sympathizers. I have labored there two years, hoping that the way would open for discharging this debt among themselves, but I see no hope. I have lectured in the church against Masonry, and the noble band of members have stood by not disposed to compromise in the least, and they have subscribed every dollar they are able, and it will take two hundred and fifty dollars yet to free the church. I am determined not to pay in a dollar unless we can lift the entire mortgage and secure the church. The Masons are standing by awaiting results with evident satisfaction. The loyal part of the community are poor, and must be helped or the key will be turned upon them in a few weeks. There is not a school-house to be had, and no other place of worship in five miles. Now if any of the faithful have much or little money to bestow, I am sure they could not do better just now than to send it this way. The Lord bless you all.

LODGE NOTES.

Owen Scott, editor of the Illinois Freeman and also of the Daily Bulletin, of Bloomington, Ill., was a delegate to the Red Men's convention in Detroit.

The Great Council of the order of Red Men met lately in Detroit. More than 12,300 new members were admitted to the order last year. The total membership of the order is 40,876.

The Independent Order of German Red Men of the United States held their annual convention lately in Chicago. The order is established in twelve States with 115 tribes and eighteen encampments, and a membership of 7,884. The aggregate funds of the order are $230,000. During the year $35,000 had been expended for relief of members. Death assessments, $31,000. The Grand Lodges of Illinois and Ohio have established an endowment insurance plan.

Martin Irons, the well known Knight of Labor, was arrested at Kansas City on the indictment charging him with tapping Mr. Hoxie's private telegraph wires at St. Louis. He is now in prison.

The Grand Encampment, K. T., in conclave at St. Louis, elected Charles Roome, of New York, Most Eminent Grand Master; Hugh McCurdy, of Corunna, Mich., Grand Generalissimo, and W. B. BUSINESS.

SPECIMEN NUMBERS.—For ten cents we will send the Christian Cynosure for five weeks to any address, thus giving them a chance to examine the paper and subscribe if they think best. Could you make better use of a dollar of the Lord's money than to send to ten of your friends five copies of the Cynosure?

THE CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE

still remains at $2.00 per year, but the N. C. A. at its annual meeting continued the offer for another year of the special rate of one dollar and fifty cents per year in advance.

One month . . . $1.15	One year . . . $1.50
Two months 25	*Two years . . . 3.00
Four months 50	*Three years . . . 4.50
Six months 75	*Four years . . . 6.00
Eight months 1.00	*Five years . . . 7.50

*To any one who will renew their subscription for two years twenty cents worth of any of our publications will be sent, or forty cents worth for three years, or sixty cents worth for four years, or eighty cents worth for five years. The renewal of your subscription for several years at a time will benefit you some, but the cause more. Try it!

PLEASE BE PROMPT in paying for your papers. It costs the reform and its friends many dollars every year to send notices that subscriptions have expired, that arrears are due. Five cents is not a large sum by itself, but when it is multiplied by hundreds and thousands, the amount lost to the cause is realized to be great. Can you not inaugurate a reform in this matter, and renew a little before your subscription expires, and if in arrears pay up at once? Would it not be a good thing to do?

Advertisers who wish to secure the attention of the best class of purchasers, will find it to their advantage to secure space in the CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE.

The Scarlet Sin.

Embezzlement.

The Devil's Printing Press.

Etc., Etc., Etc., Etc.

A book that is sensational, not from excited rhetoric or florid figures of speech, but from the facts that flow like melted lava from the pen of the writer. It is a book of timely warnings, where sin and crime are shown of their mask, robbed of the glamour with which they have been surrounded by the purblind literature of the day, and painted in strong, true colors. The life of the prodigal is here shown in its true light, not as a life that, though wicked, has its delights, but as a thing of death, now and in future life to be abhorred.—WESTERN CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

THE HISTORY OF ANTI-SLAVERY

IN THE

State and Nation.

BY REV. AUSTIN WILLEY.

514 pp., 12 mo. With NINETEEN PORTRAITS.

Price, Postpaid, $2.00.

Mr. Willey gives the best history of the times just before the present generation, which is precisely the history least apt to be known. He gives us the surface of the sea under the billows which swept off three million pair of fetters from our national decks. His book shows more accurate insight into the causes which produced the rebellion, and gives more clearly the working of those causes, than any other writer. He shows more clearly the moral force of the ballot and necessity of a new party to carry a fundamental reform than any one who has treated of it. We advise every young man and every reader of the Cynosure to obtain and read this history.—Pres. J. Blanchard.

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and helps as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of the life that now is, and to give comfort and help as to the life that is to come.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors the gray head and refuses to consider the old man a burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and healthful draught for every aged traveler to the great beyond."—Witness.

OF

28th THOUSAND.

Baptist Commendation.

"We are delighted with this book. It reaches to the very core of Christian experience, and is eminently experimental in its conclusions. It meets the doubts and difficulties of conscientious seekers after the bread and water of life, but whose efforts result only in alternate failure and victory. The author, without claiming to be a theologian, sends out the results of a happy and rich experience to help others into a happy Christian life."—Baptist Weekly.

Presbyterian Endorsement.

"The book is so truly and reverentially devout in its spirit that it demands criticism. It contains so much that is sound and practical, so much that, if heeded, will make our lives better, happier and more useful, that the intelligent reader who really wishes to lead a life with Christ in God can scarcely fail to derive profit from its perusal."—Union.

Methodist Word of Praise.

"We have not for years read a book with more delight and profit. It is not a theological book. No effort is made to change theological views of any one. The author has a rich experience, and tells in a plain and delightful manner."—Christian Advocate.

United Brethren's Approval.

"We have seldom met with a more interesting volume, abounding throughout with apt illustrations; we have failed to find a dry line from title-page to final."—Religious Telescope.

Congregational Comment.

"It contains much clear, pungent reasoning and interesting incident. It is a practical and experimental lesson taught out of God's word, and is worthy of universal circulation."—Chas. Union.

NATIONAL SUICIDE,

AND

ITS PREVENTION.

BY OSCAR F. LUMRY, PH. D.

Prof. Lumry's book, "National Suicide and Its Remedy," will be read with profit even by those who do not accept of the doctrine, that taking interest for money loaned, one or more percent, is sin, taking something for nothing. For, as Goldsmith said of his Vicar of Wakefield,

"Even his failings lean to virtue's side."

—Cynosure.

Dr. Lumry is a man of ideas and never fails to make his readers understand just what they are. Every sentiment he writes has such an air of honesty that it will in a measure disarm those who read to criticize. It is a good book to set people to thinking, whether they believe his theories or not. The book is well worth a careful reading and study.—Inter Ocean.

On all the points named they differ radically from those which prevail in the organization of society. Either they are true or false. It is a curious fact that all of them have been stigmatized as crazy, and yet nearly all of them have been for some years steadily gaining the adherence of men of intellectual ability.—Times.

FARM NOTES.

KEEPING WINTER APPLES.

An experienced fruit-dealer says he does not want to put apples in the cellar or fruit room until there is a little hoar frost inside the barrel. If good, sound apples, and only such, are put in the barrel, and the apples are well shaken down and the head pressed in so that there is no danger of the apples shaking in the barrel, a slight frost will not hurt them. By this we mean that the barrel can be exposed to quite a sharp frost for a short time without its penetrating deep enough into the barrel to chill the fruit to an injurious extent. The great secret of keeping apples through the winter is, to store them in a well ventilated room or cellar that is kept as near the freezing point as possible, without actually freezing the apples. Apples and potatoes should never be kept in the same cellar, or if this is unavoidable, the potatoes should be kept in the warmest part of the cellar, and the barrels of apples, well headed up, near the windows, where, on days when the air outside is only a few degrees above freezing, they can be treated to a cold breeze from the open windows, while at the same time the atmosphere in the part of the cellar where the potatoes are kept does not fall below forty degrees. With a thermometer in the cellar, it is quite possible to cool off the apples without injuring the potatoes. Do not unhead the barrels until the apples are wanted. It is rarely a good plan to sort over the apples to pick out the rotten ones. Better let them remain undisturbed. Apples in ripening give off carbonic acid, which can not be allowed to accumulate in the house cellar, but must be removed by ventilation. This deleterious gas, carbonic acid, aids in preserving the fruit, and it is one of the advantages of an outside cellar, that this can be allowed to remain.—Joseph Harris in American Agriculturist.

PREVENTING THE POTATO ROT.

I have made some experiments and measurements, this year, which may be worth reporting; and if they agree with the results of others, they may assist in rotting the kinds which are least likely to rot. A part of my ground is high dry and sandy, and made pretty rich with manure for previous cropping. But most of the land planted with potatoes is strong loam, rather heavy, but all tilled. The sandy portion was planted early with Hebron and Ohio; the rest of the land with various sorts. The Hebron and Ohio were dug rather early, before the heaviest rains came, and stored on the barn floor. None of them had rotted then. After some of the heavy rains, the others were dug, and also placed on the barn floor. These had all begun to rot in the ground, and by that time one-half, by estimate, were ruined so that all the largest were left on the ground. The White Star rotted least. After remaining on the barn floor a month or more, I have assorted them, to remove the rotted ones, before taking them to the cellar, with the following result:

Early Ohio (sandy ground, dug late)	5 per cent. rotted.
Hebron (heavy soil, dug early)	25 per cent. rotted.
White Star (sandy ground, dug early)	10 per cent. rotted.
Perfection (sandy ground, dug early)	10 per cent. rotted.
Burnham (sandy ground, dug early)	10 per cent. rotted.
White Star (sandy ground, dug early)	10 per cent. rotted.
Mammoth Pearl (sandy ground, dug early)	10 per cent. rotted.
White Elephant (sandy ground, dug early)	10 per cent. rotted.

The White Star was largely planted, and has shown itself by far the best able to withstand the rot, placing the Ohio and Hebron aside, which had special advantages.

The question is—whether these statements are intended to throw light on—Are these the usual results with these sorts?—A Cayuga Farmer in Country Gentleman.

BETWEEN TWO OPINIONS.

BY E. E. FLAGG.

Author of "Holden with Cords," "A Sunny Life," "Little People," etc.

The Best Story of the Reform!

Price, only $1.00.

Published by THE NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

This latest and best of Miss Flagg's works is now ready in handsome print, neatly bound. The story begins in a quiet New England home, and paints its homely joys with a delicacy and truthfulness worthy the hand of Harriet Beecher Stowe. The scene then changes to a thriving, growing, palpitating young Western city, and with great power and startling accuracy the writer leads us behind the scenes that we may see the machinery that works the liquor traffic and labor troubles. The story of the strike, the mob, the attempted assassination, the saloon-keeper's wives, the curse of his trade, the power of the Christian faith to change him to a messenger of mercy, the criminal and the hidden power that shields him from justice, the land robbers tricks, the dark and secret conspiracies of the lodge—these and all the incidents of the book are portrayed with rare tact and great power of description. It is emphatically a book for the hour. And what is better and yet more striking, the incidents are facts, and every one a powerful and convincing argument against the lodge and the saloon.

Every temperance man and woman should read this book. No temperance story like it was ever planned, much less ably executed. A wonderful light is thrown upon the difficulties in the way of prohibition. Learn how they may be avoided.

Every one who loves to read a good story, chaste and elegant in expression, in thought, true in incident, deeply interesting in its narrative, should read this

READ THESE NOTICES FROM THE PRESS:

The Free Methodist, Chicago.

"Between Two Opinions" is a story, its incidents vouched for as facts, which presents a powerful argument on these questions and must attract thousands of readers among our thinking and observant people. The plot of the story is neither startling nor novel, but it develops a wonderful strength in following the experiences of people in the common, everyday walks of life.

Free Press, Birmingham, Iowa.

It differs from the popular story, "The Bread-winner" of a year ago. It greatly differs from that book in that it is written from the Christian standpoint, and its beautiful and touching descriptions of home life and home duties, and the self-denying will, make a responsive echo in every heart, that has not by dissipation lost the taste for the pure joys of home.

The Religious Telescope, Dayton.

The author, Miss Flagg, is a brilliant writer. The stirring questions in American politics are undoubtedly prohibition and the labor movement as championed by the secret unions of working men, which direct the strikes that with more and more frequency occur in our cities. "Between Two Opinions" is a story, its incidents vouched for as facts, which presents a powerful argument on these questions, and must attract thousands of readers among our thinking people.

The Christian Conservator, Dayton.

This is a charming book, written in an attractive manner. It is so full of sunshine and so radiant with light, that one is enlightened and warmed, and before they are conscious of it, set against the lodge. The style gleams, glows and sparkles. It is dignified and simple. It is the right book to place in the hands of your wife or daughter to superintend co-operation with you in anti-secret work. Every minister's wife should read it, and then, if her husband is not an Anti-mason, he should take his turn next and become one.

The American, Washington.

We are reading, in spare moments, Miss Flagg's new book, "Between Two Opinions," and the estimate we have thus far put upon it is that it is masterly both in style and argument. It is immensely made to feel that he is reading facts and not fiction; that the book is not a play upon the imagination but an unravelling of mysterious circumstances which have an important bearing upon current events.

THE BROKEN SEAL;

Or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. By Samuel D. Greene.

One of the most interesting books ever published. In 64 pages, 15 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper covers, 80 cents; per dozen, $7.50.

This is an interesting narrative shows what Masonry has done and is capable of doing in the Courts, and how bad men control the good men in the lodge and protect their own members when guilty of great crimes. For sale at 221 W. Madison St., Chicago, by THE NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

"THE WHOLE IS BETTER THAN A PART," AND YOU HAVE IT HERE IN A "NUT-SHELL."

SECRET SOCIETIES ILLUSTRATED.

Containing the signs, grips, passwords, emblems, etc., of Freemasonry (Blue Lodge and the four degrees of the York Rite); Adoptive Masonry (revived Quiltemple, Grand Temple, and the Temple of Honor, the United Sons of Industry, Knights of Pythias and the Grange, with affidavits, etc.). Over 200 cuts, 24 pages, paper cover. Price, 25 cents; $2.00 per dozen. For sale by the National Christian Association, at Headquarters for Anti-Secret Literature, 321 W. Madison St., Chicago.

Law and Order, Boston.

The book takes high ground for prohibition of the liquor curse, for woman's ballot for home protection, and for a better and more honest brotherhood than is forced by their obligations upon the members of secret orders. It is, therefore, a valuable book for several large classes of American readers.

Christian Instructor, Philadelphia.

There are important questions pressing upon American politics to-day; two of them are prohibition and the labor question as connected with the secret unions of workmen. This work is an expose of the twin evils, secret societies and the saloons. The truths are given in the form of a story; not startling, but thrilling experiences of home life that are vouched for as facts. The evidence presented of the impossibility of reaching the saloon keeper so long as he and the officers of the law are sworn brothers in the den of some secret society, are conclusive enough to awaken the most careless and obtuse member of society. It is a valuable book for the masses to read.

Evangelist, Berea, Kentucky.

The object of the volume is to illustrate the practical workings of Secret Societies, and especially to show how the Lodge upholds the saloon, and this very important design is wrought out with great skill, clearness and power. By reading it temperance people may learn much about the difficulties in the way of prohibition.

The Standard, Chicago.

It is written in the interests of reform, more especially temperance and Anti-masonry. The title of the story suggests the special aim of it, which is to protest against all "balancing between two opinions." In other words, it is a plea for radicalism. The story is rigorously written, and will interest even readers who do not altogether believe in its doctrine.

The Pacific, San Francisco.

It is a story intended to do service against the saloons, and in favor of Woman's Christian Temperance work, and especially against the secret orders—Freemasons, Odd-fellows, the Knights of Labor, etc. No reflecting man can doubt that any combination of picked classes and individuals is liable to great abuse. It is obvious, also, that secret orders are especially capable of being used in a selfish and unprincipled way.

REVISED ODD-FELLOWSHIP ILLUSTRATED.

The complete revised ritual of the Lodge, Emancipation and Rebekah (ladies) degrees, profusely illustrated, and guaranteed to be strictly accurate; with a sketch of the origin, history and character of the order, over one hundred to quote quotations from the ritual, showing the character and teachings of the order, and an analysis of each degree by President of the lodge. The ritual corresponds exactly with the charge books furnished by the Sovereign Grand Lodge. In cloth, 40 cents; $3.00. Paper covers, 25 cents; per dozen $2.50.

All orders promptly filled by THE NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION, 321 W. Madison street, Chicago.

The "Anti-saloon" movement is contagious and already spreads outside the Republican lines. The New York Graphic, the only illustrated daily, and a staunch Democratic sheet of wide circulation and influence, has begun an uncompromising warfare against the saloons. Its cartoons make it a dreaded enemy, and will make more popular a great movement. This is a most significant sign of the times, at once a proof of the inherent power of the prohibition movement upon the American conscience, and a prophecy that the cunning hands of Nast and Beard and Keppler must find a more useful field here than in vilifying political opponents.

While many of the Republican papers of the country are lavish in praise of Senator Edmunds as a statesman and man of honor, read a note on the oper side from a Masonic organ in Detroit: "Hon.
George F. Edmunds, United States Senator from Vermont, is a member of Washington lodge, No. 3, of Burlington, Vt., which lodge was warranted in 1795. Bro. Edmunds is a good Mason and a good member of a lodge, always keeping his dues promptly paid. The craft in Vermont are justly proud of his ability as a statesman and jurist, and of his long and active interest in Freemasonry."

The saloon power in politics is sometimes guaged so that all can see its pressure upon the barometer of politics. A rumrunner named Flynn in this city has been displeasing the Democratic bosses and they have several times arranged a raid upon his place by the police until his business totters. But there seems to have come an end to this, and it is remembered that Flynn once polled 2700 votes for alderman in the eighth ward, and he may cause future trouble. Think of one saloon-keeper leading an army of 2700 voters!

The Knight Templar affair at St. Louis, while it had no opportunity to compare with Chicago for drunkenness and unmanageable overgrowth, or with San Francisco for a two-weeks' spree on the rail, yet had its peculiar and surpassing feature in the baptism of an infant child, whose parents, when at home are in some obscure corner of Chicago, but as Masons are grandiose "Sir Knight and Lady." The performance was at the headquarters of the California Masons. Heretofore this mock baptism ceremony has generally been performed by some of Albert Pike's high-degree men, who are so stultified by many oaths that they can go through the farce with composure; but the Templar Masons have been familiarizing themselves with such serious ceremonies as they join with Rome and paganism on "Easter" days—and the performance may be put down as likely to occur as often as a vain mother can be found to desire it.

After the demonstration of the secret labor organizations on the first Monday in September the Cynosure objected to the parade as not fairly in the interest of honest labor, but rather of the agitator.
The quarrels that frequently occur in proximity to an election prove the truth of that objection. Moreover, the labor lodges which took part in that parade, at their meeting on Lord's day, September 19, heard in the report of their entertainment committee, that 397 kegs of beer were sold on the picnic ground at a profit of $3.20 per keg, or in all $1,270. But the owner of the grounds put in a charge for the destruction of three bars and the spilling of his liquor by a drunken row. Some of the members wished to banish the liquor traffic forever, but unfortunately they were overborne by the argument of the money made and the inconsistency of their request, though for years the same disreputable scenes have transpired. After the demonstration the press had only praise for the "yeomanry of labor," but the real friend of the workingman will not fail to warn him of the dangers that lurk at the lodge door.

The workmen of New York have nominated
Henry George for mayor of that city, and their good judgment commends itself to the whole country.
In Chicago the politics of the so-called workmen have fallen into the hands of an anarchist ring led by Schilling, Knight of Labor organizer, and his pals. These workmen are only those who organized in secret lodges, and the fact is now openly avowed that these political workers are men who do not work except for votes and drinks. A split has followed the application of a lodge jacket upon the labor convention. The inside ring has made its nominations at the bidding of the anarchists now in the county jail, and the "outs" are to arrange their ticket this week. The quarrel has been useful in uncovering the fact that the trade unions, Knights of Labor and like organizations are well under the control of knaves and demagogues. In this respect
New York is no better. The freedom of a laboring man who gets into one of these petty lodge despot-isms is thus noted in the New York Times which reports the chairman of the Henry George Labor party thus: "It won't be hard to keep the union men from scabbing it on election day. Our books show where they live, and any one who votes with the old parties will be spotted, and we'll make it hot for him after election is over. A man's no good in the union who won't vote right." These men have become like the very European tyrants they come over here to escape.

The General Convention of the Episcopal church begins in Chicago Wednesday morning, continuing some days and attracting to its meetings the prominent laymen and ecclesiastics of the church from all parts of the country. A meeting of no less importance to Congregationalists began Tuesday in Des Moines, Iowa, the anniversary of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, the original foreign missionary society in this country.
Next week the National Council of the Congregational churches holds its sixth triennial meeting in the Union Park church from the 13th to the 20th.
The great controversy over the question of probation after death which has agitated the leaders of that denomination for some years, has within the last few months become so prominent that it can hardly fail of making its unwelcome appearance in both these meetings, and the daily press begins to speculate upon a disruption of the denomination before it is settled. The practical bearing of this question as enunciated by Prof. Newman Smyth and his brother Egbert relates rather to the unenlightened of heathen lands. It is hardly to be supposed that they would include the lodge heathen of our Bible-covered America. What, then, should hinder that they should not publicly endorse the words of Prof.

Moses Stuart against secretism, in whose parlor in 1810 the first meeting of the A. B. C. F. M. was held; or the more emphatic indictment of President Finney, in whose presence the first National Council arose as before a prince, as he was?

Russian brutality and despotism drove from Bulgaria her chosen ruler, Alexander, and now through her representative, General Kaulbars, is bullying that struggling people with humiliating demands in behalf of the Czar. But these have not been conceded and the election of the Bulgarian national assembly takes place on the 10th. This action of Russia has at last aroused Austria and the Hungarian ministry has spoken in a manner so decided that Bulgaria understands that an ally is ready if her independence is maintained; and back of Austria is England.
The words of the Austrian ministry are full of meaning. They say: "The present state of peace is dishonorable to us. Russia is advancing slowly, with starting certainty, while we are giving way, step by step. Hungary prefers war to peace, which at this time endangers her vital interests as one of the powers. Our bad policy is caused by our alliance with Germany. Bismarck fears France, and therefore wishes to maintain peace with Russia at any price; and we have to pay the piper for Prussia's game. We are relinquishing our most sacred rights in the time of peace, and Russia is reaping the harvest of her own activity and our indolence. Such a peace is worse than war."

The number of wives recently shot by their husbands for supposed burglars would seem to indicate that revolvers should be kept in the garret instead of under the pillow. The fact is, the man who keeps a revolver handy always invites a calamity to himself and his family. Nine times in every ten the handy revolver kills the wrong person.—Inter Ocean.

WAS DR. FRANKLIN AN INFIDEL?

BY REV. B. W. WILLIAMS.

It is a significant fact that the world's great sages, thinkers, and philosophers have generally been men of deep religious convictions. Dr. Benjamin Franklin does not appear to have been an exception to this rule. And yet it is common for infidels of today to claim him as one of their kind. We have taken some pains to ascertain the facts in regard to his religious views, and we here give the results of our investigations.

It is undoubtedly true that Franklin was tinctured with scepticism in his youth; but it appears that he abandoned such views in his maturer years, and became a sincere and practical believer in revealed religion. He tells us, in his autobiography, that when about fifteen years of age he began to have doubts on the subject of religion. He then adds:

"I soon became a perfect deist. My arguments perverted some other young persons, particularly Collins and Ralph. But in the sequel, when I recollected that they both used me extremely ill, without the smallest remorse; when I considered the behavior of Keith, another Freethinker, and my own conduct toward Vernon and Miss Read, which at times gave me great uneasiness,
I was led to suspect that this doctrine, though it might be true, was not very useful."—Autobiography of Franklin, pp. 122-123.

It should be remembered that at the time here referred to, Franklin was only a mere boy, fifteen years old. At the age of eighteen, while in London, he wrote and published a small pamphlet on deistical metaphysics, entitled, "A Dissertation on Liberty and Necessity, Pleasure and Pain." The object of this work was to prove "that there could be no such thing as evil in the world, that vice and virtue did not in reality exist, and were nothing more than vain distinctions." Losing says: "Franklin always looked back to these early efforts of his pen, in opposition to Christian ethics, with great regret." (Eminent Americans, p. 40.) Franklin himself afterward said, "The printing of this work was another error of my life." (Autobiography, p. 91.) Thus he acknowledged his mistake.

When about twenty-two years of age, Franklin seems to have undergone a change of mind on the subject of religion. One of his biographers, Parton—himself an infidel—calls it a "regeneration." Franklin wrote out a form of prayer for his own use, containing among other clauses a petition that he might "be preserved from atheism, impiety and profaneness." (Chaplin's Life of Franklin pp. 119-121.) He also formulated a sort of creed, which embraced the following articles of faith:

"That there is one God who made all things.
"That he governs the world by his Providence.
"That he ought to be worshipped by adoration, prayer, and thanksgiving.
"But that the most acceptable service to God is doing good to man.

"That the soul is immortal.
"And that God will certainly reward virtue and punish vice, either here or hereafter."—Chaplin's Life of Franklin, p. 127.

A year or two later, Franklin called atheism "non-sense," and pronounced "the Christian religion the best of all religions." (Parton's Life of Franklin, Vol. I, pp. 192-3.) In 1764, or when he was fifty-eight years old, Dr. Franklin advised his daughter to "go constantly to church, whoever preaches," and to "never miss the prayer days." (Chaplin, p. 248.) When sixty-seven, he spoke of himself as a "Protestant of the Church of England, holding in the highest veneration the doctrines of Jesus Christ." (Parton, Vol. I, p. 557.) A few years before his death, he advised an infidel not to publish a work against Christianity, saying, "If men are so wicked with religion, what would they be if without it." (Chaplin, p. 398.) In the Federal convention of 1787 Dr. Franklin introduced a motion for daily prayers; and in his speech in support of this motion, he said:

"I have lived, sir, a long time, and the longer I live, the more convincing proofs I see of this truth—that God governs in the affairs of men. And if a sparrow cannot fall to the ground without his notice, it is probable that an empire can rise without his aid. We have been assured, sir, in the sacred writings, that 'except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it.' I firmly believe this; and I also believe that without his concurring aid we shall succeed in this political building no better than the builders of Babel."—Chaplin, p. 385.

Dr. Franklin died in 1790, at the advanced age of eighty-four. During his last illness he bore his sufferings without a murmur, and his death was truly "the death of the righteous." He closed his long and useful career in all the serene dignity of one whose life had been spent in the delightful employments of virtue, and who entertained a well-founded hope of endless felicity in the home beyond. Even Parton describes his death by saying, "To use the ancient language, he had fallen asleep in Jesus and rested in hope of a blessed immortality." (Life of Franklin, Vol. II, p. 619.) In view of these facts how, I ask, can any thoughtful person avoid the conclusion that Dr. Franklin was a sincere and practical believer in the Christian religion?

WEEK-DAY SERMON.

BY E. E. FLAGG.

There is one remarkable thing about the Psalms of David which perhaps helps to give them their wonderful power of comforting. Open to almost any one of them and note how they always begin in the minor and end in the major key. Take the seventeenth, which clear through to the last verse but one is an anguished cry for help to the Infinite. How like a great peace falling suddenly when the storm has died away in the soft pater of the last raindrop and the low-lapping murmur of sunset-painted waves the chord changes:—"As for me I will behold thy face in righteousness; I shall be satisfied when I awake in thy likeness." All that makes heaven is expressed in that one word, satisfied. We talk of a present heaven. Isn't it possible to bring a foretaste of this heavenly satisfaction even into our present life?—to find such joy in our work for God as to be satisfied,—not with our work as being perfect or complete in any sense, but in the fact that we are working for God, and in spite of all outside or inside of ourselves which tends to mar it are on the whole trying to do our best. Only we must not expect that the world will share our opinion, especially if we are sent on an unpopular service.

In the very funeral sermon preached over Samuel D. Greene, when the noble old veteran had received his final discharge from the ranks of the saints militant, his long, brave, earnest, heroic life was stigmatized as a failure! Thank God for that failure! If there were none such, we might well despair of the race. Thank God that there will always be men on the earth to whom right and truth are more than gain or life; who are content to be failures, immortal failures, that Christ may be all in all. At the same time the noblest and best of us are human. It is hard to always rise superior to the world's verdict, to feel sure that we are really making the most of our lives when the popular opinion is that we are throwing them away. We know that Elijah once prayed to die because he thought his life had been a failure. He reasoned as the little world of the Samaritan court, with Jezebel at their head, reasoned. He was an outlawed fugitive. He had risked all to see God's cause triumph, and it hadn't triumphed after all. And it was just at this place of mortal discouragement that the cheer came—of the table the angel spread in the desert. It was when the disciples were rowing hard against a contrary wind that Jesus came to them walking over the storm-tossed billows. It was when they had toiled all the night and taken nothing that he stood on the shore in the gray of the early morning and told them just where to cast their nets.

Are we living for Christ, battling for his truth, praying for the day of his triumph? Then we have no right to sit down like Elijah under his juniper tree as if we had served God for naught. Though we have filled only the lowliest stations in life, and left no enduring name behind us, we have been successful men and women. We have done work that will stand the test of the Refiner's crucible. And in that knowledge we have a perfect right to feel a humble but most blessed sense of joy and satisfaction.

A friend once showed me a goblet of Venetian glass, but at first sight it needed all the glamor thrown over it by the name to make it an object of interest. No doubt it was at least three centuries old, and perhaps it had figured at Borgia banquets held in some grand ducal palace, where through all the mirth and music, death lurked in a floating rose-leaf, but to the eye of sense it looked like nothing but plain common glass. My friend held it up to the light and suddenly the dull glass was transformed—it was a transfiguration of the inanimate. Sparkling with all the hues of the prism it seemed as if it had caught to hold fast forever, when it came all molten and glowing from the furnace, every radiant hue, sapphire and emerald and jasper—the light of all those gleaming stones that St. John saw in his vision of the New Jerusalem.

And herein, dear friend, lies a parable for you and me. However dull and commonplace our lives may look in the eyes of men; if they are only brave, earnest, Christ-filled lives, when the light of eternity flashes upon them they will be transfigured. Every grace and virtue will shine forth in its iris-colored radiance, and all the hidden glory will stand revealed of a vessel most rare and precious, fit for the Master's use.

WHY GOOD MEN MUST LEAVE THE LODGE.

The question is still serious whether the good done by all these orders outweighs the evil. It is plain that the tendency now is from negative good to positive harm. Christian men, members of these orders, become alarmed when they face these tendencies. The infatuation about these orders, though enthralling, is scarcely susceptible of analysis; it is something that touches the fancy, reaches the humor, and stirs the pride. They give opportunities for fun, pure and simple; they are to sedate men what the Greek fraternity is to the hilarious college chap—oases of mirth in the expanse of business. They furnish places for ill-fated pastime. They are agencies by which men lift themselves into limited authority. To swing a gavel over the heads of half a hundred obedient members is a consummation as devoutly wished by some, as to sway a kingly scepter. They also afford a royal road for display. What a sense of supreme satisfaction men find when with a blue baldric, a red feather, and a glittering sword, on a prancing steed at the head of an obsequious column, they march to the strains of martial music under the strong gaze of rows of wayside maids and matrons. These strange elements make a vortex into whose dizzy whirl men are carried to their final ruin, and at last cast upon the barren beach of time as drift and waste. Eliminate these elements and not a secret society would exist for a decade.

From the nature of things the principles of these orders can be imperfectly executed. A solemn and binding obligation will not compel men to social intercourse with personal or political enemies; no mysterious initiation will compel men to do good to those who hate them. Can man be taught to love his neighbor as himself without first being taught to love the God who gave him being? Does any secret order profess to teach man his duty to his God?

These societies rob the churches; not that the churches are not able to compete with them. On that line it might be contended that churches ought to compete with saloons and other places of vice. But men array themselves with these orders, and with the best intentions practice their precepts until they care for no higher plane of morals, no other way of doing good. Not frequently a faithful member says, "My lodge is my church." As a condition precedent to initiation the applicant must avow his belief in a Supreme Being, and take a binding obligation to practice the virtues of the order. Upon this wonderful confession of faith and solemn promise of good works he founds at once a religion and a church, and with the devotion of a Catholic worships at the shrine of his order.

The effect of these orders upon society generally is questionable. Men use their membership as a cloak of respectability, under whose deceptive folds they intrude an unworthy presence. In the garb of brotherhood good and pure men associate with the vicious and depraved,—and the tendency of the influence is against the good and pure. It is notorious, too, that these orders shield crime and prevent the proper punishment of criminals. The most marked illustration is seen in the recent labor strikes and socialistic riots; but the same is true in degree wherever there is a lodge. True, some orders in some places scorn evil practices and elevate the standard of morals, but the average membership of all orders is much the same. It is not necessarily true that the older the order the higher the standard of membership. A vicious influence is exerted in the funeral rites of unworthy members. The pomp and the pageant are the same over the tomb of the worthy member, who has not only been true to the principles of his order, but who has elevated mankind and whose life is the completed circle of human excellence and Christian graces, as over the grave of the sordid mal-content whose life has been a blight to his fellow and whose depravity was the cause of his death.

There is too much wealth bound up in these orders. Millions of dollars sunk in unproductive property. Elegant furniture, gorgeous tapestry, and the richest velvet stored in close halls and dark rooms where the healthy rays of the sun never shine and the refining eye of woman never beams. These enormous sums are supplemented by amounts equally large in maintaining current expenses and providing for occasions of display. The worst feature is the drafts on many members who are unable to pay,—drafts so heavy that if coming from family, church, worthy poor, or poor relatives, would be dishonored and repudiated; but with a devotion and a loyalty to the lodge that is starvation to family and repudiation to every other demand these obligations are met with astonishing promptness.

A pernicious effect of these orders is that they take their members from the associations of the family. The wife and children are deprived of the company of the husband and father from one to three evenings each week. If men were contented with a membership in one order and the meetings were but once each month, the evil might be lessened; but the fun of the initiation in one order leads the applicant to other orders. In justice to the family the meeting might be held during business hours. A man has as much right to steal time from his business as from his family. If the secrets of the family could be read as a result of this, how many discords, angry words and petulant altercations would be revealed, to say nothing of lonely hours, neglected duties, and broken pledges. What can be expected of sons whose fathers set such examples?

Probably the most patent evil is to be found in the desecration of the Sabbath. The Sunday funeral has become the rule, even at an inconvenience. Bodies are embalmed and kept half a week in order that the lodge, of which the deceased was a member, may take charge of the funeral with imposing ceremonies. The quiet of the holy day is broken by the blare of the bugle and the roll of the drum. The music and the day are the only sacred things. Christian men and Christian ministers swell the crowd with their presence and join in the parade. Next down the line to the funeral is the Sunday picnic, conducted on the approved picnic plan. As there is no compulsion to attend these, the men who have some respect for the Sabbath refuse to join, and the absence of these is the license for the remainder to make the day particularly loud. The notable illustration of this is seen in cities, but smaller places maintain a respectable imitation of their city neighbors.

These are some of the evil practices, and are sufficient to indicate the tendencies of the secret orders. Let them take heed. If any warfare is waged against them it will be precipitated by their conduct. If they persist in going beyond the bounds of usefulness into the realms of vice, all moral support will be withdrawn. Without the championship of good men they cannot exist. They must know that a large part of the membership will stand by the right, in favor of law, order and morality, as against wrong and riot.—J. W. Thompson, Esq., in Pulpit and Pew.

NATIONAL ECONOMY.

Dr. Talmage addressed a large audience in his Brooklyn Tabernacle Friday evening, Sept. 24, on national affairs. The press report reads as follows:

The disposition to vote away the people's money by the hundreds of thousands of dollars is more and more apparent. It comes in this way: Almost every member of Congress has a bill for the erection of a public building in his own district, which bill he wishes to pass, or he has a number of constituents who are asking for patronage, and "unless you favor my bill in Congress I will not favor yours, but if you vote for my bill I will return the compliment when your bill comes up," and on that plan money is voted away by the millions and the people pay for it in taxation. There is only one cure for this chronic evil, and that is prompt and heroic Presidential veto. It is often said that the Congress of the United States, made up of many members, ought to have more wisdom than one man in the Presidential chair. They have more combined wisdom, but the principle of "You vote for my bill and I will vote for yours," overrides, quashes and abolishes the combined wisdom. Instead of the hundred vetoes of last session I hope it will be two hundred if there be the same disposition on the part of our National Legislature to give away money that does not belong to them.

The prodigality of the National Legislature is getting to be infamous. The secret of it all is that there is a surplus in the treasury which is a temptation too mighty for the honesty of most politicians. Seventy million dollars of surplus lying there; seventy million added to the reserve of a hundred million. Why not turn it back to the people to whom it belongs? Government has no more right to it than I have a right to retain the $5 that you overpay me in a bargain. If I present a check at the bank for $100, and on getting home I find I have been paid $110, and I don't return the surplus $10 in quickest haste, I am a dishonest man. The Government of the United States by overtaxation has in its possession a surplus of many millions of dollars. What to do with it? Return it. Government has no more right to put it to another use than for which it was raised than I would have a right to take the ten surplus dollars, which by mistake was handed me at the bank, and give it to the missionary society. No man has a right to give away that which does not belong to him. The United States Government has no right to give for one object that which was raised for another object. Until those piled up millions of the United States Treasury are somehow disposed of they will be a perpetual solicitation to our public men to do evil. All hail to the veto crusading expedition. Let the Governors of the States and the Mayors of the cities join in the movement. All the Presidents and Governors, and Mayors for the last thirty years have been signing bills they ought never to have signed, because they were afraid of their party. Let the men who suffered in the war have a liberal pension and their families after them. But there are now hundreds of men who suffered nothing who are trying to take advantage of this patriotic sympathy for soldiers and sailors disabled by the war. Because, about the time of the war, a man happened to be afflicted with a nose bleeding or a run around, do not put him on the roll of honor with those who in the casualties of war were crippled for life and are forever unable to earn for themselves and their families a comfortable livelihood. From what I have heard through private sources as well as through public, I conclude that the officials at Washington were last winter and for many winters besieged by letter or in person by the great host of first-class loafers, who were of no service to the country during the war, nor before the war, nor since the war, and too lazy or cranky to earn a living for themselves they are hanging around the national kitchen hoping that something will be thrown out that they can pick up. Grover Cleveland, President of the United States, go right ahead in the exercise of the veto power! The friends or disappointed applicants will raise an outcry, but the solid sense of all good people, North, South, East and West, is with you in this attempt to stop up the leakages of the old ship of State, which for a long while has been laboring under great stress of weather. There has been too much tardiness in the exercise of the veto power. All brave and intelligent nations have recognized the importance of its exercise. It was given to the tribunes of the people under the Roman Government. The constitution of Poland recognized it. In Norway, Sweden and the Netherlands the king has it. In all the States of our American Union, except five, the Governor possesses it. With good, round, common sense let that power be exercised. Because a railroad company has bought up a majority of the Legislature is no reason why a Governor should sign a charter. Because the rooms of the Congressional committee of the ante chambers of the White House are crowded with applicants for pensions is no reason why the President of the United States should by his signature give a monetary supply to those who had no more to do in helping our Civil War to a settlement than they did in the Afghan or Zulu war.

While speaking of national economies, let me call your attention to the useless expenditure of keeping up our foreign embassies all over the world. These embassies were established when it took six weeks to go to Liverpool and six months to go to China, and it was necessary that at the Court of St. James, and at Berlin and Madrid, and all the great foreign capitals, we should have some high-salaried men to look after American interests. Now it is a half an hour from Washington to London, from Washington to Berlin, from Washington to Madrid. Can you mention a single crisis in the last twenty years when our foreign ministers at London or Berlin or anywhere else have been of any use to the United States Government? All matters of international business are immediately referred to our Secretary of State, and are settled at Washington and not in the office of foreign ministers. That immense expense is for nothing unless it be once in a while to send abroad some man who, if he stayed at home, might be a rival candidate for the Presidency. While we had only one cable under the sea it might have been pardoned to keep up these foreign establishments, but now we have cable after cable, and this vast expense of Ministers Plenipotentiary at foreign courts ought to be abolished. Beside that it is humiliating for our nation to be complimenting foreign despots. Think of our Government doing honor to that murderer of nations—Russia—now swallowing Poland, now struggling to submerge Bulgaria. Think of our Government, hat in hand, bowing before Austria, the despoiler of Hungary. God has placed this nation on a continent by itself. If any foreign despotism wants anything of us let them telegraph. If we want anything of them we will employ the same instrument! Added to the telegraphic facilities will soon be telephonic, and foreign embassy will be more and more of a superfluity.

When some of these unnecessary Governmental extravaganzas shall have been expelled that will lighten taxation. When taxation is lightened it will be easier for the people of this country to make an honest living. Do not be so deluded as to think that those who own neither houses nor lands are free from taxation. First the tax assessment strikes the capitalist; then the capitalist puts that tax upon the rent he asks for the house occupied or upon the price of the goods sold. There is not a man or woman in America who buys a pound of sugar or a yard of cloth or a loaf of bread that does not feel the influence of taxation, and all the people have a right to be heard on the subject of national economy. At the ballot box and wherever you have influence uphold those who are trying to stop useless expenditure, either city, State or national. With such a climate, such a soil and such rivers to turn the factory wheel, and such wealth of mines being disgorged, and such multiplied resources of accumulation far greater than those offered to any other nation under heaven, it ought to be easy, very easy, in this country to make a living, and a good living, while now for multitudes it is very hard work.

But all recuperation and betterment will directly or indirectly come from the saturation of the people with religious influences. High toned morals mean for a nation temporal prosperity. Godliness is profitable in the life that now is as well as for that which is to come. When individuals are made right nations will be right. Perhaps none of you know how the American came to be called Brother Jonathan. George Washington having been made Commander-in-Chief of the Army of the Revolution, went to Massachusetts to organize his forces. It was an awful time of perplexity. Jonathan Trumbull was Governor of Connecticut, and Washington had great confidence in his ability and patriotism, and said to his officers: "Let us consult Brother Jonathan." Again and again during the war was Jonathan Trumbull advised with, and it got to be a by-word among the troops and among the officers: "Let us consult Brother Jonathan," and so that became the sobriquet of the American. This idea of brotherhood bestowed by the first President of the United States is the Gospel idea when a man shall learn everywhere that his fellow man is a brother—that will make perfect individual life, perfect social life, perfect national life. This very morning I saw in one of the gardens at Poughkeepsie, on a high bank, spelled out in large letters of flowers that might have been seen at a great distance, "Peace on earth, good will to men." Over all our hearts, over all this land may there be written in letters of eternal bloom that angel cantata.

OPPOSING ERROR.

There is no task less welcome to the average Christian man than warfare with error. It demands personal sacrifice. It is often wearing on the mind, and it is hard sometimes to restrain one's emotions within the bounds of a rightful indignation. To be "angry and sin not" is a precept not a few tumble against when they "contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints." Nevertheless, error must be constantly and earnestly opposed. There is a relation between doctrines and doings and creed and conduct, which it is impossible to ignore. False views of truth in the mind lead to evil in the life. We see this to-day in its vulgar manifestations among Mormons and Anarchists, but we may also find it operating among people of refinement. Much of the crime of the day in defalcations and other immoralities may be ascribed to erroneous ideas of sin, both as to its guilt and penalty. That there are many people whose intellectual orthodoxy is not to be denied, whose lives are marked by unrighteousness, may be conceded, but their hearts and wills have never been brought into harmony with their heads. So we may find people who, rejecting what we regard as essential truth, may yet accept the highest standard of morals, and be the more circumspect in their lives because of the unpopularity of their belief. Admitting all this as true, yet infidelity is never so sure of welcome as with men who desire to violate God's laws, and it constantly leads those who accept it in a downward course.

We are not to act doubtfully when we encounter error. Our Lord praised the church at Ephesus—amid its faults, "This thou hast, that thou hatest the deeds of the Nicolaitans, which I also hate." And the command is laid on us to "Abhor that which is evil." It is a serious question for many Christian people whether they have that deep-seated emotion of hatred for errors which dishonor God and his revelation which ought to possess them. There are those from whom an Apostle tells us to "turn away." This, surely, would signify that they are to be left in no uncertainty as to our repulsion from their sentiments. But sometimes we are called to controvert error. To do this wisely and well our arguments must be founded on divine truth. "The sword of the Spirit is the Word of God." The great danger is in our accepting teachings which are not really tenable, and which an enlightened interpretation would lead us to reject. To meet error in this day the Bible is still as efficient as ever, but never was it so important that it should not be handled "deceitfully" nor blunderingly.—Baptist Weekly.

THE GODS THEY WORSHIP.

The following is from the report on foreign correspondence to the Grand Lodge of New York, in the year 1874. It shows what gods are worshipped in the lodge:

"It is universally claimed, in behalf of Freemasonry, that the institution is catholic and cosmopolitan in its character, and that it studiously excludes from its lodges all systems of faith, or sect, and all mere dogmas of religion, and only requires from its initiates a belief in Deity, and conformity in life and practice to the moral law. And yet we find intolerant Masons who insist that the prayer should be so worded at our lodge devotions, that their particular creed, or form of belief, as to the nature, power, substance, individuality, unity or trinity of God, shall be acknowledged and worshipped, and addressed in prayer, and none other.

"To all such we would say, there are Masons all over the civilized world and lodges are organized among all nations, tongues, and kindred of people. What, then, shall the brethren do when required to meet with those of several different creeds, at one and the same time and place, or in one lodge. Shall the Parsee brother demand that the ritual of Zoroaster shall be followed, and God worshipped only in or through fire? The Persian insists that all join with him in the salutation; "Lah Mah e il Allah!" The brethren of Islam, that all cry, "Allah! Ackbar! Mahomet is his prophet!" The descendants of Israel, that power and glory and dominion be ascribed to God! One only! Eternal and immutable!

Or, shall a Christian Trinitarian insist, that the only inscription made or worship had, shall be to God, in unity of substance and trinity of individuality?

"When all of these different brethren, on this question, agree in the one and great and sublime belief and faith, that God is the Supreme Being, Creator and Governor of all things, Infinite, Eternal and great Jehovah! why then can not all meet as brethren, in a truly fraternal and tolerant spirit, one with another? And if the lodge where the "gathering together" occurs be in the land of the Parsee, let the brother of that faith offer his prayers; if in the home of the Hindu, or the Persian, or Islamite, let one of that faith. Or better still, if the great majority in each one of these would let the one who visits them offer prayer in his own way.

"This generosity of action, this noble exercise of true Masonic toleration would disarm that offensive spirit which seeks the propagation of a creed with the bayonet, joins the missive to be buried with the missionary sent; and is ever furnishing materials for mere sectarian strife."

REFORM NEWS.

MAKING READY FOR THE SOUTHERN CONVENTION.

FISK UNIVERSITY, NASHVILLE, Tenn.,
Sept. 25, 1886.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—My brief visit to Maryville in Blount county, East Tennessee, was one of great interest. This town has for years been free from the liquor traffic. I do not think there is a saloon in the county. It is peopled largely by Presbyterians and the Society of Friends; was loyal during the war, and has always been Republican in politics, though the Prohibitionists are gaining in strength. Maryville College, under the patronage of the Presbyterians, is one of the oldest and most prosperous institutions in the State. Its three fine buildings are in the middle of a large college campus, which commands a fine view of the Blue Ridge on the east, and the Cumberland range on the northwest. The term opens with 165 students, and the number will be largely increased. By the conditions of its endowment no one can be excluded by reason of race or color, and there has been all along a small percentage of colored students. Four or five years ago there was a great outbreak against colored students, and the speedy destruction of the college was predicted. But the faculty were firm, and the institution has prospered and has peace.

President Bartlett and all of the faculty are opposed to secret societies. They take a warm interest in our work and will co-operate in a convention if held in Knoxville. No college secret societies are tolerated. I am indebted to President Bartlett and Professors Crawford and Wilson for hospitality. Prof. Lamar has been sick for some time and is slowly recovering. I addressed the students at their morning exercises.

Professor Wilson, of the Friends' Normal school, also received me most kindly. He has read the Cynosure with interest, and expressed his sympathy with our work. Joseph Potts, a leading minister of the society of Friends, and formerly of the Christian Worker, expressed his hearty sympathy with our work, and promised co-operation. So also did Rev. D. McDonald, pastor of the Presbyterian church, and Rev. Mr. Cooper, a resident Presbyterian minister. The Friends' colored college is without a superintendent, Professor Hastings having resigned. It is hoped that the school will soon be opened and resume its good work.

On Thursday, the 23d, I returned to Knoxville. President McCulloch most kindly took me in his carriage to the station, and I started for Nashville, via Chattanooga. It is remarkable that a road that does so much business as this V. T. & G. R. R., should be so badly managed. The trains are rarely from one to two hours behind time, and there is scarcely a decent waiting room from Chattanooga to Bristol, and in some important places, like Jonesboro and Johnson City, there is none at all. I reached Chattanooga at 7:30 p. m., and at 11:50 started for Nashville. As the morning dawned I saw we were passing through a beautiful country, and a succession of cotton fields with bursting bolls, the first I had seen in the State.

I was kindly received by President Cravath, of Fisk University, and assigned a pleasant room in Jubilee Hall. Lincoln Hall has been built since I was here before, and is a very fine structure. After attending the chapel exercises, and calling on several professors, I went to Roger Williams University and visited President Stuffer, who invited me to remain through the day and address the students in the afternoon. This institution is near Vanderbilt University, and on higher ground than any other in the city. It commands a magnificent view of the city with its various institutions, public buildings and factories. The nucleus of this institution was a fine old mansion house, once a planter's home. To this has been added a large and commodious building, giving ample accommodations to those who desire higher education under Baptist auspices. It is well worthy of the support of those of that faith. President Stuffer expressed his cordial sympathy in our work and his willingness to co-operate in a convention.

At 2:15 p. m. I met the assembled students and spoke forty minutes on the nature of secret societies and their relation to Christianity. Nashville is an enterprising Southern city, a railroad and educational center, and an important manufacturing point. It will be entirely practicable to hold a national meeting here if deemed best—a point on which I am not yet quite decided. The expenses would be large and the Masonic influence powerful. As at present advised I favor Knoxville. The best time, unquestionably, is the last week of the year. May the Lord direct.

NASHVILLE, Sept. 28.—Of the trio of institutions for the education of the colored people of the South that do honor to Nashville and the State of Tennessee, the least conspicuous, because of its location, but by no means the least important, is Central Tennessee College, under the auspices of the M. E. church. While Fisk and Roger Williams are ranked as Universities, this institution is called a college, though it has academic, law, medical and theological departments, all in successful running order, and is yearly graduating students in all these departments. With the exception of Howard University in Washington, D. C., this, I believe, the only institution of the South that confers a medical education on colored people. I was glad to get acquainted with the president, Rev. J. Braden, D. D., and to find him an earnest Christian worker, who has never had either the time or inclination to go into lodgery. He expressed an approval of our work and a desire that the students of the institution should be informed as to the evils of the system. There were last year 445 students enrolled, of which ten were in the law, forty-nine in the medical, and forty-nine in the theological departments. Since it was first instituted sixty-six young men have graduated from the medical department. I have just had a pleasant visit with Rev. Dr. Everts, formerly of Chicago, and just here from Memphis. He is visiting the Baptist schools in the South. He expresses his hearty sympathy with our work and thinks I ought to go to Memphis to strengthen the hands of the brethren. I expect to do so to-day.

THE BAPTIST FOREIGN MISSION CONVENTION REPUTATES THE LODGE.

MEMPHIS, Sept. 29.—I left Nashville last evening and reached Memphis at 5 a. m. to-day. I found Bro. Countee suffering from illness and overwork. The Baptist Foreign Mission convention was in session for a number of days, and a large number of delegates, including a number of foreign missionaries, were in attendance. The burden of entertainment has been largely borne by brother and sister Countee, who is also in feeble health. In spite of my protestations they insist on entertaining me also. The convention was one of great interest. It met in the Tabernacle Baptist church on the morning of the 22nd. It represents the most cultured and earnest of the colored Baptists and is an incorporated body, having its Executive Board at Richmond, Va., and has for its special object the evangelization of Africa. It has sustained six missionaries in Africa for nearly three years at what is known as the Bendoo Mission near Grand Cape Mount, Western Africa. It is a mission among the Veys, and having visited that people in 1864 I have long been impressed with the importance of the field. They are the only natives of West Africa that have reduced their language to a written form. Rev. J. A. Foster of Alabama was president of the convention; Rev. Clanton, of New Orleans, recorder; and Prof. Jones of Virginia, corresponding secretary. The opening sermon was by Rev. A. S. Jackson of New Orleans. Over 100 delegates were present from eight States, and over 1,000 people attended the evening sessions. Revs. W. H. Colley, J. H. Presby and J. J. Cole, returned missionaries, were present. A Vey boy was with them who sang Gospel songs in his native language.

Rev. W. V. Everts, D. D., formerly of your city, made a ringing speech in favor of consolidating this convention with the Baptist Missionary Union. Other addresses were made by resident ministers. The money received for the mission aggregated $4,415.08. Liberal collections were taken up and Rev. R. N. Countee made a life member. A committee on woman's work was appointed, and telegrams of greeting were interchanged with the Baptist General Association of the Western States and Territories. Rev. J. J. Cole described the Vey country and people and exhibited specimens of their arts, and a number of brethren offered their services to the missionary board. Over $1,121 were raised for the work.

I was greatly interested in Rev. J. J. Cole, whom I have met here, and especially in the valuable book he has written on Africa and the missionary work. Resolutions were passed condemning certain statements of those who failed to affiliate with the convention, and recognizing the Tabernacle Baptist church and its pastor, Rev. R. N. Countee, as working faithfully for the Master.

The following report of the meeting on the Sabbath was not published in the daily papers. It will be seen that there was an outspoken testimony on the secrecy question, and at least fifty ministers endorsed the position of Bro. Countee and his church. One minister who offered his services as a missionary and who is a Mason was told that he must first give up his Masonry.

On Sabbath, Sept. 26, divine services at the Tabernacle church were in the morning conducted by Rev. P. H. A. Braxton of Baltimore, Maryland, who preached a very interesting sermon from Judges 5: 23: "Curse ye Meroz, said the angel of the Lord; curse ye bitterly the inhabitants thereof, because they came not to the help of the Lord against the mighty." The speaker asserted that in all questions relating to the extension and unification of God's kingdom, ministers especially could take no middle ground, as there is no such place for them; that all in the family of God are one, and God demands that we work in harmony; that God needed help, and it has pleased God to have man associated with him in the redemption of this world. Men are not saved by prayer but by the Gospel, therefore, they must have it pure; no minister can ever preach an acceptable gospel while he is entangled with any kind of human organization; God's ministers must be freemen, free from all contamination with worldly societies; this question has got to be met by every Baptist minister, and a decided stand must be taken. The sermon was listened to with marked attention and was endorsed by many of the delegates.

At 3 p. m. Rev. A. M. Newman of Louisiana preached an excellent sermon from Rom. 8:28. "All things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are called according to his purpose." The discourse of the evening was by Rev. J. A. Jones, of Richmond, Va. H. H. HINMAN.

THE WISCONSIN ANNUAL CONVENTION.

DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS:—The time of our next annual gathering draws near. Much depends on its being a successful meeting. Are you praying for it? Are you planning to attend, if possible? Will you try to have delegates sent from your churches?

It is hoped that free entertainment will be provided for all delegates. We are also trying to secure a reduction of fare over the Milwaukee & St. Paul, [see notices page 12], and the Chicago and Northwestern railroads.

Delegates coming by the C. & N. W. railroad will get off at Chester, three miles east of Waupun and go to Waupun by stage.

The convention is to be held in Butte's Hall, where it was held eight years ago when the fraters stoned it. Come. J. F. BROWNE.

ELDER BROWNE'S NOTES OF WORK.

FENNIMORE, Wis., Oct. 1, 1886.

DEAR WISCONSIN FRIENDS:—Leaving the Free Methodist conference at Oshkosh, (where I was very kindly treated), I went on Sept. 18th to Hortonville, where I was very glad to meet Jacob Griffin and wife, long-trying and faithful soldiers of Christ, whom I have known since my childhood. I preached in Hortonville Free Baptist church Sunday morning and evening, 19th, and in Dale church in the afternoon. Monday and Tuesday evenings I lectured in Hortonville Free Baptist church, Wednesday evening in Dale church, and Thursday evening in Medina M. E. church. After the lecture Monday evening, Mr. Louis Jacquot, lawyer of Hortonville, claimed that Grosh's manual of Odd-fellowship gave only the individual opinions of the writer. I called his attention to its endorsement by members of the Grand Lodge of the U. S. He claimed that my copy was not genuine. The next day I went to his office and made him the proposition below, to which I affixed brief statements addressed to the public, and posted the document in the postoffice. It explains itself.

TO THE HORTONVILLE PUBLIC.

After the lecture last night, Mr. Louis Jacquot, lawyer of this place, tried to evade the force of the arguments brought against Odd-fellowship, by casting discredit on the genuineness of the book quoted as authority, viz., "Grosh's Manual of Odd-fellowship." I think right to defend myself and the National Christian Association against this indirect charge of fraud, and wish to prove to the public the genuineness of the books quoted as authority, and have accordingly waited on Mr. Jacquot to-day, and made him the following proposition:

"Louis Jacquot shall send (telegraph or telephone) to any bookseller, publisher, or other person whom he may select, for a copy of the above-mentioned 'Grosh's Manual of Odd-fellowship,' or for a copy of any book quoted by me as authority, in my lectures, and said Jacquot shall bring such book into a public meeting to be held in the Free Will Baptist church of this place, on Friday evening, September 24, and shall publicly read therefrom the passages quoted by me in last night's meeting, provided, of course, that such passages are to be found in the genuine book he shall produce.

"J. F. Browne, on the fulfillment of above conditions by L. Jacquot, agrees, on his part, to pay for the book or books thus obtained, and for the cost of getting the same, when delivered to himself, and, in addition, he further agrees to pay, as a forfeit, the sum of $10 to Christian foreign missions, provided that any book from which he quotes in his lectures is proved to be not genuine (the differences of different editions manifestly being no bar to genuineness) when compared with book produced by L. Jacquot, a committee being appointed by the audience to decide on the question of genuineness.

"Jacob Griffin, of Hortonville, is designated as trustee of the above-mentioned forfeit, if called for on the above conditions, and he binds himself to see that J. F. Browne shall faithfully carry out the stipulations specified above." The public will see that the above proposition from me is not only fair but generous, and Mr. Jacquot is urged to accept it, and to come to the lecture to-night (or send word in writing) and say whether or not he is willing to accept it.

He is also offered one-half the time to-night in which to reply to my arguments. Respectfully,

J. F. Browne, Ag't. of National Christian Ass'n.
Hortonville, Wis., Tues. Sept. 21, A. D. 1886.

Mr. Jacquot agreed to my propositions, but at the meeting on Friday evening he had failed to get a copy of Grosh, so the question of genuineness had to pass. Authority having been called for as to the financial dealings of Odd-fellowship, I quoted from T. G. Beharrell's "Odd-fellow's Monitor and Guide," showing that in the Independent Order of Odd-fellowship the reports from 1830 to 1879 set forth—

Total amount expended for relief.....$29,220,835.58
Total receipts.....77,984,169.72

This confirmed my statements, especially as Mr. Jacquot had privately recommended the book referred to as fairly representing the order. He claimed, however, that there is no written authority in Odd-fellowship except White's Digest of Odd-fellow Law, admitting, however, that there are other publications that fairly represent the order. I remarked to the audience that it mattered very little, whether or not a book was formally and technically considered "authority" if it was admitted to "fairly represent the order." Further report has been made by father and mother Griffin, who with Bro. Mitchell, pastor of the Free Baptist church, stood by me fully.

Having caught a cold, I could with difficulty speak on Friday evening, could only whisper Saturday morning, and had to give up my Sunday appointments for Waupun and Byron. I had what seemed quinsy, which broke Sunday morning. Sunday, I spent in Oshkosh with Mrs. Cordelia Pembleton and family. Monday, Sept. 27, I went to Waupun, and with Bro. Dudley Andrews, made further arrangements for our coming State meeting. Tuesday I went to Martin, Greene county, stopping briefly at Milton Junction. I was glad to meet Bro. E. Ronayne and sister Mattie Harvey. Bro. Ronayne's interest against the lodge seems unabated.

Tuesday evening I lectured at the U. B. church at Martin, but my throat was too bad to speak again Wednesday evening. I was glad to find my mother and brother at Martin in usual health. Bro. N. Martin and sister Scott helped me financially, and Bro. Scott brought me from Browntown, five miles away, and took me back Thursday morning, when I started for the U. B. Wisconsin annual conference at Fennimore in Grant county, where I arrived that evening, and where I am now in attendance. Lord's day, Oct. 3d, I am to preach and lecture at the Evangelical Association church in Fond du Lac. After that I am to work around Waupun in the interest of our coming State meeting, Oct. 19-21.

For the cause, J. F. BROWNE.

ANOTHER GOOD REPORT FROM OHIO.

Circleville, O., Oct. 1, 1886.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Since my last report I have spoken in the towns of Samantha and New Vienna, in a Presbyterian church near Chillicothe, and last evening in the Colosseum here. The meetings have been fairly attended. Over two hundred were present last evening. This is one of the strongholds of Satan. Democracy, liquor and secret societies seem to have everything their own way, at least in the political line. My bills announced that I would speak on the question, "What are the Secret Societies doing?" last evening. A large number of the secretists came in, many taking seats near the front. They became uneasy as the lecture proceeded. Quite a number left before I had concluded, slamming the door behind them. They evidently thought they had got into the "wrong pew."

A prominent business man, who has been both a Mason and Odd-fellow, and seen their iniquity from the inside, paid $11 toward getting the Colosseum and having bills printed. So God raises up friends and helpers wherever I go.

I am now enjoying the hospitality of Rev. Schneider, pastor of the Evangelical Lutheran church of this place. The United Brethren church here is in a very bad condition. The pastor of the English branch, a young man by the name of Davis, is trying to become popular by getting the secretists into his church. He refused to read a notice of the lecture at the prayer meeting. The German branch have just had sort of a catch-penny show to raise money. A shoemaker by the name of Carr said that he saw a man who attends this church beg ten cents of John Pann, a bar-tender, to bid in the lottery affair which they had. So the church sells out to the world, and thousands of precious souls are being dragged down to destruction.

While at Chillicothe I stopped at the home of Mr. James Steel. Mr. S. has raised a large family, all of whom now do him honor. None of his children are in any way connected with secret societies, but like their father bear their testimony against them. I am indebted to him for encouragement in our work. I go to-day to Clear Port where I am to meet Mr. C. M. Strickler, who has kindly agreed to go with me to secure some subscriptions for the Cynosure in his country.

I have received encouraging letters this week from our State president, and secretary Bro. George writes that a few have sent in their pledges for this year's work. We trust the friends will attend to this matter as soon as possible so we can know what we can rely on. Remember we can only make the work go as you help us. All moneys or pledges sent to Rev. S. A. George, Mansfield, Ohio, will be duly reported by him. I am to speak in the Evangelical Lutheran church at Lick Run near Yellow-bird on Monday evening. Other meetings are being arranged.

W. B. STODDARD.

THE TESTIMONY OF A GOOD LIFE.

HORTONVILLE, Wis., Sept. 25, 1886.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The Lord, in his mercy, has sent to labor here with us, the past week, in the anti-secrecy work, Bro. J. F. Browne. He has preached three times in a neighboring church, and has lectured three times here, and twice in neighboring churches. We have to say, to the praise of God, that the effort has succeeded beyond our most sanguine expectations. He met with opposition, in regard to the authenticity of the lodge books from which he quoted; and his Christian character was publicly assailed, especially by M. G. Pett, a professed Christian minister. We are happy to be able to say that all objections were satisfactorily answered and nothing found to be of weight. We have known Bro. Browne from childhood, and so could and did testify that there was nothing against his Christian character, but that he had been always highly respected. Elder Wm. Mitchell, pastor of the Free Baptist church, stood up for the right in face of all opposition.

We feel assured that he leaves with the sympathy and confidence of the better class, and indeed of nearly all, except secretists, and they, "though you bray them in a mortar, their foolishness will not depart from them." In short, a good impression has been made, for which we thank the Lord, and we hope and pray for blessed results from the good seed sown.

A HINT FOR LECTURERS.

WALL LAKE, IOWA, Sept. 24, 1886.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I returned home recently from a six weeks' lecture tour in Illinois and Wisconsin. It was the most successful tour I have made, both in regard to the number of people reached, and the money contributions received, my Sabbath collections averaging about $15.00. As a means under Providence I ascribe my success mainly to the fact that I arranged my meetings by correspondence several weeks before hand. This is a point of vital importance to successful meetings. Next to giving a good presentation of the subject, care should be taken to give ministers and people time to work up and prepare for meetings.

In arranging for meetings I find it most convenient to use a circular with printed questions, and blanks left for the answers. Get the names from church records, or the subscription lists of reform papers, of those who will be most likely to take an interest in your work. Mail them this circular, filling out the date at which you can visit them, and request them to fill it out and return, you enclosing a stamped envelope addressed for the reply. My circular runs like this:

Can you arrange for me to lecture on National Prohibition at your place on _____, or any of the subjects on the enclosed circular?

If not on the above date, will you state time that will best suit your convenience?

Can you have it announced in the churches on Sabbath, in the public schools and local press?

Will there be a fair prospect of securing an audience?

Will the people be willing to respond with a collection for the cause?

What phase of reform work is most needed in your community?

Name points in your vicinity where I could deliver lectures?

Could you co-operate with me in holding a series of meetings?

If you cannot attend to this yourself, will you hand it to some one who will?

I merely give these as suggestive of what questions to ask. I have found the above, when fully answered, give a good idea of what I can do in any locality. Every lecturer may shape the questions so as to suit his special line of reform.

The question in regard to contributions for the cause is the difficult one. Ministers sometimes answer it by saying, "It will depend upon your presentation," and "that is about the size of it." Prohibition workers in Iowa and Kansas can go from place to place and raise often as high as $50.00 at a

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE ENEMY IS ALARMED.

ELDER SMITH WILL CAPTURE HIM.

MARYVILLE, Mo.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I hear the strong drink powers of the great cities of America are to assemble in Chicago Oct. 18th next. It is a national convention of distillers and brewers, and wholesale and retail wine spirit and beer dealers. The call says, "A convention is necessary to take some action to repel the accusations and check the growth of a public sentiment hostile to the rights and business of the whisky trade."

Their proposed work reminds me of a lot of little boys going down under the Niagara Falls just before a wonderful flood in all the rivers and lakes above, assembled in order to take some action to repel the waters from coming over the falls. The devil never undertook a job since his first entrance into the Garden of Eden that will damage his cause like that mad convention. They, and the world looking on, will find it [is] according to the Divine arrangement, to have them get up a big mad just before they are destroyed.

But now to business—I propose we capture the convention—I know we can do it. In the name of Gideon's God here is the plan! Let there be no delay in making the necessary arrangement. If I am needed in Chicago to complete this work let me know and I will be on hand. I tell you that Chicago is just the place to take those fellows! If this plan is faithfully carried out, I can see them now on their way home from said convention, with their heads down, wishing they never had been born. If they will listen, I have hopes of some of them. Poor fellows, they are in an awful fix! If they will keep cool, and give good attention we can pull them out of the fire. But they must not kick against the pricks of prohibition, for there are a great many sharp points to meet.

But now to the plan of taking them. Select 300 once first-class persons, but now low down drunkards, who have lapped water out of many a mud hole. Let one-half be fathers, balance mothers in their rags, bare-footed and bare-headed. Let them take their places around the convention when in session—one hundred on the north, one hundred on the west, and one hundred on the south, leaving the east side open for them to run for the boats and cars. You can depend on some good running done if the delegates are not too drunk.

Now a few items as to the work assigned the three hundred: 1. All must be sober; 2. each heart full of sorrow, and each eye full of tears; 3. all be in their places ten minutes before the convention opens and remain till it closes at each session, if one or one hundred sessions. Among the three hundred will be found some who were once the smartest lawyers, doctors, ministers, farmers, merchants, etc., in the nation. Among the mothers the most gifted, educated and beloved daughters of America. These, in all three hundred are to take their turns in addressing this great convention on the following subjects:

1. As to the rights and business of the whisky trade. A few sample questions put to the convention by the three hundred: You talk of your rights. Your rights! where did you get them? You cannot blame any one outside of hell for the business you are in. If the mean old devil was here to-day, and you charge him as the originator of this business, he would deny it. Just look on us! You can only look on the outside. O, could we open our bleeding hearts, and let you see the red blood of sorrow that has flowed for a life time, while you have taken all our money, homes, friends, reputation, standing, yes, our all, and what have you given in return? Look at us, go home with us, see us dine! better still, take supper with us. Come, go and board and lodge with us a week. You can then see the nature of your business.

2. You have come here to stop this prohibition movement, we hear! You, you stop this movement! Let us give you an eye-opener. The first time you see a cyclone coming you stop it! You go to Charleston and wait till you hear another earthquake coming, then you stop it! Don't you see you had better take a freight train and go home? Your business! your rights! it does seem that the devil must have left Chicago since you came here. He cannot help but be ashamed of his low outfit.

Let us in mass say to the convention, you go home at once, then prove to the world that you have God-given rights. Burn all your machinery and fixtures for making strong drink, then go to work and honor God and bless the world, then come back on this same old ground in 1888, or four years from then, and we will have a national jubilee over the death of the whisky king! Yours till after his funeral, R. SMITH.

MRS. HAVILAND AND HER BOOK.

DETROIT, Mich.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE.—I am glad to hear the former issues of Mrs. Laura S. Haviland's wonderful book have sold so well, and that she is now about to publish another edition. I hope the demand will continue to increase until it shall have a place in every household and every library, and be read by every family throughout the country.

It is a wonderful book, made up—not of fiction, but of facts; and is not only deeply interesting but highly instructing, giving a history of circumstances and events of a most anomalous and extraordinary character, which the young and rising generation should know have actually transpired in our boasted land of "Liberty and Equality."

As far back as 1839, forty-seven years ago, I visited this devoted woman at her "Institute" at Raisin, near Adrian, Mich., where she had the humanity and the moral courage to take in and teach the despised and ostracized fugitives from slavery the rudiments of an education. Here she learned from their touching narratives where father, mother, brother, sister, wife or children were located and still pining in the Southern prison house. Then away she would lie to the land of chains and whips, where, disguised in the garb of a "berry picker," and with basket and berries she would wend her way to the very plantation and house where the loved ones left behind were "held," and thus getting access to the object of her mission, in a private, quiet, "Quaker" way, the purpose of her visit was made known, and as soon as "ready," presto exit! Of the pursuits, the exciting attempts to recapture, the hair-breadth escapes, the coolness, bravery, intrepidity and success of our quiet Quaker heroine—O! I can't tell you, you must read the book to know!

Although this wonderful woman, who has had such a wonderful life and has given us such a wonderful book, is now nearly 80 years of age, she is still as smart and chipper as a "cricket," and is adding something new and fresh to the forthcoming edition. May she live to see the travail of a "Woman's Life Work" and her "soul be satisfied," is the wish and prayer of her old friend and brother,

GEO. W. CLARK.

PITH AND POINT.

CLOSE UP THE RANKS.

I believe James Donaldson goes up head! "Where is God?" "God still rules," and "our flag is still there." But, c'y say, what have we done? We are but half-organized; our leaders, like the lodge leaders, are doing all that is done. But where is the voice of our rank and file? Voz Populi vox dei. We are certainly enlightened enough. I, though never in a lodge, am recognized as a Mason every where I go. We understand Masonry and secretism well enough. But, "What must we do to be saved?" Men and brethren, oh, what, tell us now. We are weary waiting.—JAMES SPRINGER, Galena, Kans.

OUR PICTURE GALLERY.

As ever, I still appreciate the Christian Cynosure, and the reform publications. I rejoice to see the pictures of those noble men who have labored in the good work of the Lord. It does me good to look at them. But, dear brother, is there no good woman to picture out for our paper? Why, I think there are many good and noble women whose portraits would be an ornament to our paper, and would be esteemed very highly by its readers.—JOHN COMPEER, Smymna, Ohio.

OLD AGE SPEAKS.

The infirmities of old age (past 82) compel me to retire from much active work. Not as our government retires aged officers, on half pay, but on full pay, and hold my commission ready for action when the enemy comes in range. I learned it nearly sixty years ago, and the longer I live the stronger is my conviction that without Christ all is barrenness, darkness, confusion, and every evil work. We see the fruit of anti-Christ all over our land in the many secret organizations. I doubt the honesty of many of those claiming to be ministers of the Gospel who in this day of light make a great ado about intemperance, gambling, dancing, theaters and many other evils, as the greatest enemies of the church. I believe that these secret societies draw away from and make more infidels of those who have made a profession, and keep more out of the church than all the above named evils. Surely God's ministers should not be ignorant of the devices of the devil. It is certain many of them are so, or they designedly take care not to disturb him in his strongest fortress.—B. WILLIAMS, Warren, Ill.

PRAY FOR YOUR EDITORS.

I rejoice the Lord is with you, giving you wisdom to improve the literary character and Christian spirit of the Cynosure.—ELDER ISAAC HYATT, Gilford Village, N. H.

REMEMBER THE SOUTHERN MINISTERS' FUND.

Some good friend paid for the Christian Cynosure to be sent to me one year, ending 1st of August. The Cynosure was helpful to me. I admire its spirit, and its platform is my platform. I wish I was able to send for it. I am very thankful to the friend who sent it to me.—REV. F. G. RAGLAND, Mobile, Ala.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE WRITINGS OF JOHN.

LESSON III.—October 17, 1886.—Jesus Delivered to be Crucified.—John 19: 1-16.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Then delivered he him therefore unto them to be crucified.—John 19: 16.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The Witness of Pilate to Christ's perfect innocence has been the invariable witness of his worst enemies. vs. 1-8. Pilate evidently hoped that by delivering Jesus to be thus cruelly treated, even the malignant hatred of the priestly leaders of the rabble would be satisfied. It was only a new stratagem by which he hoped to escape from the dilemma in which his own cowardice had placed him. He himself should have blushed before the mob for his cruel inconsistency, the outrage on every principle of justice in allowing an innocent prisoner, innocent by his own statement, to be thus shamefully maltreated. As Judas was given opportunity after opportunity to repent of his premeditated crime, until the fatal moment when he turned away from the last tender appeal and shut the gates of hope on himself forever, so Pilate is given a full chance to learn the true nature and mission of Christ. "Behold the Man." This expression of the Roman governor in its deep significance, and the strong hold which it has taken on the heart of the Christian world, stands side by side with that similar one by John the Baptist, "Behold the Lamb of God." Christ is the central Fact of human history, and all the events which are agitating the world to-day are important only as they affect the progress of his kingdom.

2. Christ delivered up to be crucified. vs. 9-16. The new charge made by the Jews that Jesus claimed divinity and its effect on Pilate we can best understand by remembering that his was a mind nurtured in paganism. The old Grecian and Roman mythologies were full of traditions of gods appearing in the likeness of men. Fear as well as curiosity prompted him to re-examine Jesus. To all his previous questions he had received full replies, and nothing could be gained by going over the ground again. Besides he had turned away carelessly or contemptuously from any fuller revelations, sceptically asking, "What is truth?" This was reason enough why Christ should remain silent. Nothing is revealed to the sceptical, everything to the believing. Had Pilate been a just ruler, had he not been conscious that his hands were stained with bribes, and that his official career would not bear examination, he would doubtless have been braver at this crisis. Clean hands and a pure heart will make the weakest courageous. Cowardice is actually what upholds all the popular evils through which Christ is to-day crucified afresh and put to an open shame. Yet no command is more often repeated in God's last charge, through Moses, to the chosen people than this, "Be strong." A decline in moral courage always marks a period of spiritual declension in the church, and corruption in society. The popular voice is not always a safe one to follow. It may demand of us at least silence when silence is criminal. In this case as in all others, it is necessary to try the spirits whether they are of God. If multitudes acknowledge His kingship, as do the Prohibition crowds, which are now demanding the suppression of the saloon, theirs is indeed the voice of God; but if like the Anarchist assemblies, or the mobs which try to suppress the light of truth on the secret orders, they cry, "We have no king but the Cæsar of the Grand Lodge," it is self-evident that it is the voice of Satan, because to persecute innocence, to outrage justice, to hate light, is the spirit of the bottomless pit, that spirit which once crucified Christ, and would do so again.

LIGHT FROM THE WORD.

Of what prophecy was Christ's silence a fulfillment? Isa. 53: 7. How was the declaration of the priests in verse fifteen a positive proof from prophecy that the Messiah had actually come? Gen. 49: 10.

From Peloubet's Notes.

"Pilate therefore took Jesus, and scourged him." The scourge of leather thongs was loaded with lead, and armed with spikes and bones, which lacerated back, and chest, and face, till the victim sometimes fell down before the judge a bleeding mass of torn flesh. Scourging was the terrible introduction to crucifixion—"the intermediate death." Stripped of his clothes, his hands tied, and back bent, the victim would be bound to a column or stake, in front of the Prætorium. The scourging ended, the soldiery would hastily cast upon him his upper garments, and lead him back into the Prætorium.—Edersheim.

"And the soldiers platted (wove) a crown of thorns." The action of the soldiers was in mockery of his royal claims. Hasselquist, a Swedish naturalist, supposes this crown to have been woven of a very common plant, naba or nubka of the Arabs, with many small and sharp spines; soft, round, and pliant branches, leaves much resembling ivy, of a very deep green, as if in designed mockery of a victor's wreath.—Alford.

"I bring him forth to you, that ye may know that I find no fault (crime) in him." There seems to have been a two-fold plea for his release. (1) He was innocent of crime. This Pilate repeats three times on that Friday morning. Jesus may have seemed foolish and full of vain pretensions to him, but he had committed no crime. (2) Pilate had allowed the mockery because he found it fell in with his own design to release Jesus as being too insignificant for serious treatment.—Westcott.

"When Pilate heard that saying, he was the more afraid." Pilate had already heard of Jesus's teaching, and his mighty works, and Jesus himself had claimed to be a king. His whole demeanor and appearance confirmed the impression that he might be a prophet. Therefore Pilate had been afraid to condemn him to death. The injustice was too glaring to be safe. What if he should work a miracle of vengeance on him! But now he was made still more afraid by this, to him, new claim of Jesus. "What if Jehovah, God of the Jews, were a real divinity, and this remarkable person his son, as Hercules was said to be the son of Jupiter? If Pilate should condemn him unjustly, would not celestial vengeance come upon him?"

"But Jesus gave him no answer." Why? (1) Because no answer that he could then and there have given would have been understood by Pilate. (2) Pilate knew his duty already, and the one question was whether he would release one whom he had acknowledged to be innocent. Jesus would not aid him in turning away from the one great question, whether he would do what he knew to be right. This was not the time to satisfy curiosity or to quell fears. (3) Any answer would have been useless. Pilate's action had other sources than any truth Jesus might utter.—P.

"Thou couldest have no power at all against me, except it were given thee from above," i. e., from God. Human government is only valid as the expression of the divine will. He, therefore, who exercises it is responsible, whatever he may suppose, to a higher power.—Westcott.

"We have no king but Cæsar." And yet all this professed loyalty to Rome was a pretense and a sham. With this cry, Judaism was, in the person of its representatives, guilty of denial of God, of blasphemy, of apostasy. It committed suicide, and, ever since, has its dead body been carried in show from land to land, and from century to century.—Edersheim.

THE FATE OF THE MURDERERS. It is proper here to note the fate of the murderers of Jesus. Judas died by his own hand. Pilate was soon recalled, degraded, banished to Gaul; where he committed suicide. The tower from which he is said to have precipitated himself is still standing. Herod died in infamy and exile; Calaphas was deposed the next year.—G. W. Clark. The house of Annas was destroyed a generation later by an infuriated mob, and his son was dragged through the streets and scourged and beaten to his place of murder.—Farrar.

"DIES IRAE."

The old familiar Latin hymn, with a new elegant translation by S. V. White, Esq., banker, broker, astronomer, seaman, and now in danger of becoming Republican member of Congress, in addition to the above is a capitalist, orator and poet; and, to crown all, a former graduate under the senior editor of the Cynosure. Our readers will relish this new translation of an old hymn.—[ED. CYNOSURE.]

Dies ira, dies illa
Solvat aecium in favilla,
Teste David cum Sibylla.

Quantus tremor est futurus,
Quando iudex est venturus,
Cuncta stridite discussurus!

Tuba mirum spargens sonum
Per sepulchra regionum, Coget omnes ante Thronum.

Mors stupebit, et Natura,
Cum resurget creatura,
Iudicanti responsura.

Liber scriptus proferetur,
In quo totum continetur.
Unde mundus iudicetur.

Iudex ergo cum sedebit,
Quidquid latet apparebit;
Nil inultum remanebit.

Quid sum, miser, tunc dicturus,
Quem patronum rogaturus,
Cum vix justus sit securus!

Rex tremendae majestatis,
Qui salvandos salvas gratis
Salva me, Fons Pietatis.

Recordare, Jesu pie,
Quod sum causa tuae viae,
Ne me perdas illa die.

Quaerens me, sedisti lassus,
Redemisti, cruceum passus;
Tantus labor non sit cassus.

Iuste iudex ultionis,
Donum fac remissionis,
Ante diem rationis.

Ingenioque tantum reus,
Culpa rubet vultus meus,
Supplicanti parce, Deus.

Qui Mariam absolvisti,
Et latronem exaudisti,
Mihi quoque peccator dedisti.

Precor meae non sum dignus
Sed tu bonus fac benigne,
Ne perenni cremer ignis.

Inter oves locum praesta,
Et ad hanc me sequestra,
Statuens in parte dextra.

Confutatis maledictis,
Famulis acribus addictis,
Voca me cum benedictis.

Oro supplex et acclinis,
Cor contritum, quasi cinis;
Gere curam mei finis.

Laetamini dies illa,
Qua resurget ex favilla
Judicandus homo reus.
Huic ergo parce, Deus.

Ple Jesu Domine,
Dona eis requiem sempiternam.

Day of wrath! O day appalling;
Melts the earth, to ashes falling,
Prophet's words, and seer's recalling.

Oh! what terror is impending,
See, the mighty Judge descending,
Laying bare each fault offending.

Trumpet wakes the slumbering legions
From the graves of all the regions,
At the Throne compels allegiance.

Dazed is death, and trembles Nature,
When aghast—with pallid feature,—
Stands in judgment, every creature.

Opened are the written pages
Which record the sins of ages;
Thence decreed are error's wages.

To that book the Judge appealing,
Every hidden thing revealing;
Nothing are we now concealing.

What am I,—the wretched—saying?
To what saint or angel praying,
When on just ones sins are weighing?

King, majestic beyond measure,
Free to save of thy good pleasure,
Give salvation as my treasure.

Jesus, hear my supplication,
Since I caused thine incarnation:
On that day, O grant salvation.

Seeking me thou wert hiest;
To redeem me, lo! thou diest;
In thy labor fall not, Highest!

Judge! Thou just in retribution,
Make the gift of absolution
Ere the day of execution.

Hear me groan, in anguish crushing,
Crimson-faced from guilty blushing,
Spare me, all my terror hushing.

Thou didst pardon Mary, needing;
Thou didst heed the robber's pleading,
And dost give me hope exceeding.

All unworthy is my praying
Glaucous One! Thy love displaying,
In endless fires forbid my staying.

Among the sheep, O Lord! I state me;
From the goats, O separate me;
With the blessed grant to rate me.

When the damned from thee are driven;
And to endless flames are given;
Call me to a home in heaven.

A suppliant, I kneel, imploring,
Crushed in heart, my grief outpouring,
Bear me to thy throne, adoring.

Oh! that dreadful day of weeping,
When man rising from his sleeping,
For the Judgment must prepare him;
Spare him, Lord, O kindly spare him.

Jesus, Lord! in love supernal,
Give to him thy rest eternal.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MOR-GAN ABANDON.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Onondaga jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his name to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT TO IT.

In closing his letter he writes: "I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the 'Anti-Masonic' excitement' by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influence of 'secret societies'."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. (Chicago National Christian Association.) Single copy, 6 cents.

HENRY L. KELLOGG.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, OCTOBER 7, 1886

Dr. McCosh, Dr. Hodge, and Dr. Paxton of Princeton College and Theological Seminary; Drs. Stevenson, and David and Joseph Collins of Philadelphia; and Drs. Storrs and Talmage of Brooklyn, have signed a paper in favor of the proposed Chicago Congress of Christians, closing with the words: "We hope the call will issue and the meeting be held."

The papers generally referred to and commented on a prophecy by a Mr. Wiggins (which we have not seen) that the world would end or some great catastrophe would occur on the 29th of September, now past; and boys in the streets of the cities were discussing the probability of such an event the day before, and in some quarters adults were said to have shared the trepidation. "Of that day and hour knoweth no man," and all such human conjectures are vain. These prophecies are doubtless set abroad for their reactive effect to discredit the words of Christ that "the Son of man will come." So the boys cried "Wolf! wolf!" till the shepherds became indifferent, and the wolves indeed came and destroyed the sheep.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

SARATOGA, N. Y., Sept. 29th, 1886.—We alight at this watering place with our faces toward home. The "season" here is over. The rattling carriages, noisy streets, thronged balconies, chattering sidewalks, calls of "carriage!" "carriage!" and the blast of the winding stage horn, with "tramp, tramp" of its team of six horses,—these all are hushed and you can sit at the High Rock or in the Hathorn and hear the gurgle and gush of its sparkling waters from 113 feet, through sixty feet of solid rock bored by a diamond drill; and nothing comes to divert your attention from the two beautiful glass vases, boiling and foaming without heat,—nothing but the clink, clink of glass in another apartment where the bottling process is going on.

As these are gone our readers would perhaps like a series of pictures, beginning with the young American writer,

WILL CARLETON, THE POET.

He is the son of an Anti-masonic, anti-slavery farmer, born in the woods of Michigan and educated at Hillsdale College. His first lessons in music were taken from cow-bells in the woods, when sent to "get the cows;" from blackbirds, pulling up the corn; from the shrill, neighing whistle of raccoons in the night, stealing the ears after the corn was grown large; and from the plaintive call of young lambs and the low answers of the mothers in the still barnyard,

"While moon-eyed owlets from the distant hill, Drummed horse responses to the whip-poor-will."

These were young Carleton's first tutors in the science of zoology and natural history, and the Ettrick Shepherd never made better use of his early lessons from nature.

Mr. Carleton has written five books already and they are all popular. Believing thoroughly that "there is much poetry in common life," he set himself to utter it. He began to read some of his poems in school-houses, to such hearers as have since smiled and wept over his "Farm Ballad," "First Settler" and "Betsey and I are Out." And becoming satisfied that the popular sovereigns of the United States would make him their poet-laureate, without patrons or means and "Shrinking, trembling, hoping, fainting, Possessed beyond the Muse's painting," he pushed his Michigan canoe out into the sea of authorship.

The Harpers, one of the national publishing firms (four of whose members are in heaven and seven now on earth) saw his writings and took him on board their ship. Since then Mr. Carleton, with his young wife, who appreciates him, has traveled among the Alps and wandered amid the haunts of living and shrines of dead historic men;

"Where'er the old inspiring gentl' dwell Thither he went and meditated there."

And as he is still in early manhood and has a clear intellect and aspiring temper and the ear of the public, if he shall attain to Cowper's profound piety he may teach coming generations as Cowper has taught the past and is teaching the present.

I am not reviewing Mr. Carleton's books; if so, I would have quoted them. The Cynosure may attempt a review hereafter. But they are not sententious writings, and a brief quotation from them would be like taking an eye or a cheek from a fair woman's face as a specimen of its beauty. Wickliffe, "the morning star of the Reformation," said his mission was to "teach simple men and women the way to Christ." This, too, was Cowper's mission, and it made his verse immortal. So may it be with Carleton. He has Cowper's gentleness, Thompson's love of nature, and the rural fidelity of Gray's Elegy or Goldsmith's "Deserted Village." But the conception of the one Infinite God, with one Mediator by whom he is to be reached, and the system of redemption based on these, makes all the difference between the permanent splendor of Milton and the evening warble of Gray.

S. V. WHITE, WALL STREET, N. Y.

Mr. S. V. White, an alumnus of Knox College, Illinois, while the Cynosure editor was its president, and afterward a patron of Wheaton College, is altogether an interesting man, and as his life runs through some of the most striking events and epochs of American history, our readers will thank the Cynosure for sketching it.

In 1831 Nat Turner and nineteen slave associates arose and undertook to free the slaves of the South. They killed all the whites they came upon, young and old, male and female; and furnished some sixty corpses for a single funeral. They produced a moral earthquake, and the popular terror produced by the late earthquake shocks in the South was far exceeded by that caused by the Southampton massacre. Not only the State troops of Virginia but those of the United States were called to quell "the insurrection" as it was called. So true was it that while slavery lived, the whole South stood on the thin crust of a volcano.

News, at that time, traveled at a snail's pace back to the mountain counties; this panic flew like lightning, and in the hill part of North Carolina, where the father of S. V. White then lived, all the able-bodied men were mustered and ordered to patrol their precincts by night. Mr. White, the father, excited the savagery of his neighborhood by objecting to the brutal scourging inflicted on innocent, often female slaves. He was a non-slaveholder, and was warned to leave the South. He said he would cheerfully do so if they would allow time for the birth of an expected child; which child was the subject of this sketch. The days of grace asked were not allowed, and Mr. White, senior, left home, literally backed out of his county, with his rifle at his shoulder aimed at the leader of the mob which drove the family out.

Young White's first Illinois home was the traditional cabin of logs, chinked with clay, puncheon floor, and chimney of sticks, built cob-house fashion and plastered with the same extemporized mortar. He now lives in his house on Brooklyn Heights, at once a picture gallery and a home; the price of which would have purchased a considerable part of the State of Illinois when his father was driven there from North Carolina.

Mr. White reverses the common maxim that diversity of occupations prevents success in any one. He became a lawyer soon after leaving Knox College, and has conducted suits successfully in the United States Court at Washington. He became a loan agent, and his integrity and ability made him worth thirty thousand dollars in eleven years. He believed speculating in stocks could be so conducted as to be consistent with uprightness, and he has been a Wall street banker and broker for some twenty years with no imputation on his veracity or integrity so far as known. In the last Federal election he spoke eloquently for the Republicans, and many are now anxious to send him to Congress. D'Israeli wrote novels while prime minister of Great Britain; John Quincy Adams was professor, statesman, diplomatist, reformer and poet; and Mr. White, while a successful broker among the first of his class, has built an observatory, mounted a ten thousand dollar telescope, and made a journey to the Rocky Mountains to observe a transit of Venus. He has piloted a steamer through dangerous navigation on the coast, built a railroad in Florida for a prospective orange trade, and when his pastor was assailed, as he thought, unjustly, he was his adviser and advocate in ecclesiastical troubles. Like his father he was an original Abolitionist, and steers clear of secret societies. But though giving thousands of dollars to worthy objects, he lacks that concentration of his faculties which made Paul an apostle, Washington a hero, and Alfred the founder of a state which extends around the globe. J. B.

—Secretary Stoddard went last Friday on an errand of business for the Association to Edgar county, Illinois. At Tuscola, where he waited for a train, he found that Bro. Dissett was remembered, and left tracts in the hands or pockets of all whom he could reach.

—Bro. Wm. Pinkney writes of the Illinois lecturer's work in the vicinity of Wyand in Bureau county with high praise. The audiences were good and increased to the end of the course of three lectures, and every reasonable person was convinced that modern sun-worship as practiced in the Masonic lodges of Illinois was identical with the ancient heathen mysteries.

—Bro. Arnold also writes hopefully of the interest manifested in his meetings. He will probably visit Sheffield this week, and next fill several appointments in Aurora and Chicago. Friends in this city will please look for the announcements here and aid in getting out the people that the halls may be full.

—Mr. H. L. Hastings of the Christian, Boston, gave his lecture in reply to Ingersoll on the "Mistakes of Moses" to a fine audience in the Moody church in this city last week, and next day went on homeward, refusing urgent requests to give a series of lectures in the same church and to visit and speak in the College Hall at Wheaton. The Sabbath previous he spoke four times in Minneapolis.

—The American Sentinel of Oakland, California, publishes with comments the Cynosure editorial and correspondence of some time since on the persecution of those who observe the Seventh-day Sabbath. We cannot see how the National Reform Association can be made responsible for such injustice as was reported by Rev. R. M. Kilgore to have taken place in Arkansas, where the principles of the Association have not penetrated, and where the Seventh-day worshippers were oppressed evidently on account of some narrow prejudice or local spite.

—The New York Tribune published an editorial endorsing the work of the Anti-saloon Republican convention in this city, and an admirer reprinted the article for distribution. Another Republican approached Gen. C. B. Fisk, Prohibition candidate for Governor of New Jersey, with a $10,000 check, which he offered to the General if he would distribute the Tribune article as he canvassed the State. Gen. Fisk replied that he would circulate his paper but refused the check, which would soon have started the story of a bribe.

—An able article by Bro. Hinman, lately published in the American and copied by the Free Press of Birmingham, makes the unpleasant mistake the Cynosure has several times in years past corrected. The name of Daniel Sickles, the Masonic publisher of New York, is confounded with that of Gen. Daniel E. Sickles, who, in 1859, when a Democratic Congressman from New York, shot Philip Barton Key in the streets of Washington for unlawful intimacy with his wife. It would be well if the American and Free Press should note this correction.

—The inventory of Mr. Carpenter's estate was filed last week in the probate court in this city. The personal property amounts to somewhat over $100,000, which, with the real estate amounts to some $500,000. The fund left with Mrs. Cheney and Mrs. Hildreth and Dr. Roy to be used against the lodge will not probably be available for a year. Dr. Roy is contemplating a diligent use of his portion among the colored churches of the South, and probably at this early date the ladies have not given much thought to the matter. Before the real estate can be sold and the fund made available the noble women who have become interested in the reform may find the way opening for a grand work of their own. Miss Flagg begins to speak as well as write, and the meeting at Princeton developed some noble spirits whose enthusiasm is equal to any emergency of a difficult and unpopular reform.

—Rev. M. A. Gault, of the National Reform Association, writes in the Western Crank of a late visit to Maryville, Mo., and the great revival in that place: "I spent Sabbath, Sept. 12, in Maryville. Quite a number of good M. E. people there welcome me to their pulpit when I have a day to stop off. I preached in their church to a crowded house in the morning, and the South Methodist church in the evening. Bro. Cox, the M. E. pastor, is a warm-hearted, strong, enthusiastic man, and is quite friendly to national reform. His church has had a wonderful revival during the past few months. There were one hundred received into full membership the Sabbath before. The revival began in Elder Smith's Salvation Hall. It was too small to hold the crowd, and they were invited over to the M. E. church, and so the Methodists took in converts."

meeting, because they make the closing part of their lecture bear down into the pockets of the people. There are few audiences in which there would not be some response for contributions if the cause is presented so as to reach their hearts. Where most of our reform lecturers fail, is in not making a lecture practical in the line of raising contributions. Giving for the support of a cause is the grandest way to inspire people with an interest in it, for a person will feel an interest in a cause in ratio to the number of dollars he invests in it. Any interest or any religion which does not reach down into the pocket is worth very little. A reform lecturer who does not make a study of how to reach men's pockets, but who expects them to give without any appeal, is like a man who will take a milk bucket, and go off to the pasture, sit down on a stone, and wait for a cow to back up and be milked.

The greatest difficulty with an anti-secret lecturer is that his subject is so unpopular with the masses. If I was lecturing on that theme I would introduce the thin edge of the wedge, instead of driving the big end first. In order to get on common ground with my audience, I would take as the topic of my first lecture, Prohibition, the great burning question uppermost in the people's minds. You can't get the American people to entertain more than one great question at a time. Let three-fourths of a speaker's time be given in the first lecture to a radical discussion of prohibition, and let the remainder of it be devoted to showing how the lodge system interferes with the enforcement of law. This is what I would call driving the thin edge of the wedge first. Afterwards the people would be willing to hear more radical utterances.

I believe lectures should be carefully written out and the points very clearly in the mind, and they should bristle all through with sharp points and illustrations. A man to go before the public now-a-days as a lecturer of a great reform, should be no common talker. I give these hints as my ideal, and, I may say, one of which I come far short.

M. A. GAULT.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

Tarkio College, Missouri, in charge of the United Presbyterians, began its second year under the present management with fifty students.

Amity College, at College Springs, Iowa, Rev. Dr. T. J. Kennedy, president, is prospering finely this year, over a hundred students being present.

The United Presbyterian Theological Seminary at Allegheny City has thirty-five students in attendance, and that at Xenia, Ohio, thirty-three.

James Russell Lowell will deliver the oration at the 250th anniversary of Harvard, which will be observed with unusual honors early in November.

Prof. John Dickinson, a brother to Miss Anna Dickinson, has accepted the chair of geology and mineralogy and curator of the museum in the University of Southern California at Los Angeles.

Mr. Moody's Northfield Girls' Seminary is to have two new buildings. Mr. David M. Weston, of Boston, the president of the Board of Trustees, has offered to build a $20,000 brick and stone dormitory to accommodate thirty or forty pupils, and Mr. James Talcott, of New York, will erect a much needed library building, where the now scattered libraries can be consolidated.

A writer in one of the New York papers alleges that students at Harvard spend $600 to $5,000 yearly, and that those of the latter class, mostly the sons of wealthy families in the cities, "fast" young men, become representative in giving the college its public character. This is unfortunate. A display of wealth in a school is in bad taste, to say the least, but it is in a special way demoralizing. It is worse both upon the students and the educated public than the poverty plan still pursued by some institutions and boasted of by their patrons. Real education never thrives amidst luxuries.—United Presbyterian.

Francis R. Brooks, of Chicago, formerly a student at Harvard College, has commenced suit against the institution to recover $50,000 damages. Brooks was engaged in performing an experiment in the chemical laboratory, when a retort containing sulphuric acid which he was using exploded and he was terribly burned. One of his eyelids was burned off and his face was otherwise mutilated and torn, the disfigurements being permanent. It is claimed by the plaintiff that the experiment was being performed under the direction of a professor, and that he supposed he was working in safety, and that through the carelessness of the professor in charge of the acid the accident occurred.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

Almost every day since the President's return, his familiar equipage with the handsome seal browns, has been seen on the streets. Sometimes it is on the avenue, the only occupant of the carriage being Mrs. Cleveland, in a stylish black silk, and with the seat covered with packages that plainly indicate that she has been indulging in that feminine foible, shopping. But generally the carriage may be seen whirling in a cloud of dust towards the President's country home. Mr. and Mrs. Cleveland visited it on the morning after their return, and they have driven out there several times since. It has been decided, to their regret, that the mansion will not be ready for occupancy before next summer. The exterior has not yet been completed, and within the work has progressed no further than nailing on the laths. A score of workmen are busily engaged on it, and a number more are laying out the grounds. It will be a charming big bower when completed, surrounded by trees and commanding a picturesque view. The shape and style of the house has been so changed that it would be impossible for the former owner to recognize it. No one is allowed to approach the house. The President has given orders to that effect, and a sturdy watchman, with a mild-looking dog, is stationed there to carry them out. The entire farm is being enclosed by a barbed wire fence, seven and a half feet high. This would indicate that Mr. Cleveland intends to keep deer.

Every one is returning to Washington now. The President has issued an order that the regular Cabinet meeting shall be held as usual on Tuesday, and he expects all the members of the Cabinet, with the exception of Mr. Manning, to be present. And when the Cabinet returns, society will straggle back.

The report that the President had appointed Senator McPherson to be Secretary of the Treasury, has little notice about that department. It is quite certain that Mr. Manning intends to resume his labors, in spite of the reports of objections from the doctors. His health is so nearly recovered that he will venture to continue the work which he engaged to do two years ago. His absence would be felt keenly by Mr. Cleveland, who will not accept the resignation handed him when it seemed unlikely that Mr. Manning would recover.

The monthly report of the Treasury suggests a question respecting the national debt. The total gold coin and bullion in the Treasury Sept. 30 was $242,609,018, as compared with $235,430,635 on the 31st of the previous month. The net gold in the Treasury, after deducting gold certificates in treasury cash, and in circulation Sept. 30 was $157,917,211. It cannot be the wisest national policy to accumulate such immense sums to tempt the average politician who must not be regarded as being of superior virtue to the rest of mankind. So long as men are greedy and avaricious and the vaults of the nation are glutted, there will be stealing and rumors of stealing. Why not more rapidly pay off the national debt and cut off the unnatural power of capital which is thereby exercised?

One of the most familiar faces on the streets of Washington is that of Mr. Bancroft, the noted historian. Amid the drifting population of which the Capital City is largely composed, he remains a fixture; and his strongly marked features, surrounded by snow white hair, and his step, firm in spite of his advanced age, are well known throughout the city. Mr. Bancroft has a grand-daughter of whom he is very fond, a charming young lady who arrived from France several years ago. During the first months of her stay here she could not understand English, and Mr. Bancroft delighted in being her interpreter. But now she speaks English very easily, and has become quite a society favorite. It is in connection with her that one of the latest stories about Mrs. Cleveland's tact and graceful courtesy is related. Some mendacious correspondents, in their mania for news, invented the story that the President's wife and Miss Bancroft were great cronies. In consequence of this report, several persons who did not know Miss Bancroft's address, sent letters to her in the care of Mrs. Cleveland. The latter forwarded them to the owner, with a note saying that she was sorry that the rumor was only a mistake, and that she hoped it might prove a prophecy. Miss Bancroft was very much pleased, and there is every prospect of their reported friendship being verified.

It is amusing to see the various methods adopted by men in public life here to get rid of the office-seekers with whom they are plagued. One of the most original ideas is that of Assistant Postmaster General Stevenson, who has an ingenious way of politely making it uncomfortable for the office-hunters. He has on an average about fifty callers a day, and can tell whether they want offices or not at a glance.

If they belong to the former class, he invites them to take a particular chair near his desk. It is a luxurious chair, covered with leather with easy springs on all sides. It might be supposed that the visitor would stay longer in such a chair than in a hard one, but Mr. Stevenson has a theory that the average office-hunter would feel far less at home in a really easy arm chair than on something hard and uncomfortable, like what he has been accustomed to. This theory he has fully demonstrated to be correct, for when the visitor sinks into the chair he completely loses his talking powers, and Mr. Stevenson has little difficulty in getting all the business from a man and then dismissing him in a very short time.

The General Grand Chapter of Royal Arch Masons and the General Grand Council of Royal and Select Masons are meeting in the city this week. The former, in exercise of their royal prerogative and as representatives of an alien power, called upon President Cleveland, but it does not appear that they were accorded any special recognition on account of their lodge dignity and heavy titles. Of the latter body George W. Pinckard, of Louisiana, was chosen General Grand Master, and George W. Dadnum, of Massachusetts, G. G. Chaplain. The Royal Arch body refused to recognize the Mark Lodge of Canada because of a Masonic invasion of another jurisdiction to make subordinate lodges. It refused also any representation from the R. A. Masons of Australia.

PRESS COMMENT.

Since the departure of Lord Aberdeen, the late Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, who with his wife was an earnest Christian, the military bands have been allowed to play in Phoenix Park, Dublin, on Sunday afternoons. This not only disturbs the quiet of the day, but is cheating the overworked conductors and drivers of the street-cars out of the hours previously allowed them for rest.—New York Witness.

Secret political parties can never win in this country, and when the Knights of Labor or any other secret order undertake to dictate political actions or politics they will necessarily fail. This is a free country, where all things should be open and above board.—Telegraph, Atlantic, Iowa.

The American party have nominated George Heaton, of Fairfield, as their candidate for Congress in this district. Mr. Heaton is in hearty accord with his party, not only on account of its opposition to secret societies but also in being a thoroughgoing and sincere Prohibitionist. He is an excellent man, and the Tribune can commend him to all who are earnestly in favor of Prohibition, and who like to vote for men who are consistent.—Fairfield, Iowa, Tribune.

The lodge has been getting hold of the old soldiers. We behold in sworn lodgery a great evil. The minor branches of the system are props to the more devilish parts. The same spirit pervades in a degree all secrecy. As soon as he enters the G. A. R. he ceases to be an outspoken opposer of the more iniquitous lodges. Should we then remain silent and allow secrecy to capture the old soldier? No! Should we allow it to deceive the people under our nose and tell them it is not a secret society? No, not while the Crank turns. The Crank will stand by the citizen soldier when in the garb of a citizen soldier; but when he comes wearing the short clothes of Masonry and officiating as a legger for a secret society that fetters the conscience, yokes the believer and the unbeliever contrary to the commands of God, goes on excursions on the Sabbath day in defiance of the law of God, countenances the liquor traffic at its encampments, and threatens and abuses those that oppose it in true Masonic style, gentlemen, we shall speak our opposition in words unsugar-coated.—College Springs Crank.

Rev. Wm. Johnston, D. D., is mentioned by a number of papers in the region of College Springs, Iowa, where Dr. Johnston lives, as a good man to nominate for Congress on the Prohibition ticket. We have known him pretty well for more than a quarter of a century of his ministerial life, and we will here say the country has few such men in our National Congress. He is ahead of the times on the living issues of the age, has independence enough to do his own thinking, and he has the courage of his convictions and is not afraid to let the world know where he stands on any question vital to the public good. We shall be glad to hear of his nomination, and had we a hundred votes as a citizen of the Hawkeye State they should all go to help his election. He is pastor of the flourishing United Presbyterian congregation at College Springs.—Sandy Lake News.

THE HOME.

MY LITTLE BIRD.

My little bird while in the light
Could never sing my song,
Though tenderly I sang to him
And patiently and long.

Sometimes a strain or two he caught,
Anon he lost the air,
And mingled with the other strains
He picked up here and there.

At last a curtain thick I laid
Above my wayward bird,
Then sang the song I chose for him,
While in the dark he heard.

Shut in from luring sights and sounds
He learned to sing my song,
And in the light he poured it forth
In cadence sweet and strong.

There is a song the Lord would have
His dear disciples learn,
But when the world is bright to them,
To worldly songs they turn;

And notes of revelry and mirth
They mingle with the strains
The Master long was teaching them
With so much love and pains.

Then clouds of sorrow o'er their homes
He doth in mercy bring,
And, shut in gloom, at length they learn
The song he'd have them sing—

The song of love and peace and trust,
On earth their sweetest song;
Their song of songs in realms of light
With all the joyful throng.

—Rev. W. T. Sleeper.

THE MOOD OF LEVITY IN RELIGION.

The absence of religious seriousness is an evil sign, and we are sometimes afraid there is a decline in the earnestness and reverence with which religious truth ought to be treated. That truth is not exactly formally rejected, it is not treated with bitterness or with any deep feeling whatever, it is simply dealt with as a non-essential harmless matter, calling neither for enthusiasm nor hostility. Some of these light-hearted ones think there are directions in which the religious sentiment may be advantageously recognized, whilst others agree to disregard it altogether as having little or no relation whatever to the profound, imperative essential interests of life. But to all of them it is a thing of frivolity—exciting no passionate feeling, entering into no strong conviction, inspiring neither solemn hope nor fear. Some regard religion with the sense of humor. They discuss the contents of the Bible, the miracles of Christ, the policy and position of the Christian church in a light, bantering, quizzing style. In reading Leslie Stephen, as he discusses the most solemn topics, you feel the whole system of Christian truth is little more to him than a tremendous joke. The railery is perennial; from page to page funny things are insinuated about God, Christ, heaven, hell, and all the great doctrines which have made the mightiest men and the best men ponder, weep, sing from one generation to another. It is truly strange to follow this distinguished writer, and note how devoutly he interweaves sparkling jests with the throne of God, the cross of Christ, the trumpet of judgment, the fires of retribution, the glories of Paradise. You can see he writes with a smiling, good-natured contempt. It is true he is debating the greatest questions which ever occupied the attention of man, but he does it with the queer voice of the showman who exhibits Punch in the streets. Matthew Arnold is open to a certain extent to the same objection. He has a great deal to say about Isaiah and Paul, but the profound seriousness of prophet and apostle are far from the supercilious critic. Again and again you feel he regards Christianity much as Cervantes regarded chivalry, and his design is to laugh religion out pretty much as the Spanish novelist is said to have laughed out chivalry. And this spirit of levity in treating the verities of the faith is far too common alike in literature and conversation.

Others regard the religious sentiment as a mere matter of taste. The grand characters and scenes of Revelation simply furnish splendid subjects for sculpture and painting. George Eliot was strong on this point. In her estimation Christianity was little more than a classic fable or mediæval legend, but she greatly valued it for a certain mythological artistic work. "I imagine," she writes "no dogmas can be suggestive of poetry. But surely Christianity, with its Hebrew retrospect and millennial hopes, the heroism and divine sorrow of its founder, and all its glorious army of martyrs, might supply, and has supplied a strong impulse, not only to poetry, but to all the fine arts." Christianity was neither a system to excite indignation, nor to inspire love strong as death, it merely inspired painters and suggested pretty pictures. Religion has also made its contribution to music and song. Thousands admire the Messiah as an oratorio. Harriet Martineau, who utterly repudiated the great facts and hopes of Christianity, found pleasure in listening to the vast music and great songs of Handel. Thus many to-day who, however, have none of Miss Martineau's hostility to Christianity, seem to think the chief use of the New Testament is to furnish a musical entertainment for æsthetic people. What has stirred to their depths the greatest souls, filling them with bitter remorse, terrible fear, mighty comfort, ecstatic hope, splendid heroism, is calmly, smilingly relegated to paint-brushes and fiddle-strings. Finally, others, failing to realize the majesty and indispensibility of religion, regard attention to it as a mere matter of respectability. They have no notion their eternal destiny turns upon it, they would regard any enthusiasm in it as a palpable mistake, but it is one of the fashions of the times, and many little pleasant things are bound up with its observance. It is ornamental perhaps, but then one would not willingly dispense with a pretty ornament, the wearing of which is attended with æsthetic gratification and social credit.

No mood incapacitates more for the reception of the truth than the mood of levity. Paul found perhaps less success in Athens than in any other city, chiefly because of the intellectual and moral frivolousness of the Athenians. There is a legend which tells it was revealed to an alchemist that the stone which turns to gold lay on the bank of a certain river. Eagerly the alchemist set forth with a piece of iron in his hand testing first one stone and then another, flinging them one after another into the water as they proved worthless; and so he went on for years with unavailing toil. At length he fingered the precious stone, for touching the iron it flashed into gold, but alas! he had become so indifferent and his hand so accustomed to the touch and go movement that the philosopher's stone heedlessly followed the common pebbles and was lost in the river forever. Thus was it with the Athenians. They were supposed to be truth-seekers, and in a sense doubtless were so, but fickle, laughing, sarcastic, dilettante souls as they were they sinned away the great opportunity and missed the truth that turns life into gold. Many in these days are like them, and through lack of earnestness and seriousness are unable to find the truth which saves. No men are farther from the highest knowledge and salvation; there is hope for the sensualist and blasphemer sooner than for these. It is a temper against which all need carefully to watch. A scornor, a humorist, a virtuoso seeketh wisdom and findeth it not, but knowledge is easy to him that is sincere.—H. M., in London Review.

CHURCH WORK.

There is much said in these days about "church work," and curious work some of it is. It comprehends religion, education, amusement, worship, fairs, levees, concerts, grab-bags, broom-drills, necktie parties, suppers, sociables, and we know not what else, and all having for their object to "sustain the cause" and support the minister.

But how different is this church work from the work done by men to work out their own salvation with fear and trembling, knowing that it is God that worketh in them, both to will and to do of his good pleasure.

If God works through a church, and that church works together with God, we shall see "church work" that will tell for good both for time and for eternity. But if "church work" is simply for amusement and money-getting, it will defeat itself. The church will be degraded and the truth disgraced. One man soundly converted to God will often bring more money into the church treasury than can be gathered together in months of time devoted to "church work" in the shape of fairs, festivals, and monkey-shines.

If men will have amusements they can find them in theatres; if they will have festivals there are many houses of feasting where they may go. But if the longing for God's peace and God's salvation be the deepest desire of the human heart, the church of Christ will find their fullest prosperity in devoting their attention to this necessity, and in thus seeking to save sinners and build up saints in their most holy place.

If faithful Christian men and women can use proper social attractions to win men to Christ, it is well. Let Matthew spread his table and invite all the publicans, but let them find the Great Teacher seated at the head. If "the poor, the maimed, the lame and the blind" can be gathered to a feast, and so led to the Saviour, let it be done; but this is a different thing from putting the church members at work with worldlings and sinners to furnish sport for the Philistines, and to run the church in paths of worldliness, to please the world, the flesh and the devil.—The Christian.

STEADFASTNESS IN TRUTH.

Little boats always totter about on the surface of the water, going all ways, as it happens, and overturning in a breath; while the great ship sinks deeply in and goes steadily on. The cause of its steadiness is its depth. So abiding in the great truths of God gives steadfastness of motion to the soul. Under all the pressure of error and unbelief and false doctrines, it is unmovable, abounding in the work of the Lord. It is not "tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive." Eph. 4. 14.

It is a great thing to take the truth, and hold to it. It is a great thing to know error and let it alone. Holding on to the fundamentals of truth and seeking God's help, the soul is sure to come into the light.—Dr. Goodell.

LOVERS OF PLEASURE.

Persons will pay to be amused. The Boston correspondent of the Cape Cod Item gleans a few figures regarding this matter:

In twenty-six weeks one lady of fair face and damaged reputation, drew $256,000 from the pockets of the public, and in twenty four weeks another of similar character drew $390,000; a singer in her first tour drew $226,000, and another singer in fifty-eight concerts drew over $200,000; an actor drew $280,000; and another actor $315,000.

Here are "six stars," averaging to work twenty-six weeks, who in one season drew from the public one million, six hundred and sixty-seven thousand dollars ($1,667,000). I like to write it out in full, and when people tell me of hard times, no money in circulation, and all that sort of thing, I want to just quote this fact, that in one season the American pleasure-seekers paid six men and women over a million and a half of money! For what? Amusing them for two or three hours with music or acting, and in the first case it was neither,—only just to see a world-renowned beauty.

With this pleasure-seeking goes other expenses, and men waste on lust and wine the abundance which God bestows, while poor women toil and stitch for a pittance, and men strive in vain for daily bread and comfortable clothing.—Safeguard.

INDIAN PICTURE-WRITING.

Let us see how an Indian of North America goes to work to write. Suppose a wild Indian belonging to the great clan whose members call themselves the Turtles, makes a raid on a village of huts and wigwams owned by enemies belonging to the wide-spread clan called the Bear clan. Suppose it has taken the Turtles three days of hard travel through forests and over hills to reach the Bears. By means of their crafty spies, they find that the brave men of the Bears are away hunting moose, and that most of the squaws and papposes are either in the fields of maize or in the woods, where the berries are ripe, and only a few old men and women are left behind to keep watch over some ponies and oxen. Then the Turtles, each clutching his bow, creep on the village under cover of the woods, and with a terrific yell rush at the wigwams. The old people run into the bushes, frightened almost to death, as you can well imagine. Then the Turtles gather up all the ponies and oxen, drive them off, burn all the wigwams they can, and hurry home with the cattle. Now these savages think they have done quite a fine thing in robbing their neighbors of their cattle and plundering and burning their homes, as does one great nation in Europe, when, like our Turtle chieftain, badly counseled by wicked and ambitious men, it robs another of a great province, and forces the wretched people who dwell there to obey the laws of a nation they dislike. And they wish to let other Indians know what clever robbers they have been. So the Turtle chief chooses a piece of smooth, cream-colored birch-bark, chews up a little tobacco to serve as ink, plucks a twig of soft wood for a pen, and with the tobacco-juice draws the following pictures: First comes a turtle, and it is a very big turtle, because he thinks that he and his clan are very great personages indeed. Then he draws as many wavy lines, to represent bows, as there are Indians in his party, and perhaps the same number of Indians with topknots; his lines bend forward to show in what direction the trail went. Following these a rising sun stands for daybreak, and three lines under it mean that three days went by in going to the Bears. Next, he puts down as many funny little pyramids as there were Bear wigs, and draws them upside down to show that they were destroyed. After that he draws as well as he can, a wee, wee bear, very small, in order to show his contempt for the Bears. Finally, he draws with the greatest care as many oxen and ponies as he has captured, because he is chiefly proud of this part of his exploit, and wishes all the world of the woods to know what a great and successful robber he is. He does not tell that the Bear braves were away when he surprised the camp, and probably does not care to tell that part of the story. We may understand it from the absence of any sign for scalps. Had there been resistance and men slain on either side, the exact number of dead would have been noted by drawing just as many human figures without their heads.—St. Nicholas.

THE INVENTOR OF LUCIFER MATCHES.

According to a German paper, the inventor of lucifer matches was a political prisoner, who perfected his idea in 1833, within the walls of a State prison. Kammerer was a native of Ludwigsburg, and when sentenced to six months' imprisonment at Hohenasburg, he was fortunate enough to attract the notice and to gain the favor of an old officer in charge of the prison, who, finding he was studying chemistry, allowed him to arrange a small laboratory in his cell. Kammerer had been engaged in researches with a view of improving the defective steeping system, according to which splinters of wood, with sulphur at the ends, were dipped into a chemical fluid in order to produce a flame. If the fluid was fresh the result was satisfactory, but as it lost its virtues after a time, there was no general disposition to discontinue the old-fashioned system of using flint and steel. After many failures Kammerer began to experiment with phosphorus, and had almost completed his term of imprisonment when he discovered the right mixture, and kindled a match by rubbing it against the walls of his cell. On coming out of prison he commenced the manufacture of matches. Unfortunately, the absence of a patent law prevented his rights from being secured, and an Austrian and other chemists analyzing the composition, imitations speedily made their appearance. In 1835 the German States prohibited the use of these matches, considering them dangerous. When they were made in England and sent to the continent these regulations were withdrawn, but too late to be of any benefit to the inventor, who died in the mad-house of his native town, in 1857.

A Christian is always on the perch, or on the wing; he is always reposing in God, or in flight after him; and the latter is as good an evidence of religion as the former; for delight is not only a part of complacency and affection, but also fear, complaint, desire—fear of losing the object; complaint of our enjoying so little of it; desire to attain and feel more.—Henry.

TEMPERANCE.

THE LAWS OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH ON TEMPERANCE AND PROHIBITION.

Some of the periodicals of other denominations, as well as some of our own members, says the Christian Advocate of New York, appear to misunderstand our laws upon these subjects. Lately it has been affirmed that the Methodist Episcopal church has no law against the use of intoxicating liquor as a beverage. Some of our members have also been heard to maintain that, while a man can be expelled from a church for drunkenness, there is no way in which he can be tried for using alcoholic liquors "in moderation." Others have said that, while the general conference has passed resolutions of different kinds upon the question of prohibition, there is nothing in the law of the church upon the subject.

The notion that there is no means by which a person can be brought under discipline for using spirituous liquors as a beverage, provided he is not guilty of drunkenness, is contrary to the facts. Paragraph 32, containing the general rules, places under the acts which disqualify for membership "drunkenness, buying or selling spirituous liquors, or drinking them, unless in cases of extreme necessity." Here the use of spirituous liquors as a beverage and the dealing in them, except for mechanical or medicinal purposes, are as clearly prohibited as drunkenness itself.

In paragraph 233, which is part of the provision for the trial of an accused member, specifications under the general rule are made in the following order: First, "buying, selling or using intoxicating liquors as a beverage;" second, "signing petitions in favor of granting license for the sale of intoxicating liquors;" third, "becoming bondsmen for persons engaged in such traffic;" fourth, "renting property as a place in or on which to manufacture or sell intoxicating liquors." In these cases the order of the church is that private reproof shall be given by the preacher or leader; if there be an acknowledgement of the fault and proper humiliation the person may be borne with. But on the second offense the preacher or leader may take one or two discreet members of the church. On the third offense the law says: "Let him be brought to trial, and if found guilty and there be no sign of real humiliation he shall be expelled."

Thus it appears that the church has made positive laws, which, if enforced, will prevent every private member of the Methodist Episcopal church from all connection with the use of liquors except for medicinal, mechanical, or chemical purposes.

The church also places before the ritual for the administration of the Lord's supper the following direction: "Whenever practicable, let none but the pure, unfermented juice of the grape be used in administering the Lord's supper." The object of this direction is to train up a generation unfamiliar with the taste of intoxicating liquor, and also to avoid a possibility, which, however remote, is a terrible one, of making the holy sacrament a temptation to any weak brother.

On prohibition the thirty-sixth paragraph of the discipline, under the chapter on "Temperance," says: "The business of manufacturing and of vending such liquors is also against the principles of morality, political economy, and the public welfare. We, therefore, regard voluntary total abstinence from all intoxicants as the true ground of personal temperance and complete legal prohibition of the traffic in alcoholic drinks as the duty of the civil government. We heartily approve of all lawful and Christian efforts to save society from the manifold and grievous evils resulting from intemperance, and earnestly advise our people to co-operate in all measures which may seem to them wisely adapted to secure that end." (The italics are ours.)

To be in harmony, therefore, with the laws and spirit of the Methodist Episcopal church a person must be a total abstainer from intoxicating liquors of every kind and degree, except in cases of extreme necessity, and must endeavor to secure the total prohibition of the traffic in alcoholic drinks for such a purpose by co-operating in all measures which may seem to him "wisely adapted to secure that end."

WHO PAYS HIGH LICENSE IN CHICAGO.

The following local news notes from the Chicago Tribune show the manner in which the Illinois high license law works:

"A Milwaukee brewing company yesterday deposited its check with the city collector and took out fifty-three saloon licenses for its customers in Chicago."—Aug. 6.

"The brewers are coming forward and helping the saloon-keepers to take out licenses for the second period. One brewing firm paid $4,666 yesterday, another $3,000, and a third $1,500, to procure licenses for city saloon-keepers."—Aug. 7.

"A prominent Chicago brewer yesterday deposited his check for $12,000 with the city collector and obtained seventy-two saloon licenses for his customers."—Aug. 8.

So, in three days some two hundred licenses were granted to dives so poor that rich brewers and distilleries have to keep them in business. The interests of these liquor manufacturers require that they push the saloon business endlessly beyond the demand; for this is a business that reverses the old rule of demand and supply. Here, the supply creates the demand. Free lunches, picture galleries, free concerts, and a score of other attractions are relied upon to draw young men and old men, often women, within the reach of the temptations of the saloon. The object is to awaken an appetite for strong drink. Start the appetite and the brewer is happy. The strength of the saloon is the brewery and the distillery. There is the place to strike. Remember that there is a United States officer to-day in every brewery and distillery in the country, so that not a gallon of liquor can be made without the consent of that officer. The machinery is ready made to close these establishments. Place the Prohibition party in power at Washington and the edict will go forth. High license is only tritling with the evil.—Voice

PROHIBITION "BEVERAGES."

David W. Judd writes from Iowa to the American Agriculturist:

However much the citizens of Iowa may disagree as to the prohibition laws, provided for by both the State Constitution and the votes of the Legislature, strangers cannot be otherwise than impressed with the remarkable effects of these prohibition enactments; and the innovation often borders on the humorous. For example, instead of seeing, as in the saloons surrounding the railroad depots in other States, such "bulletins" as "Old Crow," "Whisky Punches," "Hot Scotchies," "Kentucky Blue Grass," etc., etc., one is informed by the placards in saloons surrounding the depots at Des Moines and other points in Iowa, that "Hot Coffee," "Hot Tea" and "Pure Lemonade," etc., etc., are "served up here." Of course this order of things provokes no little opposition. But wait, say the earnest advocates of temperance, until you read the reports, after two years, from our Iowa prisons and jails, until you see how much our taxes are reduced by the absence of murder trials, and the expenses attending all the other crimes and excesses resulting from "free rum."

Sunday, October 17th, has been designated as "Temperance Sunday" by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union. The programme calls for sermons in the morning, Sunday-school exercises in the afternoon, and union temperance meetings in the evening. The following topics are suggested for local union prayer-meetings for Saturday, October 16th, a leader to be appointed for each hour:

"10:00-11:00.—Our National Sins, Intemperance and Impurity.

"11:00-12:00.—Individual remedies for these—total abstinence, White Cross Pledge, both 'by God's help.'

"12:00-1:00.—Noon hour of Prayer for the World's W. C. T. U., the success of our great petition for the overthrow of the liquor traffic and the opium trade; the continued health and success of our officers and organizers in foreign lands; that the Queen of England and all rulers and potentates may become total abstainers and advocate our sacred cause.

"1:00-2:00.—Our National Sins; Our National Remedies—Total Prohibition, Constitutional and Statutory; Sabbath Laws, the Bible in the Public Schools; Hygienic Education for the Young.

"2:00-3:00.—Individual Remedies for National Sins; the Christian Voter's Relation to the Securing and the Enforcement of Righteous Law.

"3:00-4:00.—The National W. C. T. U. Its purpose, plans, officers and members; its annual meeting, October 22-26."

Mr. Justice Bradley, of the Supreme Court of the United States, in recently opening the Circuit Court of the United States for Pennsylvania, referred as follows to the doctrines of the Anarchists of this country:

"Courts are instituted for the preservation of society and law, which is the bond of society. But what can courts or any other function of government do, if society itself is undermined and disintegrated; if voluntary cabals, whether Jacobin clubs or Anarchist associations, are permitted to prostrate the authority of government and law in the dust? No man can answer this question. No man can look beyond the curtain that hides from our view the scenes which the earth would present if such turbulent elements should prevail. Fire, slaughter and destruction would ride rampant over the world. Nothing but an iron despotism could restore peace; and despotism would inevitably supervene, and republican government would be declared a failure. It is still our hope and trust that we are not reserved for such a catastrophe, but that the sober second thought of the people may be relied on to cure the evils by which we seem to be beset."

This strong and sensible utterance comes from a high source. It is well that the Judges of Courts should remind the people that their safety consists in the supremacy of the laws and in their due and proper execution when the occasion calls for it. The Anarchists are the enemies of all law, and hence the enemies of organized society. We regard them as the worst element in our population, far worse than an equal number of thieves who recognize the fact that their mode of living is criminal, while the Anarchists claim to be reformers. They are the plotters of destruction and murder under the profession of being the friends of humanity and equal rights. The public sentiment of this land, now that it understands who these men are and what are their principles, will be very sure to visit them with its effective frown.—Independent.

LITERATURE.

SONGS OF PILGRIMAGE, a Hymnal for the Churches of Christ. By H. L. Hastings. Pages 544. Price $1.25. Scriptural Text Depository, Boston.

The editor of the Christian has in nothing shown his great industry as in the compilation of this new hymn and tune book, which has occupied his time more or less for some thirty years. The various indexes show what an immense work it has been to select, compose and arrange 1,533 hymns from 865 authors, and 336 tunes from 112 authors. A large number of both are original, of the hymns some 300. The book opens to a classified index of hymns giving the first lines of each, an arrangement superior to anything we have seen in ordinary books. Another convenient arrangement is the printing of the first measure of several familiar tunes under the one selected, so that a choice of several is before the eye. The book is to be warmly commended for the sterling character of its hymns, which, while sufficiently devotional, are far enough away from the trifling and vain repetitions of the Phillips Phillips and McGranahan music, which has too long been unhappily influencing the worship of prayer meetings and Sabbath-schools. If we should criticize the work, it would be to say that there is too much of it. A book of 600 or 700 hymns is enough for an ordinary congregation, and will allow the use of a larger type, which is generally a necessity for evening services.

To the October number of the Century Clarence King contributes a striking paper on "The Biographers of Lincoln," illustrated with full-page portraits of Nicolay and Hay. The frontispiece is a portrait of the liberal statesman of Norway, Bjornstjerne Bjornson, and the illustrated article by H. L. Brækstad with reference to his greater prominence as a writer is entitled "A Norwegian Poet's Home," and gives some account of his literary habits and country life. The stirring article by Franklin H. North, handsomely illustrated, on "The Gloucester Fishers," has a seasonable interest, and should touch a chord of sympathy for the sufferings of these rough men and their families. Captain J. W. Collins, in "Open Letters," discusses "The Outlook of the Fisheries," with reference to Canadian action and home legislation. In "American Explorers at Assos," F. H. Bacon gives the first authoritative account of the success of the expedition headed by Mr. J. T. Clarke and himself for the Archaeological Institute of America. Matthew Arnold's paper on "Common Schools Abroad" discusses, in his indirect way, the American as well as English faults in common-school education. President Gilman, of Johns Hopkins University, writes of "Hand-craft and Redecraft," and makes a noble plea for the restoration of mechanical training in the educational system. Charles de Kay recounts the efforts of "The Ursulines of Quebec" to civilize and Christianize the Indians. Gen. W. S. Rosecrans's description of his victory at "Corinth" is the chief illustrated war article; other papers of a distinct personal interest are reminiscences of Stonewall Jackson, by his sister-in-law, Mrs. Margaret J. Preston, and "Stonewall Jackson's Last Battle," by his aid-de-camp, Captain James Power Smith, who helped the mortally wounded general from the field at Chancellorsville. Striking portraits are given of Rosecrans and Jackson. The latter appears, as time goes by, to have been one of the most remarkable characters in the rebellion, and his devotion, energy and success go far to prove that the rebels had the ablest leaders in that conflict.

St. Nicholas closes its thirteenth volume with a good number. Several continued articles also come to an end, among them Scudder's story of George Washington, which one might wish was longer, also Eckford's "Wonders of the Alphabet." "Old Time Arms and Armor" is finely illustrated, as is also Charles Barnard's entertaining account of the Children's Industrial Exhibition in New York.

"A Bit of Berkshire" is the pleasantly written and illustrated opening article of Demorest's Magazine for October. Though too largely devoted to stories and the fashions, the temperance department is alive and earnest, and the notes on the world's progress are full of valuable information.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—Rev. A. J. Bailey, pastor of the Congregational church in Lake View, adjoining Chicago on the north, has resigned to accept a call to the Congregational church at Ogden, Utah. Mr. Bailey has ably assisted his brother, the editor of the American, Washington, by his letters on Chicago matters.

—The General Conference of the Free Methodist church at Coopersville, Mich., opens Oct. 13th. A large attendance is expected, and railroads generally give a reduced rate of fare.

—The Missouri Free Methodist Conference took strong action against secret societies, pledging the members to "continued, intelligent, and conscientious action against them."

—Rev. M. Baxter, editor of the Christian Herald of London, is about visiting this country, partly in the interest of the Gospel Army, of which he is the head. He will reach Chicago about the middle of October, as a letter to pastor Seguin from the commissioner of the Army in Toronto states. This Army is engaged in city mission work in large centers of population.

—Rev. Dr. Galusha Anderson, formerly president of Chicago University, has been in this city in attendance on the conference of colored Baptists in session at Bethesda church. He was sent by the Baptist Missionary Society, with headquarters at Boston, to induce the colored people to take up the Congo Mission, which had been turned over to the Boston society by the English Baptists. Some opposition was at first shown to the project, but it was finally overcome, and the work accepted with enthusiasm. The colored churches have already raised enough to send two missionaries of their own color.

—The Sam Jones Tabernacle at Cartersville, Georgia, a gift of the evangelist to his native town, was dedicated Sunday, September 5th. The building, which is said to be a very fine one, is intended to be for union Christian meetings, irrespective of denomination.

—The great Yearly Meeting of Friends in Indiana was held in Richmond last week. The epistle from the London Meeting was most highly indorsed, particularly for its testimony against such religious customs as the sacrament and baptism, which a small minority are favoring, and creating no little concern over, several ministers of such teachings not presenting their minutes this year.

—It is said that religion was concerned in promoting the difficulties of Prince Alexander of Bulgaria. He is a Protestant, and attempted to worship in his own way and to build a Protestant chapel in the capital city. This he had to give up, and being surrounded by the Greek religion and Russian influences, his royal safety was at once compromised.

—Mr. Moody received at his recent Northfield Conference contributions for his school ranging from between $45,000 and $50,000. One contribution was $25,000 for a new dormitory for girls, and another $20,000 for a library.

—It is estimated that in 1784 there were 420,000, 000 of pagans, and that these had increased in 1884 to 835,000,000.

—A half century ago in Turkey it was considered a shame for a woman to read. To-day two schools for girls in Constantinople have been established by the Sultan himself.

—Eight years ago a great Premillennial Conference was held in New York. Another will be held Nov. 16th-20th, in Chicago, and such names are signed to the call, as Messrs. A. J. Gordon, J. D. Herr, and G. C. Needham, Baptist; J. H. Brooks, H. M. Parsons (Toronto) W. G. Moorhead, J. F. Kendall, Nathaniel West, and S. H. Kellogg, Presbyterian; E. P. Goodwin, W. J. Erdman, and Addison Blanchard, Congregational; William Nast, L. W. Munhall, and J. S. Kennedy, Methodist; the Anglican Bishop Baldwin, of Huron, and the Reformed Episcopal Bishop Nicholson, of Philadelphia.

—Pastor P. A. Seguin reports that he has had the privilege during the past week of seeing many Romanists at the altar of his mission crying for mercy and forgiveness. Among these was a Frenchman from the county of Vaudeuil, Province of Quebec, who used to attend Bro. Seguin as an altar boy, when as a priest he offered the sacrifice of the mass for the dead and living. Another used to go to him for confession in Montreal. Mr. Seguin is rejoiced to see the wonders which God is working at his mission. As he has no salary whatsoever, he is in need of means to pay the rent of his hall, and asks the Christians of the country to remember this case.

—There has been, it is stated, a great awakening among the Boers (Dutch settlers) of Natal, South Africa. They have been so busy with prayer-meetings that the worldly have complained that they have spoiled the annual races. The leader among the converts is a Mr. Nel, who says he can count over two hundred in his sparsely settled district who have experienced a change of heart. The work was a very quiet one, beginning without the agency of evangelistic meetings. Those awakened showed great anxiety for the heathen Kaffirs, and many natives have been converted.

—The Congregational church at Geneseo, Ill., which was organized in South Bergen, N. Y., and came West as a colony, celebrated its semi-centennial, Sept. 11-13. Eleven of the nineteen original members are still living, nine of them being present at the celebration, besides many former members and four former pastors. During its history the church has experienced numerous stirring revivals, averaging one about every three years. It has had 1,034 members, of whom more than half united on confession of faith. Its home expenses have aggregated over $80,000, and its beneficence, through regular channels, more than $25,000. Its first collection was for foreign missions, which was taken the second year of its history and amounted to $9.80. It has always been a regular supporter of the benevolent societies, gradually increasing its gifts till last year they reached $2,037, or more than eight dollars per resident member. The present pastor, Rev. Albert Bushnell, is now in the eighth year of his service.

—The Presbyterian Observer, alluding to Bishop William Taylor's work in Africa says: "He has begun two chains of missions across Africa, and hopes to start two more during the year. His missions are founded upon principles novel but sound. He enters into agreement with chief and people, agreeing on his part to import good preachers and teachers from the New World free of expense to the tribe, and to purchase tools and machinery for industrial schools. The chief and his people, on their part, are required to give a thousand acres of land for each school farm, to clear and plant, immediately, a few acres of the farm, to provide subsistence for the preachers and teachers; to build houses for the workers, and to pay a small monthly fee for the tuition of day scholars. Boys and girls may work for their tuition. Those wishing a full course, must be allowed to remain in the school at least five years. By this agreement the natives are made to feel that they have made a valuable acquisition, and the mission is at once put upon a permanent, self-supporting basis."

NOTICES.

Notice is hereby given that the next annual convention of the Wisconsin Christian Association opposed to secret Societies, will be held, D. V., at Waupun, commencing Tuesday evening, Oct. 19th and holding over the 20th and 21st. J. W. Wood, President.

W. W. AMES, Secretary.

LODGE NOTES.

The National Council of the United Order of American Mechanics met Tuesday at Baltimore.

The Grand Lodge of Illinois Freemasons meets in this city this week in the Army of the second regiment.

A meeting of the Select Knights of the Ancient Order of United Workmen was held at the Sherman House in this city last week. It included what is known as the First Regiment, as this degree is managed on a strictly military basis. A colonel, lieutenant colonel, and major were elected for this regiment of the 1st Brigade of the 1st Division.

The General Grand Chapter of America, Order of the Eastern Star, assembled in its sixth triennial meeting in St. Louis, September 23, during the K. T. Conclave. There were delegates in attendance from Missouri, Illinois, Arkansas, Michigan, Minnesota, Kansas and Iowa.

During the Knight Templar parade in St. Louis, Wm. Herold, the proprietor of the Cherokee brewery, marching with Ascalon commandery, was overcome by the heat.

The comment of the Detroit Freemason on the Knight Templar conclave is: "Silver and gold have I none, but such as I have give I freely unto you." This is the reception motto of the knights, and the 'such as I have' means the finest of wines and the best of cigars."

The California commanderies had a big spread at their headquarters in St. Louis. They received daily a car load of fruits and a car load of native wines, which they gave freely to their friends who called on them. Louisville, Ky., Masons entertained their callers with all kinds of refreshments, including 14-year-old Kentucky corn juice. This from a Masonic editor who was there.

The General Grand Chapter of Royal Arch Masons meets in Washington City, Tuesday. Numbers of prominent Masons from all parts of the country arrived in that city last Sunday to attend the convocation.

The Knights of Labor are holding their great meeting in Richmond, Va., this week. The Inter Ocean says editorially that Powderly and his men "seem to have chosen the wrong place for their meeting, if they wish to make good their declaration that all members of the order, regardless of race or creed, are on the same footing. A hotel at Richmond, Va., where the meeting is to be held, refuses to entertain the colored delegation, and, in fact, there is no probability of the colored men who belong to the order obtaining entertainment anywhere in the city. The hotels are all kept by white men, and the race-prejudice in the old capital of the Confederacy is just as strong as it was twenty-five years ago, and all the diplomacy of Governor Lee cannot make it otherwise. A contract made by the delegates from District No. 49, of New York, for board at a well-known hotel has been canceled because the members insisted that a colored associate should be placed on the same footing with themselves."

BUSINESS.

SPECIMEN NUMBERS.—For ten cents we will send the Christian Cynosure for five weeks to any address, thus giving them a chance to examine the paper and subscribe if they think best. Could you make better use of a dollar of the Lord's money than to send to ten of your friends five copies of the Cynosure?

THE CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE

still remains at $2.00 per year, but the N. C. A. at its annual meeting continued the offer for another year of the special rate of one dollar and fifty cents per year in advance.

One month	$.15	One year	$ 1.50
Two months	.25	Two years	3.00
Four months	.50	Three years	4.50

Eight months	1.00	Five years	7.50

*To any one who will renew their subscription for two years twenty cents worth of any of our publications will be sent, or forty cents worth for three years, or sixty cents worth for four years, or eighty cents worth for five years. The renewal of your subscription for several years at a time will benefit you some, but the cause more. Try it!

PLEASE BE PROMPT in paying for your papers. It costs the reform and its friends many dollars every year to send notices that subscriptions have expired, that arrears are due. Five cents is not a large sum by itself, but when it is multiplied by hundreds and thousands, the amount lost to the cause is realized to be great. Can you not inaugurate a reform in this matter, and renew a little before your subscription expires, and if in arrears pay up at once? Would it not be a good thing to do?

SUBSCRIPTION LETTERS.

CORRECTION.—In the Cynosure of September 9th, page 7, under the heading, "Essential to Clergymen," it was stated that the "Ante-Nicene Library" consisted of 24 volumes at $3 per volume.

This was an error. This edition consists of only eight volumes at $3 per volume, or $24 for the complete set. See notice in Cynosure of September 9th.

A book that is sensational, not from excited rhetoric or florid figures of speech, but from the facts that flow like melted lava from the pen of the writer. It is a book of timely warnings, which show us the crime is short of their mark, robbed of its glamour with which they have been surrounded by the purulent literature of the day, and painted in strong, true colors. The life of the profligate is here shown in its true light, not as a life that, though wicked, has its delights, but as a thing of death, now and in future life to be abhorred.—WESTERN CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

THE HISTORY OF ANTI-SLAVERY

IN THE

State and Nation.

BY REV. AUSTIN WILLEY.

514 pp., 12 mo. With NINETEEN PORTRAITS.

Price, Postpaid, $2.00.

Mr. Willey gives the best history of the times just before the present generation, which is precisely the history least apt to be known. He gives us the surface of the sea under the billows which swept off three million pairs of fetters from our national decks. His book shows more accurate insight into the causes which produced the rebellion, and gives more clearly the working of those causes, than any other writer. He shows more clearly the moral force of the ballot and necessity of a new party to carry a fundamental reform than any one who has treated of it. We advise every young man and every reader of the Cynosure to obtain and read that history.—Pres. J. Blanchard.

HOME HINTS.

"HOUSE AND HOME."

It is easy enough in these days for a woman of taste, who is furnishing her house from the beginning, to make for herself and her household a beautiful and artistic home. With an eye that has had training as to the harmonies of color, and with strict adherence to the rule that each article bought for the house-furnishing should be honestly constructed, appropriate to its place, and fitted for its use, she cannot fail to reach a satisfactory result. No woman who carries out rigidly Mr. Morris's "Golden Rule"—"Have nothing in your house that you do not know to be useful or believe to be beautiful"—can go astray so long as she has any right idea of what is useful or what is beautiful.

First, however, there is a pruning process that can be safely and wisely indulged in. Last summer, in a boarding-house by the sea, we who were transient inmates of the house used to meet for sociability and for gossip in a large and comfortable sitting-room. The carpet was unobtrusive, the walls inconspicuous, tables and softly cushioned chairs abounded, footstools and hassocks were not wanting, and yet the room was detestable; for it contained no less than forty abortive efforts at artistic adornments, in the way of air-castles, wall-pockets, match-receivers, and other pasteboard and perforated cardboard abominations. Cross-stitch mottoes decked the walls; lamp-shades and glass vases decalcomanied in semi-opacity loaded the tables, the mantle, and the cone and leather-work brackets; and worsted tidies sprawled over the chairs, all fascinating the gazer's eye with their inherent ugliness and uselessness.

Now let a woman of taste get possession of that room, and she would bundle out, incontinent, those forty specimens of misapplied decoration. She would hang one or two good pictures on the wall—simple photographs it may be—that would cost less than did the mere card board of the discarded mottoes. She would introduce some good color in the way of table or piano cloth, or mantle scarf, a magazine on the table, and a flower in the vase; and so, with a few deft touches and with much less expense of time and money, the room from being thoroughly objectionable would become not only unobjectionable, but attractive. It is safe, then, for those of us housekeepers who want art, to begin at home to first "clear our houses of troublesome superfluities that are forever in our way, conventional comforts that are no real comfort and do but make work for servants and doctors," and with a grand simplicity of living exclude everything from our homes that we do not "know to be useful, or believe to be beautiful."

But, having done this, what next? What further change shall we make? None at all, unless it be surely to get better, and in keeping with the home and its occupants. A home that has grown old with its inmates acquires a "homeliness" that is vastly more becoming than the spick span new splendor of to-day's furnishing from the shops. But what about the dingy walls and worn carpets? Walls and floors are but the distance in your picture, the background against which you are to see your household gods, and against which you yourself are to be seen; and you cannot wish the background to outglitter the picture. If, as an authority on wall-paper has said, everything in the decoration of a room must be "subordinated to the one great object of interest and beauty, the human countenance," then certainly any glare in wall, floor or furniture, will take the glow out of the face and the brilliance from the dress of the room's occupant.

We always need to secure an abundance of plain neutral color in our rooms. That we may lay down as an axiom; and walls and floor can best supply that need. That is, we can put brilliant color better in a chair or a sofa than in a carpet, in a curtain rather than in a wall. A wall should never be dirty, but neither should it be bright. A carpet should never be ragged, but neither should it be gay. And this is a lesson that the neophyte in house furnishing would do well to learn. I called, not long since, upon a young wife, who had but lately set up house-keeping, and I was struck by the homelikeness of her house. "It looks as if you had always lived here," I remarked. "And so it has from the first," she answered. "But I must thank my sister for that. She spent weeks in Boston selecting my rugs and furniture."

I looked about the room again carefully, and noticed that curtains and carpet were thoroughly subdued, dull almost in tone, as if they had been in use for years. Ornaments, pictures, screens, here and there, supplied brilliancy of color, and looked all the more brilliant from their grave surroundings.

But, if the carpets are really threadbare and the walls dingy, of course a change is imperative; for no respectable woman will be content with rags and dirt. So paint, kalsomine or paper your walls, according to your purse and your taste, so long as they are of a good, restful color or when done; not spotty nor glaring, nor so light and fresh as to force you to discard your half-worn, but still serviceable furniture. Bare floors, with rugs, seem to me decidedly preferable to carpets that cover every inch of the floor space. They are healthier, cleaner and, in the long run, cheaper. But giving up the carpet involves perhaps the relaying of the floor, at least the vexed question of stain or paint, the making or buying of rugs, the drilling of a servant in the mysteries of floor polishing and a daily conflict with the overlying dust. Have you counted the cost?—Susan Hayes Ward in the Independent.

NATIONAL SUICIDE,

AND

ITS PREVENTION.

BY OSCAR F. LUMRY, PH. D.

Prof. Lumry's book, "National Suicide and Its Remedy," will be read and profited by those who do not accept its doctrine, that taking interest for money loaned, one or more per cent, is sin, taking something for nothing. For, as Goldsmith said of his virtue of Wakefield, "Even his fallings lean to his side."

—Cynosure.

Dr. Lumry is a man of ideas and never fails to make his readers understand just what they are. Every sentiment he writes has such an air of homely truth that it is a measure to deem those who read to criticize. It is a good book to set people to thinking, whether they believe his theories or not. The book is well worth a careful reading and study.—Inter Ocean.

On all the points named they differ radically from those which prevail in the organization of society. Either they are true or false. It is a curious fact that all of them have been stigmatized as crazy, and yet nearly all of them have been for some years steadily gaining the adherence of men of intellectual ability.—Times.

BETWEEN TWO OPINIONS.

BY E. E. FLAGG.

Author of "Holden with Cords," "A Sunny Life," "Little People," etc.

The Best Story of the Reform.

Price, only $1.00.

Published by THE NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

This latest and best of Miss Flagg's works is now ready in handsome print, neatly bound. The story begins in a quiet New England home, and paints its homely joys with a delicacy and truthfulness worthy the hand of Harriet Beecher Stowe. The scene then changes to a thriving, growing, palpitating young Western city, and with great power and startling accuracy the writer leads us behind the scenes that we may see the machinery that works the liquor traffic and labor troubles. The story of the strike, the mob, the attempted assassination, the saloon-keeper's wives, the curse of his trade, the power of the Christian faith to change him to a messenger of mercy, the criminal and the hidden power that shields him from justice, the land robbers tricks, the dark and secret conspiracies of the lodge—these and all the incidents of the book are portrayed with rare tact and great power of description. It is emphatically a book for the hour. And what is better and yet more striking, the incidents are facts, and every one a powerful and convincing argument against the lodge and the saloon.

Every temperance man and woman should read this book. No temperance story like it was ever planned, much less ably executed. A wonderful light is thrown upon the difficulties in the way of prohibition. Learn how they may be avoided.

Every one who loves to read a good story, chaste and elegant in expression, in thought, true in incident, deeply interesting in its narrative, should read this

READ THESE NOTICES FROM THE PRESS:

The Free Methodist, Chicago.

"Between Two Opinions" is a story, its incidents vouched for as facts, which presents a powerful argument on these questions and must attract thousands of readers among our thinking and observant people. The plot of the story is neither startling nor novel, but it develops a wonderful strength in following the experiences of people in the common, everyday life of life.

Free Press, Birmingham, Iowa.

It differs from the popular story, "The Bread-winners" of a year ago. It greatly differs from that book in that it is written from the Christian standpoint, and its beautiful and touching descriptions of home life and home duties and heroic self-denials will wake a responsive echo in every heart, that has not by dissipation lost the taste for the pure joys of home.

The Religious Telescope, Dayton.

The author, Miss Flagg, is a brilliant writer. The stirring questions in American politics are undoubtedly prohibition and the labor movement as championed by the secret unions of working men, which direct the strikes that with more and more frequency occur in our cities. "Between Two Opinions" is a story, its incidents vouched for as facts, which presents a powerful argument on these questions, and must attract thousands of readers among our thinking people.

The Christian Conservator, Dayton.

This is a charming book, written in an attractive manner. It is so full of sunshine and so radiant with light that one is enlightened, warmed, and, before they are conscious of it, set against the lodge. The style gleams, glows and sparkles. It is dignified and simple. It is the right book to read in the hands of your wife or daughter to superinduce co-operation with you in anti-secrecy work. Every minister's wife should read it, and then, if her husband is not an Anti-mason, he should take his turn next and become one.

The American, Washington.

We are reading, in spare moments, Miss Flagg's new book, "Between Two Opinions," and the estimate we have thus far put upon it is that it is masterly both in style and argument. One is incessantly made to feel that he is reading facts and not fiction; that the book is not a play upon the imagination but an unravelling of mysterious circumstances which have an important bearing upon current events.

THE BROKEN SEAL;

Or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan.

By Samuel D. Greene.
One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $1.50. Paper covers, 40 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

This deeply interesting narrative shows what Masonry has done and is capable of doing in the Courts, and how bad men control the good men in style and argument. One is incessantly made to feel that he is reading facts and not fiction; that the book is not a play upon the imagination but an unravelling of mysterious circumstances which have an important bearing upon current events.

"THE WHOLE IS BETTER THAN A PART,"
AND YOU HAVE IT HERE IN A "NUT-SHELL."

SECRET SOCIETIES ILLUSTRATED.

Containing the signs, grips, passwords, emblems, etc., of Freemasonry (Blue Lodge and to the fourteenth degree of the York ritual), Adoptive Masonry, Revived Odd-fellowship, Good Templars, the Temple of Honor, the United Sons of Industry, Knights Pythias and the Grange, with affidavits, etc. Over 220 cuts, 99 pages, paper cover. Price, 25 cents; $2.00 per dozen. For sale by the National Christian Association, at Headquarters for Anti-Secrecy Literature, 221 W. Madison St., Chicago.

Law and Order, Boston.

The book takes high ground for prohibition of the liquor curse, for woman's ballot for home protection, and for a better and more honest brotherhood than is forced by their obligations upon the members of secret orders. It is, therefore, a valuable book for several large classes of American readers.

Christian Instructor, Philadelphia.

There are important questions pressing upon American politics to-day; two of them are prohibition and the labor question as connected with the secret unions of workmen. This work is an expose of the twin evils, secret societies and the saloons. The truths are given in the form of a story; not startling, but thrilling experience of the home life that are vouched for as facts. The evidences presented of the impossibility of teaching the saloon keeper so long as he and the officers of the law are sworn brothers in the den of some secret society, are conclusive enough to awaken the most careless and obtuse member of society. It is a valuable book for the masses to read.

Evangelist, Berea, Kentucky.

The object of the volume is to illustrate the practical workings of Secret Societies, and especially to show how the lodge, the order, the saloon, and the very important design is wrought out with much skill, clearness and power. By reading it temperance people may learn much about the difficulties in the way of prohibition.

The Standard, Chicago.

It is written in the interests of reform, more especially temperance and Anti-masonry. The title of the story suggests the special aim of it, which is to protect against all "hanging between two opinions" in other words, is a plea for radicalism. The story is vigorously written, and will interest even readers who do not altogether believe in its doctrine.

The Pacific, San Francisco.

It is a story intended to do service against the saloons, and in favor of Woman's Christian Temperance work, and especially against the secret orders—Freemasons, Odd-fellows, the Knights of Labor, etc. No reflecting man can read it without being convinced that the lodge and individuals is liable to great abuse. It is obvious, also, that secret orders are especially capable of being used in a selfish and unprincipled way.

REVISED ODD-FELLOWSHIP ILLUSTRATED.

The complete revised ritual of the Lodge, Encomium and Rebekah (ladies) degrees, profusely illustrated, and guaranteed to be strictly accurate; with a sketch of the origin, history and character of the order over one hundred foot-note quotations from standard authorities, showing the character and teachings of the order, and an analysis of each degree by Frederick J. Blanchard. The ritual corresponds exactly with the ritual furnished by the Supreme Grand Lodge of Illinois. In cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $5.00. Paper cover, 75 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

FARM NOTES.

RYE FOR GREEN MANURE.

Clover is unquestionably the best of all crops to plow for green manure, and its value has been amply tested by many thousand farmers. It has been an additional value in the mechanical operation of its roots, especially in heavy soils, which they penetrate and loosen. The drawback is the time required to obtain a strong growth of the crop, never less than a part of two years. We have used a substitute in rye in certain cases, to much advantage, and without interfering with the regular succession of other crops. It may be employed successfully by sowing, after the removal of a crop of fodder corn, or of corn planted for the grain; the fodder being hauled off and properly secured, and the common crop of corn removed. Or the rye may be sown between the rows of shocks when the crop remains, the vacant strips being no serious detriment. The corn having been well cultivated as often as once a week until as high as the horse's back, the surface is left clean and mellow when the corn is cut, and we have given it rapid and additional mellowing with the Acme harrow, plowing being unnecessary. As this harrow will thoroughly pulverize the surface of several acres in a day, nearly the whole expense of putting in the crop consists in the three bushels per acre of grain for seed. A smaller quantity will answer, but three bushels or even more will be found more profitable by affording a denser and heavier growth. Rye is of such a hardy character that it may be sown at any time during autumn to the middle of November at the North, the earlier sowing being earliest fit for plowing under in the spring.

As thickly-sown corn fodder does not exhaust the soil like a crop for grain, there is little or no objection to following a fodder crop by another one the next year, and the rye may be plowed under, after the heads are formed in ample time to sow another fodder crop about the first of June. For a fodder crop we have cut the first growth with a mowing machine, and made it into excellent hay, or fed it green to animals. A second crop immediately springs up, nearly as heavy as the first, and this is plowed under as a fertilizer, and the fodder crop sown before July.

If a common corn crop, or one for fodder, is to follow wheat, barley or oats, there will be ample time to mature the land, break the manure up with the harrow, and to turn it under with a gang plow, Acme harrow or common plow, for an early crop of rye.

It will be observed that by either of those courses, the rye makes its growth between the regular crops of the two successive years, and an important gain is thus secured. The seed, when properly put in, never fails to grow, giving it another advantage over clover, which is less certain to succeed every time. On the other hand, clover possesses the great advantage in its penetrating and pulverizing roots, and its stems and leaves rot down and decay sooner than those of rye. It will be seen, on comparing the analyses of the crops, that clover has but a slight advantage in its enriching ingredients over rye, a fact at which some agricultural chemists have expressed surprise. But if less than half the enriching value of clover, the ease with which a heavy rye crop is obtained, and the little interference its growth occasions with the regular order of rotation, render it well worthy of a thorough trial by farmers. Now is the time to make preparations for it, and it may precede any crop next spring which may be put in at the North as late as the 20th of May or 1st of June, or later—as common corn, corn for fodder, Hungarian grass, turnips or ruta bagas, or any of the later-sowing crops.—Country Gentleman.

Grapevines should be pruned in the fall, or in February or March. But if not pruned in the fall or early spring, before the sap began to move, they should not be touched until several leaves are formed. Then if pruning is required it may be done without causing bleeding.

A correspondent of the Rural Home recommends Vermont red clover, five pounds, and timothy, twelve pounds per acre, as the best for pasture. But he adds the caution that if first-class pasture is wanted next year, cattle must not be allowed to go in next fall or next spring, before the grass is well started.

Salt has from time immemorial been recommended as a manure for asparagus. Undoubtedly it is good, for one of the effects of salt on rich soil is to make all its plant-food available. Market gardeners find that heavy coverings of manure are very important. They add salt later, and in doses heavy enough to aid in repressing weeds.

Grass seed does not usually do well in the East when sown with oats or other spring grains. These are harvested just when the season is at its hottest and driest, and the sun is apt to kill out the tender grass once fully exposed to its rays. Grass seed comes up and grows best during cool, moist weather. Good results frequently follow the sowing of grass seed late in the autumn, the seed only germinating the following spring. The best time of all is early fall sowing.

Much is said in the papers about breeding pure fowls; but probably the most desirable as well as the cheapest improvement may be made by farmers themselves in selecting eggs for setting from the hens which are known to be the best layers. In the same breed there will be wide differences in this respect, as every observing farmer knows. Often the cross-bred fowls will produce specimens of extraordinary laying qualities, and by breeding from these this desirable characteristic may be perpetuated.

The Christian's Secret

OR
A Happy Life.
28th THOUSAND.

Baptist Commendation.

"We are delighted with this book. It reaches to the very core of Christian experience, and is eminently experimental in its teachings. It meets the doubts and difficulties of conscientious seekers after the bread and water of life, but whose efforts result only in alternate failure and victory. The author, without claiming to be a theologian, sends out the results of a happy and rich experience to help others to lead a happy Christian life."—Baptist Weekly.

Presbyterian Endorsement.

"The book is so truly and reverentially devout in its spirit that it disarms criticism. It contains so much that is sound and practical, so much that, if heeded, will make our lives better, happier and more useful; that the intelligent reader who really wishes to lead a life 'hid with Christ in God' can scarcely fail to derive profit from its perusal."—Interior.

Methodist Word of Praise.

"We have not for years read a book with more delight and profit. It is not a theological book. No effort is made to change the theological views of anyone. The author has a rich experience, and tells it in a plain and delightful manner."—Christian Advocate.

United Brethren's Approval.

"We have seldom met with a more interesting volume, abounding throughout with apt illustrations; we have found it a dry line from title-page to title."—Religious Telescope.

Congregational Comment.

"It contains much clear, pungent reasoning and interesting incident. It is a practical and experimental treatise of the word of God, and is worthy of universal circulation."—Church Union.

A practical and easy system by which any person, old or young, can train themselves to memorize anything they choose. THE CLERGY, Their Sermons; THE STUDENT, His Lessons; THE BUSINESS MAN, His Items of Business.

The author of this work was put to the severest public test, a few days ago, by reporters of all the leading Chicago daily papers. The commendatory notices which appeared the following day showed how well he stood the test.

The author, an old man, claims to have a memory more to be trusted by training under this system than even while he was young.—CHICAGO INTER-OCEAN.

We cordially commend it to all persons of falling memory as the best book obtainable on that subject.—INTERIOR. Most ingenious; enables any one, who familiarizes himself with the system, to carry an immense mass of digested information, ready for production on demand. By experiment we have tested the author's mnemonic resources, and been moved by them to wonder.—ADVANCE.

The Illinois Grand Lodge either had less attention from the Chicago press this year than usual, or more carefully kept its proceedings to itself, since there is less report given to the public than ever. The Chicago Times says that during the meeting the following resolution, probably offered as an amendment, was defeated by a large vote: "The sale of intoxicating liquor as a beverage shall be considered an act tending to impair the good name of Masonry within the meaning of this section." This vote will hardly commend the Illinois Freemasons to the fellowship of the temperance societies.

The most popular and interesting feature about this Grand Lodge meeting was the dedication of the old residence, for several years deserted, of Congressman Hayes, for a Masonic Orphans' Home. The project of opening such a building has been for several years prominent among Chicago Masons, who seem to feel the inconsistency of their position, yearly spending tens of thousands on regalia, banquets, parades, etc., while no permanent illustration of their boasted charity exists. At last they have, by much economy and many appeals, raised enough to purchase this property for $15,000, and reft it for, perhaps, $2,000 more. Except that it is near the railway tracks, it is very well suited to the purpose. The grounds are ample, and alone are worth the purchase money, while the buildings could not be replaced for twice the amount. The dedication took place Thursday last, with great pomp. Grand Master Darrah made a speech boasting of Masonic charity; Bishop Fallows read two prayers to the indifferent ears of the Masonic crowd, and Dr. Thomas preached a sermon after the pagan ceremony of pouring corn, wine and oil, and clapping hands was over. The question of charity will be answered when some of the scores of street children in Chicago are put under the covers of the vacant beds of the institution.

The Chicago anarchist cases have at length reached an end in the lower courts. After four days' pleading by their lawyers, Judge Gary refused the motion for a new trial, in a decision which has been widely commended for its clear distinctions, comprehension of law, and judicial force. The eight men were then given an opportunity, according to ancient custom, to say why the sentence found against them by the jury should not be pronounced. This was an opportunity for which they had evidently been preparing with much care. Spies began with an able but defiant speech of much length, and the others followed in turn—Schwab, Neebe, Fischer, Lingg, Engel, Fielden and Parsons. They began Thursday afternoon and finished at 3:45 Saturday afternoon. Neebe, Engel, and especially Fielden made effective speeches; and the prosecuting attorney remarked that had the latter spoken to the jury the appeal would have so moved them that his life would have been saved. Parsons spoke for a whole day. The end sought was the popular effect, and the court was compassionate almost to a fault in permitting these long harangues, defying authority and scouting even the very law for whose protection they plead. Sentence was pronounced late on Saturday, and the final appeal will be made before the Supreme Court of the State.

As the Knight of Labor convention opened last week in Richmond, Powderly made a most urgent request that no member of the order disgrace himself or the order by drinking in the saloons. When the Knight Templar Masons paraded in Chicago in 1880, orders were issued that not one should go into a saloon with his lodge harness on. The saloon-keepers laughed in their sleeves and covered their dens with Masonic decorations, while they poured out their liquors like a flood. Rob Morris, the "poet laureate" of the order, whom some of his companions call a "dead-beat," writes that at St. Louis "The templar chiefs of the different States issued orders, couched in the most expressive terms, 'That no member of the order should enter a saloon while wearing any distinctive badge of the order.'" And he claims that there were "no offensive instances of intemperance manifested." We doubt either if he saw any in Chicago, but others did. He says that at "head-quarters," from whence the above order issued, "at the worst, the milder forms of wine-punch and mild wines" were all the intoxicating liquors allowed, or as his poetic genius puts it, "fluids that exhilarate." The explanation of the poet laureate is accepted.

A later item on this matter must modify this judgment slightly. The Globe-Democrat, speaking of the visit of Mayor Francis of St. Louis, at the quarters of De Molay Commandery of Louisville, says that after a response was made to the Mayor's speech "and a great deal of cheering, a barrel of Kentucky whisky was tapped. The barrel was gray with age, and encircled with old-fashioned wooden hoops. Its contents were served out in goblets, and the connoisseurs present, who were numerous, expressed very flattering opinions concerning its flavor." Probably Rob Morris, when he saw the crowd gather about the old barrel, suspected something wrong, and with the discretion which is the better part of Knight Templar valor, hastily got himself out of sight and smell, where he should not only be free from temptation himself, but could also avoid the discovery of a sad lapse from virtue among his brother Hiramites.

The Bulgarian question has a new interest from the possible intervention of England. It is believed, however, that all the efforts of the British cabinet to form a coalition of the foreign powers has been in vain. In Bulgaria the Russian agent, Kaulbars, has met with great resistance from the people. His plan is evidently to foment disturbance and so make a pretext for Russian intervention. The foreign influence appears in some instances of defection in the army. The election, however, is proceeding according to law; but, like the fable of the wolf and the lamb, Russia will make some pretence answer her purpose. The latest reports from the Russian capital indicate a possible cause of the disturbance in the mental condition of the Czar. He is said to be the subject of vagaries almost amounting to madness. He suffers greatly from inability to sleep, and passes whole nights walking to and fro in his well guarded apartments. During these sleepless hours he occupies his mind in dictating plans for the settlement of the Bulgarian question and for extensive military campaigns. There is much alarm at these indications of a precarious mental condition.

The laws of Italy against the Jesuits having long been a dead letter, have been lately given a new vitality by the action of the Pope in restoring that powerful secret order to many of the privileges enjoyed by them before the brief of Clement XIV. in 1773 suppressing them. The reasons for this retrograde movement do not readily suggest themselves, and it has been rumored that the concession was wrung from the Pope during the feebleness of ill health, and suggestions of threats upon his life to compel him will have been made. The announcement caused great excitement in Italy, and as the relations of the Vatican to the government are hardly of a friendly relation, there threatens to be an actual outbreak. The liberal party is preparing for public demonstrations by way of protest, and to revive the old laws against the Jesuits, which may result in their expulsion or a civil strife.

From the latest official report of the General of the Jesuits, the Black Pope, we learn that the order is now 350 years old, has furnished 248 saints to the Romish calendar, 1,500 martyrs to the cause of the papacy, 13 popes, 60 cardinals, 4,000 archbishops, 6,000 authors, and now numbers 2,500 missionaries of a false faith. There is an intimation in these figures that this secret order exercises much the same power in the Roman Catholic church as Freemasonry does in our own politics. But the more striking similarity is the treatment of those who oppose the ambition and aggrandizement of these orders. Ganganelli, who was appointed by Pope Benedict XIV. counsellor to the Inquisition, and thus became intimate with the Jesuits, afterward as Pope Clement supported them, and for this support found himself at variance with such powerful constituents of the papacy as the kings of France, Spain, Portugal and Naples. After several years of negotiation, he finally issued the edict "forever" suppressing the Jesuit order, for the sake of "the peace of the church." From that moment he was harassed by his secret enemies of the order, and his life made miserable by constant fear, until his strength gave way under the strain.

The Independent speaks thus of the papal order: "The Jesuits bear a hated name. The very word has become a synonym for intrigue. Whatever good the society may have accomplished is lost sight of in the fear and contempt which it inspires in the non-Catholic mind. Laws have been passed against, states have expelled it, and popes and bishops have condemned it. A little more than a century ago, Pope Clement XIV. denounced it as an enemy of souls and ordered it to be suppressed forever. It has been charged with instigating many dark deeds, and with dealing out poison to those who proved an obstruction to its plans. Jesuitism also stands in the popular conception as a propaganda of unsound morals. How much of all this is matter of fact, and how much is due to false testimony and popular prejudice it is not for us to determine now. We are most concerned to know what the Pope's brief is designed to accomplish, and whether it necessarily affects the Pope's attitude toward the civil powers. The purpose of the Pope's brief is not to revive or reorganize the Society of Jesus; that has been done by other popes. It is not to give it papal sanction; that has also been done by Gregory XVI. and others, and the society has long held its place in the church with other orders of regulars. It is not, as we understand it, either to restore old or grant new privileges; the society has long been in regular operation. It is not to allow its members to take part in the government of the church; Jesuit influence was predominant in the councils of Pius IX. The only purpose we discover in the fact of the Brief is that the approval of the present Pope may be printed with the Apostolic Letters of former popes in the new edition of the society's manual soon to be published, and that certain privileges about to expire by limitation many be renewed."

"PROGRESS AND POVERTY."

BY WILLIAM F. DAVIS.

This book of Henry George's deals with the problems of political economy and of social science as emphasized by nineteenth century monopolies, oppression, poverty, riots and dynamite. The author confutes the theory of Malthus, that by natural and necessary law, wages vary directly as the ratio of fixed capital to changing population. He seems to fairly prove that the normal tendency, and the natural result of increase in population, is a greater instead of a less proportionate increase of value produced. He demonstrates that greater wages per capita can be justly paid for each laborer employed in legitimate business, and that a higher rate of interest can be earned by the capital invested in any commonwealth, as its population increases. In this connection he makes just criticisms upon the Darwinian theory and John Stuart Mill's slander in charging the poverty prevalent in dense populations to the niggardliness of nature. He incidentally notices errors cropping out in the books of other writers on political economy. He vividly portrays the evils which grow out of monopolies, especially the monopoly of land, which he regards as the tap-root of all our social misery.

For all these evils and for the multiplied woes of our corrupt civilization, he proposes substantially one remedy—the abolition of private property in land. In place of all land monopolization by individuals, he would substitute governmental ownership of all land, and occupation of land by individuals for actual use according to ability at rates fixed by competition. He hopes to see this accomplished by dint of due diligence in proclaiming and adopting his proposed remedy.

If his constructive work appeared to us as adequate to the re-organization of society as his criticisms on Malthus and land monopoly are true, we should join Henry George at once. It would be well to corral all the land monopolists in America, and strip them of their unrighteous titles, if universal wealth, purity and bliss could be thus secured throughout our land. But sin is the seed from which all our wretchedness grows. And the sin-tree could attain enormous dimensions and bear mammoth crops of deadly fruit on land, every foot of which were nationalized and worked by tenants who should pay all the taxes of government, in the manner prescribed by Henry George.

We know of but one Socialist who proposes to re-organize society on the one and the only rational and practicable basis. The Socialist to whom we refer proposes to banish all sin, which is the occasion of all woe, from the world, and to introduce instead of sin the reign of universal righteousness. That One has not only the correct theory on this subject, but He has the will, and the ability to carry his plan into execution. He has been on the field, and thoroughly studied the ground. He knows what can be done, and has told us how it must be done. He has begun actual operations. He has four hundred millions of nominal followers in the world to-day, honestly or hypocritically using his name as their banner. "All power in heaven and on earth" has been given into his hands. He has bidden his followers to go forth into all the world and proclaim his teachings to the people of all nations. As soon as they have done this he promises to come back to the world and receive his true disciples to himself, and accompanied by them he assures us he will judge and put down and out all who do wickedly. Thenceforth righteousness shall reign forever and ever. The name of this Socialist is Jesus of Nazareth.

Henry George had better go and sell all that he has and join the ranks of this Almighty Commoner. It is scarcely the best use of precious time, energies, and opportunity to spend one's life seeking to effect a change in the manner in which land shall be held in society, rather than to busy one's self about the far more radical change of heart without which we must be banished from the earth.

Mt. Washington, Chelsea, Mass.

"THERE WERE GIANTS IN THE EARTH."

BY ELDER N. CALLENDER.

Twenty-four hundred and sixty-eight years B. C. there were giants that required a giant deluge to compete with their dynamite proclivities—the giant powders burning in their fallen souls. "The Hebrew word," says Scott, "rendered giants, appears to be derived from a root which signifies to fall; either men who had fallen from God, or men who, by force and power, caused others to fall, that is, cast them down." They might have been men of more than usual size and force physically, but Gen. 6:3 seems to intimate that they were noted particularly for striving against God's Spirit. If there were such men as these more than four thousand years ago, in the very infancy of our race, what may we look for in such as strive against God to-day? Must he not be a giant indeed who can do battle against God in these days? Against the Father, against the Son of his love, against the Holy Spirit as now manifested; against the Bible and the church, a living ministry—still fighting stoutly against God!

What giants we have in these days, to be sure! And then they have greatly improved engines to use against their Maker, and Redeemer. Most of the giant improvements in the world, which should be consecrated on the altar to save the world, are used to propel it more rapidly to perdition. Were the agencies of nature devoted to God, as they might be, and surely ought to be, no one can guess at the advance in mechanical improvements and force which would exist to-day. Since men will be giants in sin for Satan, it is not fit that they should advance to greater heights in discovery and mechanical power. Vile and vicious as he resolves to be, the wonder is, that we have ever reached such heights of discovery. Will not God soon lay his consecrating power on all the inventions of the age and devote them grandly to the glory of his kingdom? It seems to me he will. For it let us labor, pray and vote. Not till there is more of consecration to God of what he has permitted men to discover and use, shall we get to the "inwardness" of God's great magazine of powers, couched not in the laws of "nature," but in the laws of God. When men shall resolve to be giants for God instead of the devil, then look for the literal fulfillment of Rev. 14:6. When men are inclined to consecrate all to God, air navigation may become a fixed fact; and we may see messengers of the Gospel treading the heavens. When our being gravitates heavenward, as it should, men will no longer ascend in balloons merely high enough to fall and break their necks. God will, perhaps, accommodate our locomotion to the lofty aspirations of souls for souls, and our ambassadors will be enroute across the heavens to the "isles of the sea," having the everlasting Gospel to preach. God will not permit this while men are so devoted to the "flesh."

No one, save God himself, knows so well the truth of the maxim, "in union is strength" as the adversary of God and men. Many social giants infest our world. In this age we have the whiskey and the lodge giants. Brave men they are who have the courage to meet either in a square battle. Only open temperance bodies have this courage. Skulking behind secret lodge, to fight whiskey! What a soldier! Can Satan cast out Satan? No gentlemen, we will meet you fairly—"on the square," if you please. We want no skulking holes. We'll meet you as David met Goliath. God has "smooth stones" for both whiskey and the lodge. They are open fair discussion, prayer and the ballot.

The lodge is the worst giant in this world, because most perfectly organized and the most impervious to light. The whiskey power faces manly discussion and expects to meet it; but the lodge giant commands "the silent tongue." If the man is brave who meets in a square battle the whiskey power, he is braver by far who meets the lodge giant. Such is the despotism of the secret lodge that a man, but a little removed from a fool, can rule as with an iron rod half a continent. Look at Martin Irons. An almost brainless, drunken brute, swaying the sceptre over many thousands! What lodge giants we have here in this home of the free. They are giants only in the intensity of their arrogance and their meanness. But the smooth stone is already forged, and waiting some David's sling to send it through the joints of the armor of the defiant old giant. Christian editors, ministers of Christ, churches, voters, up and out upon the giants of these days.

—The publication business of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union has so increased that the Publishing Association has appointed Mrs. Elizabeth Wheeler Andrew editor of publication. Mrs. Andrew has been the very efficient assistant of Mrs. Willard and Miss Mary Allen West on the editorial staff of the Union Signal for several years.

—The sale of Christian books produced by the Fukuin Sha press in Japan, during the past year, notwithstanding the severe business depression, has steadily increased. The number of pages issued has been 4,000,000 against 3,000,000 the previous year, and the sales have risen from $500 to $589.

—There are now twenty-five workers in the Kabye Missions in Northwest Africa. A new mission has lately been opened at Arzila, and there are good congregations of Moors and Jews.

THE SERMON.

BUILD TOGETHER ON CHRIST.

BY REV. H. W. LATHE, PASTOR OF THE FIRST CHURCH IN NORTHAMPTON, MASS.

(Preached Sabbath, Sept. 12th, 1886. Copy furnished for publication in the Cynosure by request.)

Now, therefore, ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow citizens with the saints, and of the household of God;

And are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone;

In whom all the building fitly framed together groweth unto a holy temple in the Lord;

In whom ye also are builded together for a habitation of God through the Spirit. Eph. 2:19-22.

This passage is an emphatic declaration that men are united in one body through Christ. Individualism does not rule in the kingdom of God. The believer is not an independent follower of Christ, related only to the Master. Through Christ he has come into relations to a multitude of other believers.

Paul's fancy plays about this truth in rapidly changing metaphors. Believers are members of a commonwealth, "fellow citizens with the saints." They are a family with the fellowship of a household. Then the figure changes from household fellowship to household structure; they are stones growing into, or builded into, a temple. The foundation is that of the apostles and prophets. The corner stone is Christ. The builder is the Holy Spirit. The final end of the temple is to be a habitation of God. We have here the elements which enter into God's plan of organizing mankind into a spiritual kingdom, an eternal fellowship, beginning on earth, perfected in heaven.

1. And first the fact that God is organizing a family from among men. "In whom ye are builded together."

It is immensely difficult to build people together. Statesmen find it so, teachers find it so, parents find it so. If there were but one man in the country the science of government would be extremely simple. The solitary inhabitant would be a law unto himself. But when it is required to build together fifty millions of people, of differing tastes, opinions, habits, with opposing interests and ambitions, into one compact, harmonious organism, into a nation that shall be in reality as in name a "Union," the difficulty is appalling. It is comparatively easy to teach one pupil. To build together fifty, a hundred, a thousand scholars into a well ordered body, with unity, harmony and a common spirit, calls for more than ability to teach. A family builded together, the members mutually helpful, bound together by common aims and sacrifices,—does it not demand the highest human wisdom, the largest human patience, to secure such a household? Yet the welfare of the State, the school, the family, depends largely upon the thoroughness with which the members are builded together.

When we come to the problem of building men together religiously the difficulties are augmented and multiplied. Paul's fancy might seem almost audacious, his scheme Utopian. Granted that God can convert a soul. Can he bring that soul into close fellowship with the next soul converted, and the next and the next? Admitted that men may be made to live to the glory of God separately, can they be made to glorify him in the trying experiences and duties of the spiritual household? Well nigh impossible. Nothing is more deep-seated in man's nature than his religion. Nothing is more unyielding than religious conviction unless it be religious taste. Conversion casts all men of one metal but not all in one mold. Men will differ honestly, irreconcilably. Let them separate in peace, each going his own way. The family idea is too high even for regenerated human nature. The answer to this objection is that it antagonizes God's plan. This purpose of building men together on Christ is no dream of a zealous apostle but the deliberate determination of God. Has he not considered all the difficulties in the way? Does not he know what is possible? And the figure under which he reveals his purpose is that of a temple. Stones scattered about, or lying in heaps, however finished and polished individually, do not make a temple. A great mob of individuals is not a State. A chance assortment of children is not a family. A mere multitude of Christians on earth is not Christ's spiritual kingdom, even as a vast throng of redeemed saints, each singing his own song about the throne, will not be the heavenly kingdom prophesied in Revelation.

2. Passing on to inquire how this divine plan is to be realized we note the functions of Christ and of the Holy Spirit. Christ is the corner-stone; the Holy Spirit is the divine architect and builder.

If we ask how men are to be builded together upon Christ the answer is threefold: through a common faith; through a common life; through a common work. Observe we do not say through common forms, methods, church politics. The temple has many parts, and each part is good in its place. Nothing would be gained by making it all porch, or all tower, or all pinnacle. Christians need not be all in one denomination. Christ comes to be the foundation of something better than a formal, outward unity among men.

(a) We mentioned first the common faith. Christ said "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have everlasting life." It is such belief in Christ, explained and defined by him elsewhere, and always demanded of the disciple, which has the power to build men together. In the words of apostles and prophets we have a revelation of truth whose center is Christ. All the writings of Scripture lead to him. And if a man's religious faith has its foundation here, on this Word of God, he is brother at sight to every other man whose faith is there.

But how if he consults the Bible in part, and his private judgment in part, and goes to his "inner consciousness" for his faith, and questions the inspiration of portions of God's Word? Alas for him. In so far as he does this he must stand alone. He cannot be builded together with those who are upon the foundation of apostles and prophets, and as for building him and other unbelievers together each one has opinions according to his peculiar "consciousness" and no two alike. The faith which is founded upon God's revelation, true to Scripture first, last, and all through, is the faith which in the past has drawn men together in earnest sympathy. Whatever variations it may present to day in different sections of the church, it is a bond of unity stronger than all the forces which tend to distrust and division.

(b) Faith controls and fashions life. The most powerful agency in organizing the kingdom of God on earth is the common life of the disciples of Christ. "Except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God." Repentance, faith, personal experience of the love of Christ, spiritual life coming from union with Christ, these are the family bonds in the household of God. That this was a favorite thought with Christ is evident from his last address to his disciples, and from the prayer which he offered on their behalf. The life was to be one, passing from the Vine into all the branches. "I in them and thou in me that they may be made perfect in one."

(c) When men are moved by a common faith, and live a common inner life, there is but one thing more that can be done to build them together, and that is to set them about a common work. This is the purpose of Christ as to his disciples. "Follow me and I will make you fishers of men." "Go preach my Gospel to every creature." "Go work in my vineyard." Christ left his work to be carried on by his followers. They are debtors to the world to help, to enlighten, to instruct, to set an example in all godly living. They are "laborers together with God." Little differences which might become serious are insignificant under the inspiration of a common labor. Here is something to be done. The world is away from God. Men need help on every side. They must hear of Christ or be lost. The poor, too, we have always with us, and they call for Christian help and comfort. Christian principles must be brought to bear upon questions relating to the duty of the individual and the conduct of social and political life. Great charitable and benevolent enterprises are to be supported and carried on to success. The world must be leavened by Christian truth and Christian life, and this work is committed to Christian men and women. Could anything more effectually obliterate all lines of prejudice and party among the workers?

These forces which God has set at work among men are omnipotent, through the Holy Spirit, to build men together in Christ. We have had time but to point them out in the briefest way, but when we reflect upon the efficiency there is in a common faith, earnestly embraced, a common life and a common work, all combined, we must conclude both that he who sent Christ that they might operate, designed that Christian disciples should not be isolated, independent units, but a family, a commonwealth, a temple builded together; and that, under God, there is power in these agencies to overcome even the immense difficulties which we see in the way, and to finally organize believers into a perfect, harmonious society worthy to be called the kingdom of God.

The chief reason for believing this is that the Holy Spirit is the builder. "In whom ye also are builded together for a habitation of God through the Spirit." We are not trusting to the working out of natural forces but to God himself using divinely devised forces as means. All difficulties give way before the Holy Spirit. If he can surmount the obstacles which resist his first entrance into the human heart, if he can bring resisting sinners into right relations with Christ, surely he can bring converted sinners into right relations with one another. All that is needed to make the church of Christ on earth one church, a family, loving and united, is a deeper spiritual life, which is but another name for the presence of the Holy Spirit. Therefore all Christians should aim to let the Holy Spirit have his way with them, to offer no hindrance to his working, to pray instantly for his blessing.

3. To all of us in different ways this text suggests important thoughts which are not explicitly stated.

To the Christian who thinks to lead a secret life apart from the family of Christ. The church is an instrumentally appointed of God to build Christians together. Like all institutions in this world it partakes of human infirmity. No one asserts that it is perfect. But it is God's method of edifying his people. Through its worship, its sacraments, its life, its work, Christians are builded together. It is the duty of every disciple of Christ to come into right relations with other Christians, as well as to be in right relations with Christ. No one is to be absorbed in the work of saving his own soul. Christ does not design that his follower should live a separate, isolated spiritual life. He is to be fitted into other lives. He is to be builded together with other Christians. He is to be helpful, useful, confessing Christ and taking his part in the life and work of the Christian household. He is to be a member of the body of Christ which is the church.

To the Christian who belongs to the church. Do you "belong" to it or do you practically belong to yourself? Do you belong to it or do you deny its right of ownership in you? It is exceedingly disagreeable for some persons to be builded together with others. Even the grace of God does not altogether remove this repugnance. To be fitted into one's place is attended with some friction and strain and possibly breakage of sharp edges and corners. To be builded in, so as to fill a place in the church, calls for self-denial, sometimes for humility, for patience, for much unselfish devotion. The church has a right to the sympathies, the prayers, the labors, of every member. The covenant is that the member will have a share in the church life and work, not only in the Christian life but in the common Christian life, that he will be one in a family. And though from selfish motives one might shrink from the effort, and though for prudential reasons one might avoid friction with others by refusing to be builded together with them—and even think that therein he had done a judicious deed—the Christian must remember that God has a place for him in the temple, that he must fill it for God's glory if not for his own pleasure, bearing in a Christian spirit what friction may come, but assured that the joy and peace of serving his Master will become supreme over every lesser feeling.

To the individual church there is much suggestion in Paul's words. Every church should be a unit. In one sense the church exists for the Christian; in the highest sense the Christian exists for the church. We do not build a temple in order to find a place for the stones; we gather the stones that we may have the temple. Christ did not found his church that we might have a place in which to stay. God wanted a habitation in which to dwell, and so Christ came to save us, and to gather us together, that the Spirit might build us together into that temple, which is the church. Now to regard the church as a convenience, an institution like a school of whose advantages we may avail ourselves as we list, into which we go simply to get what we can for ourselves, from which we may stand aloof as suits our taste, is to misconceive entirely the idea of the church for which Christ gave his life and to which the promise is made. We are for the church more truly than the church is for us. The stones are for the temple, not the temple for the stones. Realize this truth in experience and the church is a unit.

To the citizen, interested in the welfare of society, there is the deepest philosophy in Paul's word. The problem from the beginning has been how to build men together. One man and one woman in Paradise might need no theory of society, but as soon as mankind began to multiply the question at once emerged how they should be organized socially and politically to the highest advantage of all. That question has been agitated ever since, never more earnestly than to-day. Patriarchates, kingdoms, despotisms, republics, socialistic communities, have been some of the answers. Feudalism, Mormonism, slavery, monopoly, caste have all been outgrowths of plans for building men together. To-day communism is urgently offering what it affirms to be the true answer. Is there any final answer? Undoubtedly yes. Men must be builded together on Christ, if the social and political millennium are to come. Not that Christianity will prescribe the forms and methods, but it lays down the essential principles on which to build. The fundamental teachings of the New Testament as to the relations of man to man, of man to God, must supply the foundation on which the family, the state, the society of the future are to be built. Here are the immutable principles to which labor and capital, socialism and republicanism, all theories of government and society, all plans of legislation and all movements of reform, must come in common. An applied Christianity, teaching the brotherhood of man, commanding each not to look on his own things, but also on the things of others and to love his neighbor as himself, exalting character above circumstances, forbidding envy and covetousness, inculcating patience, justice, benevolence, charity—this is the much needed philosophy of life for rich and poor, good and bad alike. Examine every false theory of social or political life and you come quickly to some assumption at variance with the teachings of the New Testament. Search out the secret of strength in every well-ordered community, in which men are happily builded together, and you discover at the foundation the principles of the religion of Christ. Is it not strong proof of the divine origin of Christianity that incidentally it gives to man the foundations of the best form of government, a true political economy, the highest ideal of the family, righteous principles of trade, an incentive and a guide to the noblest education and culture, and even a basis for international law and comity—that historically whenever it has builded people together religiously it has builded them together in all the relations of life?

It seems certain, in view of Paul's thought, that a great part of the joy of heaven will come through contact and communion of redeemed souls with one another. God's design of building men together into a habitation for himself succeeds but partially in this world. In the world to come it is to be fully realized. We know that some of the sweetest joys of earth come from the friendships and close attachments which are formed. We also know how many such are prevented or hindered by human imperfections which repel one from another. With all these imperfections removed, with all the children of God brought together and by the Spirit thoroughly builded together as a habitation of God, the highest possible blessedness which can come from union of soul with soul will be realized. Christ seems to point toward this thought when he speaks of the redeemed as "sitting down with Abraham and Isaac and Jacob" in the kingdom. It would certainly seem a great blessedness to be builded together with some people whom we know. A great student of the Bible once said that much of earth's time should be spent in preparing questions to be answered in heaven. There are many questions one would like to ask, and many saints one would like to meet. Especially does this thought become blessed when we think of those who have been nearest and dearest on earth. True, to know Christ, to see him as he is, to be like him, will be the supreme joy. But we may also take comfort in the anticipations awakened by that verse of Scripture which says: "Ye are come unto Mount Zion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to an innumerable company of angels, to the general assembly of the church of the firstborn, which are written in heaven, and to God, the Judge of all, and to the spirits of just men made perfect."

LETTER FROM GREECE.

AFFLICTION AND DEATH.—THE PEOPLE MOVED TO HEAR THE WORD.

ANDROS, Greece, via Syra, Sept. 3, '86.

DEAR BROTHER:—I take the opportunity to write to you the sad story of the death of our dear little son, Arthur. He had been sick some time ago with diarrhea, and after some time a very severe whooping-cough set in with vomiting, until death released him from his sufferings. As the other children also had the whooping-cough, we had gone up to our mountain home so that they would get better; but in a few days God took him, so we came back again.

He died at 9:15 p. m., July 23. Our nearest neighbor was the priest. Mr. Zaraphonithos called there and told them, and said to them also that he wanted a man to stay during the night; but as he did not offer to come, Mr. Z. went on to another place; but that man said that he had to plant some beans on the morrow and could not come. He went on walking the streets until at last he found some one. It seems to me like the parable of the Saviour where one had one kind of work to do, and some one else had another kind of work to do and could not come.

After Mr. Z. came back we sat down to consult what we should do with our child's body. To bury him up at our mountain home we were afraid that some persons would go and take his body out and destroy it, as this devilish practice takes place in many parts of Greece. These inhuman beings go and take the body out and cut it to pieces, and the dogs and birds of the air feed upon it. We remembered three years ago that the grave of a certain man was found to be disturbed, and so the relatives went and opened the grave to see what had taken place, and they found that the breast had been opened and the heart taken out; but who did it, or why they did it, and what they did with the heart, no one understands.

I think as an American who took up the cross and came as missionary to preach the Gospel, that all the money which England and America spends to Christianize the world is not spent in vain, for if these nominal Christians have such evil practices, how much more must be practiced in heathen and barbarous nations.

And so with all the sorrow we had, we had this additional trial, of what to do with the body. And after a great deal of thought and prayer we decided to send the body down to our home by the sea. We sent it down by night by the man who was staying with us, and early in the morning we took our other two children and we also went down. Nobody knew anything up at our mountain home, or down here at our sea-shore home, about what had taken place. During the day they heard it, but only one friend stepped in.

As our Protestant friends live in Athens, and it was not possible to keep the body until they could come to bury it, we had a place opened in our garden, and about ten o'clock at night Mr. Z. went by himself alone and buried the body in the dark, so that no one might see where we laid it. He said that he had many troubles and persecutions since he was converted to Protestantism, but he never remembered being in such an agony as he was that evening. The tears and the sweat run like rain, to think of burying, alone, his own child! With all the pains and sorrows, we believe that God brought our little Arthur into the world and then took him away as a means to accomplish some great end. We can see this at least, that this people had never before heard public preaching. We have preached to them by their sick beds, at their homes, in our own home, and in many different ways; but this time, at his funeral service which took place on Saturday afternoon a week after he was buried, we were surprised to see so many out; and we were more than surprised at a second service held on Sabbath afternoon, for the largest room in our house was full to overflowing. We had provided many seats, but they were all filled and a great many were standing.

We called the missionaries in Athens, Rev. M. D. Kalapothakes and the Rev. D. Z. Sakellarios; but as the former was away on a Bible tour, Mr. Sakellarios came alone. The people were surprised, for he read the same Gospel and the same epistle which is read by the priests in the Greek Church at a funeral service, and the people began to be astonished, and to say, "Well, these people are not infidels and Far Masons, and other stories which we used to say about them are not true; for if they were they would not use the name of Christ and God." Some of the people murmur and so on, but the greater part were very glad to hear. Not only most of the people of this town were here, but on the Sabbath there were present many people from the different villages.

Mr. Sakellarios was more than astonished, for they cannot get so many people together in the city of Athens on such occasions.

We hope that God, by taking our little child away, opened a door which will never be shut. Pray for us and for the work, that God may open the eyes of this people.

SEPR. 10, 1886.—Rev. Sakellarios stayed with us a few days after the death of our little Arthur, as I have already mentioned, and three weeks ago he came again and brought his wife, and they are still with us. Mr. Sakellarios preached again in our house the two Sabbaths since he came, and it is given out that he will preach again on the coming Sabbath. Also we have an invitation to go to Gavrio, five miles distant, and a hall shall be provided so that he can preach there, too, next Sabbath. It seems that the Lord has opened the way for preaching in this island, and we hope that the future will bring many good results.

SEPR. 13.—Rev. D. Z. Sakellarios gave us a very interesting and practical discourse yesterday afternoon and there were a goodly number present. Yours with Christian love,

MRS. A. D. ZARATHONITHES.

THE SECRET EMPIRE.

KNIGHTS OF TABOR.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—There lies before me the ritual of the Knights of Tabor, an order that has been invented and largely patronized by the colored people in this country. It is said to be very prevalent and popular in Chicago. Like other orders it has the ear marks of Freemasonry and was evidently planned by some one familiar with the Blue Lodge.

It consists of three degrees which are eminently religious and contain many quotations from the sacred Scriptures. It is, however, a religion which is puerile, immoral and blasphemous. I will give some brief extracts from the ceremonies and obligation.

After proper introduction and preparation for the first degree, the candidate is made to repeat the following obligation:

"I, B. D., in the fear of the Lord and in his presence do, with sincere truth, promise that I will keep the secrets of the Order of Twelve, and those of Brother, Friend and Daughter of the Tabernacle. Further, I promise I will come to the call of every sign of a Brother Knight. Further, I promise that I will contribute of my means to assist a Brother Knight in distress. I will advise him and give him aid. Furthermore, I promise to obey all laws, rules and regulations of the Order of Twelve and will be regular in attending all meetings of the order. I furthermore promise and swear that I will obey the call of every sign of a worthy Daughter of the Tabernacle. I promise and swear that I will aid and help a worthy Daughter of the Tabernacle in her distress, with my money, by my advice, and use all honorable means to give aid.

I further promise that I will defend the good name of a worthy Brother Knight and a Daughter of the Tabernacle whenever assailed at any time.

To all of which I do most earnestly promise and affirm binding myself under the penalty of having my body quartered and consumed by fire."

The candidate is then brought to light and beholds before him Good and Evil. The latter is personated by three persons, clothed with green to represent Envy; black to represent Falsehood; and spotted to represent Covetousness. The former is represented by Justice clothed in white; Love clothed with blue; Temperance in robes of drab; and Truth in robes of scarlet. The sign of admission in this degree is $\frac{1}{2}$. The sign of silence is an open hand; sign of distress, thumb and first two fingers extended, the last two fingers closed; the grip a single finger to the palm; password, N-O-M-A-D, (Damon.)

Then follows the lecture in this degree which is as follows:

Question.—Have we ever met before?

Answer.—We may have, as I have traveled considerably.

Q.—In what places have you traveled?

A.—I have traveled in the land of Judea, and other historical places.

Q.—Did you visit any mountains in Judea?

A.—Yes, I have visited mountains in Judea.

Q.—Can you name it?

A.—Perhaps I can with your assistance.

Q.—You begin.

A.—If you will tell me the last grand scene that transpired on the mountain I will give you the name.

Q.—It was the transfiguration of the Messiah.

A.—The name of the mountain is R. T. O. A. B.

Q.—What road did you travel to arrive at its summit?

A.—I encircled the mountain three times and passed every square.

Q.—What was said to you at the first square?

A.—It was said, My son, forget not my laws.

Q.—What was said to you at the second square?

A.—Thine own friend and thy father's friend forsake not.

Q.—What was said to you at the third square?

A.—I was told to seek out wisdom and the reason of things.

Q.—What was said to you at the fourth square?

A.—Behold I build a house to the name of the Lord my God to dedicate to him, for great is our God above all gods.

Q.—What further was done with you?

A.—I was placed in front of the Temple of the house where I took a solemn obligation which makes me a Knight of R. T. A. O. B. (Tabor.)

Q.—After the obligation what was done?

A.—I was caused to see light.

Q.—What did you see?

A.—Good and Evil.

Q.—Can you name them?

A.—I can with your assistance.

Q.—Do you know anything about evil?

A.—Falsehood comes next.

Q.—I was taught not to covet.

A.—But to give justice, love a Brother Knight, be temperate in all things and speak the truth at all times.

Q.—Have you the text?

A.—I have been adopted.

Q.—I am silent.

A.—Give me your hand, brother.

[They give the grip and word.]

Q.—I am glad to meet you.

The second degree is similar to the first except that it is shorter. The lecture is a continuation of that in the first and even more farcical and sacrilegious. The penalty is having the "right arm cut off."

The third or Key degree seems most important. The candidate is prepared as in other degrees by blindfolding. After due ceremonies and a prayer that he may be sustained in the trial he is about to endure this follows:

"After the prayer the brother is lifted up and carried to the preparation room, and bound to the cooler; he is then swung round the Temple three times and stopped at the first square.

Do you promise to defend a Sir Knight whenever and wherever he needs aid?

A.—I will, the Lord being my help and strength.

(On the second square.) Will you be a friend by means and otherwise to a Sir Knight in distress?

A.—I will help him as the Lord gives ability.

(On the third square.) Will you obey all calls of the Temple or Tabernacle of a Sir Knight or Daughter when given in proper order?

A.—I will without a question.

(On the fourth square.) Will you keep the secrets of the Temple and Tabernacle and those of a Sir Knight or Daughter?

A.—I will with all my mind, with all my heart, with all my will and with all my strength."

After further ceremonies he is released and conducted to the Temple by the M. D., who says, "We are here and have passed the fourth square. We will DEFEND, AID, OBEY and be SILENT."

He is caused to kneel and take the following obligation:

"I, —, in the presence of the Supreme Ruler of the Universe, and these Key Knights, do in addition to my former obligations, most solemnly and sincerely promise and swear that I will keep and conceal the secrets of this degree and will not reveal them to a Brother Knight of lesser degree except to assist in making him a Key Knight; nor to any person in the known world. I further promise and swear that I will obey the constitution, rules and regulations and edicts of the Grand Temple and Tabernacle; the constitution, rules and by-laws of this Temple, or any other that I may hereafter become a member" (of).

"I further promise and swear that I will not confer the Temple degrees on a woman, an atheist, a fool or a madman. I further promise that I will obey all signs of a Sir Knight or Daughter and wherever given and also the Secret Lock. I further promise that I will defend the name of a Knight or Daughter either before their face or behind their back. I further promise that I will aid and assist poor and indigent Sir Knights and Daughters—I knowing them to be worthy—when I can do it without injury to myself or family. I further promise that I will not detach or violate the virtue of a Sir Knight's wife, sister, daughter or widow, nor permit it to be done if in my power to prevent it. I further promise that I will not open and organize a Temple or Tabernacle unless I am legally authorized to by the proper authority. I further promise that if any part of this, my obligation, has been omitted at this time I will hold myself amenable when informed thereof. To all of which I do most solemnly promise to fulfill, binding myself under no less a penalty than to have my bones broken and life crushed out, should I wilfully break or violate this, my obligation, as a Key Knight. So help me God to keep the same."

After further ceremonies he is instructed in the signs.

Calling Signs, two hands joined.

Hailing Sign, left hand sweeping the face.

Grand Sign of Distress, —4—4.

The Grand Word is U O Y H T I W M A I (I am with you). The answer is H T A E D L I T N U, (until death.) The Password is S A I H T Y P, (Pythias.)

REFORM NEWS.

THE EASTERN STAR AND THE POLE STAR IN CONJUNCTION.

October 4, 1886.

Hume, Ill., has the appearance of a finished town. It has three houses of worship and one Odd-fellow, but no Masonic lodge. I have met here some excellent people, but to me they seemed lacking in courage and moral stamina on the lodge question.

I attended and took part in four different religious services, and applied for one of the churches in which to discuss the secret lodge system. Bro. Honn, pastor of the Disciple church, favored my request, but the decision of "officials" demurred. Members in the M. E. church were friendly, but here again I was met by those who "sit in Moses's seat." Knowing the unwillingness of Romish priests to open their doors to any but meetings of their own order, I desisted from efforts to obtain a house, and devoted my time to tract distribution and personal conference. A gentleman whom I met on the street expressed a desire to hear me speak, but said, "There are members of the secret orders on both the boards and they object." My informant, though neither a Mason nor Odd-fellow, was in a position to know, and I do not doubt his statement. This being true, it follows that the Odd-fellows' lodge in Hume, aided by the straggling Masons in the town, control the churches to the extent of excluding all discussion of the lodge system, thus yoking the Bride of Christ with the pagan lodge, and bringing the pulpits of the place under the rule of the Secret Empire. A prominent man in the town, and, as I judge, the ruling spirit in the Disciple church, declared to me that the Odd-fellows' lodge was more benevolent than the church. Perhaps it was uncharitable, but his assertion suggested the common adage about the untidy bird fouling her own nest, and seemed to me appropriately applied to a church member who deliberately and in contradiction of facts traduced and maligned the Bride of Christ, by assuming and insisting that the dearly-purchased stipends refunded by the lodge are benevolence. I hope to see Hume again, if the Lord permit.

TUSCOLA.—This town is full of people who have come in to see the show, and I have only time to record an incident at the depot, where I met Rev. Frasier, M. E. minister at Indianola. He said many things in the fifteen minutes' chat over tract No. 4, "Freemasonry in the Family."

"Are you a Mason?" said he.

I replied, "No, sir."

"Have you ever been?"

"No, sir."

"How do you know anything about it?"

"From the testimony of those who have been there."

"If a member on my charge should reveal the secrets of Masonry," said he, "I would call together my official board and discipline him."

"Then," said I, "you propose to make the M. E. church the hand-maid of the lodge, do you?"

He objected to the position.

"Very well, what charges would you prefer?"

"A charge of falsehood," he promptly replied.

"But," said I, "suppose that he should state that he was taken into the first or Entered Apprentice degree in Freemasonry, in a semi-nude state, with a blind over his eyes, and a rope or cord around his neck?" Here he interrupted me by saying, "He lies."

"But," said I, "suppose he should bring forward five others who were members of the same church and lodge, and they should legally attest to being present at his initiation, and that he had told the truth, what would you do in that case?"

"I would say that he lied and they swore to it."

I commend this statement of a Masonic Rev. to all members of the order who have any regard for the truth. Did he not do precisely what he swore to do, "ever conceal" the secrets of Masonry, and was he not, therefore, a "worthy brother?"

On the Illinois Central train lodge masters and Grand Lodge members were as thick as June bugs, on their way to their annual gathering in Chicago. Some were playing cards, and there were a number of ladies in attendance who seemed familiar with the game and played with a zest. I fell in with one Knight Templar who was willing to talk. He is master of a lodge in — an elder in the Presbyterian church, a Sabbath-school worker, a Republican, a Prohibitionist, etc. He appeared thoroughly candid and truthful, admitted all that I said about the fifth liberation, and the road that leads to that terrible cup of devils. He said there was nothing in Masonry worthy the attention of intelligent men, and he would be glad to see the whole system abolished. He had been several times elected master over his protest, and told "the boys" before he left home that he was going to the Grand Lodge for the last time; that he should go to the Armory and answer to roll-call, and then as there was never anything in the business to interest or instruct, he should take in the city and return to lodge in time to receive his mileage and per diem, then go home. I also learned that he is the Republican nominee to the State Legislature in his district. All his conversation was in a frank, open manner, and most of it in the presence of his wife and little daughter. I gave him such tracts as I had and a catalogue of our publications.

Some of the ladies who sat near had become interested, and he gave me a general introduction by saying, "These are all Star Masons, and I am afraid you will not receive much sympathy from them." It gave me an opportunity I had long desired, and I improved it by saying a few words and distributing tract No. 4, "Freemasonry in the Family." This soon called out the usual query, "Are you a Mason?" To which I gave a negative reply, and was met with, "Then you know nothing about it."

Addressing myself to the ladies, I said, "Are you Freemasons?" Several replied at once, "Yes." I said, "I am fortunate in meeting such an intelligent company of ladies who know and can tell me all about the order that is lawful for a profane to know." They seemed a trifle embarrassed by the situation and so to relieve matters I began to ask questions. The ice once broken, what followed can be more easily imagined than described. Thirteen women against one man made it, to me, exceedingly interesting. One K. T. came to the rescue, but he was soon settled with the fifth libation, and none ventured a second time into the arena. My teachers soon became attentive to the words of their pupil, and I explained to them the system, and how they were obliged to climb the back stairs into the kitchen lodge, how the Masonic system rejected Christ from its worship, and how it separated husband and wife and broke up the family relation; how it protected the liquor interests by the sworn allegiance of its members, and how it tended and actually made drunkards by its evil companionships in an unholy brotherhood and by its late hours. I then proposed that they give me an hour in their Star Lodge, to tell them what their husbands were doing in the Grand Lodge, while they were amusing themselves with Rob Morris's "Hush degrees," and closed by asking if they had any further instruction to give their pupil at this time. One lady replied "We are satisfied."

I suppressed, and I think wisely, the response that came to my lips, and simply remarked, there is no accounting for tastes. One lady asked my name, which I wrote out for her, with address, and invited them all to visit our headquarters in Chicago. I wish to say in commendation that only two of the thirteen ladies showed any temper, just enough to give zest to the occasion. A K. T. who had listened with marked interest, whose home is at Paxton, asked, "Do you know Blanchard?" I replied, "I do very well. His daughter was my first wife." And thus ended my first lesson in the Eastern Star degrees, by lady instructors, as we were in the suburbs of Chicago. J. P. STODDARD.

BAAL STILL WORSHIPED.

After leaving the State convention, held at Princeton, Ill., three days, which drew a large congregation, increasing from about 400 the first night to about 600 the last, I began the battle alone at the Bureau Wesleyan church, four miles in the country to the north of Wyand, Ill. Bro. Pinckney is the pastor of the church here, where, although for some time there has been no special work against the secret worship of false gods, the people seem to be thoroughly alive, and if all the churches in the land were as wide awake and earnest in opposition to lodgery, and in promoting practical Christian piety as this one seems to be, there would be no necessity for this special work against secretism.

The house was well filled, with an increased attendance each evening, as was also the case at the Hickory Grove Wesleyan church, six miles south-west, where on the third night many stood in the entry.

The pictures were much admired, and assisted in demonstrating to the audience that the ceremonies, symbols, traditions, and general features of the ancient worship of Baal, Adonis, Atys, Molech, Osiris, Brahma and Woden, and those of modern Masonry are identical; that Masonry is not simply similar to idolatry but that it is such in reality.

The quotations from Masonic authors which I have had photographed on glass made a marked impression as they were thrown in large print on the canvas so the entire audience could read them.

The contributions in both these churches were good, and the more highly appreciated from the fact that nearly every person gave something. The friends living in these two neighborhoods have my hearty thanks for their kindness.

From here I go Sheffield, where, as there is no church or hall large enough to hold the audience, I expect a small admission fee will be charged at the door for the double purpose of raising the money necessary for defraying the expenses, and keeping out the turbulent element that in towns improve such opportunities to make disturbance. My home and P. O. address is, for the present, Wheaton, Ill.

LATER.—Since writing the above I have given two lectures at Sheffield, the church being on the second evening packed full. I. R. B. ARNOLD.

WORKING TOWARD WAUPUN.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Our steadfast fellow-worker, Elder Mabbott of Elroy, secured me five minutes in which to address the United Brethren Annual Conference at Fennimore, on the morning of my departure, Oct. 2. I found some members of the Conference heartily in favor of the reform against the lodge. Leaving Fennimore I went to Fond du Lac, expecting to preach and lecture on the 3rd, in the Evangelical Association church there. But it had been thought best to have the usual German service in the morning, and it was with difficulty that the good pastor, Bro. Wm. Peppercorn, could secure the church for me in the evening on account of the unexpected opposition of lodge members in the church. But a majority voted to have me speak and I did so.

In the afternoon I listened to a very profitable address by Mrs. Emma Obernauer, now of Manistee, Mich., formerly of East Saginaw, where she was pastor of the Christian Mission church, known to many Cynosure readers by its connection with the work of Wm. F. Davis of Chelsea, Mass. Sister Obernauer is now National Superintendent of the W. C. T. U. department for lumbermen and miners, and Bro. Davis acts as missionary in charge of that work for the Northwest. Both oppose the lodge and favor undenominational Christian work. It is hoped that Bro. Davis may be at our convention at Waupun. At Fond du Lac I was most hospitably entertained by pastor Wm. Peppercorn, Bro. C. W. Pinkham and father Wm. Durand.

Tuesday I went to Oakfield and arranged with the pastor, Bro. Macy Bunker, to lecture in the Genesee Wesleyan church on Friday evening. The Free Baptist churches at Oakfield and Oak Center are closed against me by the pastor, Mr. Gidney.

Going to Waupun on Wednesday, I found that the Prohibitionists there, not knowing of our convention, had engaged Volney B. Cushing of Maine, a prominent Prohibitionist speaker, to give an address on Prohibition on the evening of October 19, the date of the opening of our convention. But correspondence by telephone revealed that Mr. Cushing belongs to no secret order and has no particular liking for the lodge, and so we have arranged that he shall address our convention and the public under the joint auspices of our Association and the Waupun Prohibition Club. We thus secure the services of a good Prohibition speaker, and get the co-operation of Waupun Prohibitionists, which seems a very happy and providential settlement of what appeared as a serious difficulty.

Friday evening I had a good hearing at the Wesleyan church near Oakfield. Brother and sister Bunker expect to attend the Waupun Convention. The prospects are quite hopeful. Let us rally, and, God helping, make the convention a great success for his church, and our homes and country. Read the notice again, and then resolve, if you are not providentially hindered, to attend. Come the first day and stay through. Free conveyance to Waupun on Tuesday, for those who come by the C. & N. W. road to Chester. J. F. BROWNE.

DILIGENCE IN OHIO

LOGAN, O., Oct. 8th, 1886.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Friday and Saturday last were spent near Clearport and Amanda. In company with Mr. C. M. Strickler I secured eleven new readers for our paper. Sabbath morning I went to the Reform church in Clearport, expecting to listen to the pastor. He was suffering from a cold, and requested me to occupy the time in his place, which I did on the principle of the golden rule. Notice was given in neighboring churches that I would speak in the evening on the anti-Christian character of the lodge. I was very happily disappointed to find between three and four hundred people assembled when I reached the church in the evening. I did not suppose there were so many people in the country. They listened very attentively for some two hours. One old man by the name of Hyde, in a very loud, excited manner announced himself to be a Mason good and true. I heard afterwards that he had been reporting around that he had challenged me to debate. I did not hear him make any such challenge. If he wants to meet and discuss like a man, without getting angry, I am willing to meet him at any time.

On Monday evening, according to previous announcement, I spoke to the friends in the Lutheran church at Lick Run. Many became interested. Mr. Adkins, with whom I stopped, subscribed for our paper and gave the use of his house to help on the work. Tuesday evening I spoke in the Lutheran church near Amanda to a good audience; sold some books and received some encouragement in the work. Wednesday, at Lancaster, I distributed tracts in all the leading business places. Rev. C. Dreyer subscribed for the Cynosure and gave words of encouragement. As there seemed to be no present opening for a lecture, I came on to Logan in the evening and met Rev. Mittler, pastor of the Lutheran church, who assured me of his hearty co-operation, and has since agreed to pay half the expense in securing the rink. The Free Methodist brethren had a prayer meeting that evening, and the pastor being absent, I was asked to take charge. Mr. Steadman, a hard-working mechanic who has a pleasant home, invited me to make my headquarters with him while in this section.

Yesterday and to-day have been spent among the United Brethren in the country near by. The "commission" business has stirred up these friends to double activity. I am to speak in Zion's church Thursday evening, and Friday evening in another U. B. church near by, if arrangements can be made. A Mr. Lemon belonging to this class is living a lie, by trying to break down the principles he agreed to uphold when he joined. He is a Mason and Odd-fellow. I go to Athens where I hope to arrange for meetings for Sabbath and the first of next week, returning here next Wednesday evening.

CORRESPONDENCE.

LETTER TO A METHODIST PASTOR.

Rev. C. C. Edwards, Liberty, Ind.

SIR.—I read in the Christian Advocate of July 7th, 1886, that the corner stone of the new Methodist Episcopal church was laid on July 3rd, in the presence of a very large congregation; that "it was an interesting day to our friends in Liberty;" that "something like three hundred were converted and brought into the church last winter;" "and this new church building is the result of that revival and the persistent and wisely directed efforts of the pastor;" and that "the ceremonies of laying the corner stone were according to the ritual of the church." But, sir, please inform one who is desirous of knowing when or where in such ceremonies could the I. O. O. F. take part and render "beautiful exercises appropriate to the occasion." An institution which disowns, and thereby dishonors Jesus Christ, rendering beautiful exercises appropriate to the occasion of laying the corner stone of a Christian church? How unthinking or stupid your reporter must have been! But perhaps he was dazzled by the tinsel and glare of those "fancy horse collars." Did they look appropriate to the occasion?

This new church building is the result of the revival last winter! Were your converts all Odd-fellows? But then we know they were not. Who ever heard of a church being built by a lodge? No churches are built by them, and yet they are allowed in this enlightened century to spread their nets for the unwary right at the threshold of our churches. How like an angel of light the evil one strives to appear! I have not yet heard that he has asked the church to assist him in such ceremonies as laying corner stones. God forbid that such should ever be! Churches built by lodges! No, indeed. They have to keep on hand a supply of altars, arks, armor coats, axes for wardens, ballot-boxes, ballot-balls, banners, beards, belts, bells, Bibles, books and stationary, bows and arrows, bundles of rods, caskets, caskets with scenes, (natural, wired and decolored,) cherubim, Chinese gongs with drumsticks, combined jewelry, curtains, costumes, door knockers, door wickets, Daughters of Rebekah regalia, emblems of wood, Ezeels, furniture, funeral rosettes, flags, gavels, gavel blocks, hoodwinks, helmets, painted inns, jewels, legging, letters I. O. O. F., lodge regalia, members' regalia, masks, marshals' sashes, wigs and beards, property chests, parade caps and collars, tunics, turbans, torches, seals, scepticrons, sciopticon screens and slides, stone Ezeels, shields, swords, scenes, scene covers, sandals, spears, supporters' wands, team outfit, which cost as much as eight hundred dollars, horse-hair wigs, which are marked at five dollars, etc., etc., too tedious to mention. So I find that their money is not for church nor for benevolent purposes, but more for their tomfoolery, as their price lists of lodge supplies and their annual reports show.

But still we find consolation. The ceremonies were according to the ritual of the church. I have read their printed prayers in ritual and annual reports, and have the first time to see "for Jesus sake." I found the parable of the good Samaritan dramatized with no mention of its author. Also that "one law shall bind all nations, tongues and kindred of the earth, and that law shall be the law of universal brotherhood." Yes, the brotherhood of Jesus Christ, but never that of secret lodges, which excludes nineteen-twentieths of the human race, and Jesus Christ himself. I earnestly ask you to seriously consider this matter of secret lodges, and for Jesus' sake come out and help to save others. Respectfully and prayerfully, ODD-FELLOW'S WIFE.

VIEWS OF GOOD REPUBLICANS ON THE TEMPERANCE QUESTION.

We are in favor of prohibition because we believe it right. We are willing to be called "Radical Prohibitionists," because we believe in the principle. We believe that the sale and use of intoxicants as a beverage are evil and that continually. We believe it is not right to license, for a price, an evil; therefore, we do not believe in the so-called license law, whether price is high or low. We believe the people should be allowed to express, by their votes, whether they are or are not in favor of prohibition, and that a majority should rule on this question as on all others effecting the people. We believe it practical and possible to elect representatives to the legislature in the Republican party, who will vote for submission to the people.

We know a third or independent party cannot elect such men. We want "Prohibition" when we can get it and carry it out, but we do not want to cast our vote so as to weaken that party which can give us all we ask, sooner than we can hope for it alone. We do not want to strengthen the wrong, by dividing the right. We recognize the powers that be, and while we are ready to do anything in our power to further the cause of prohibition, we do not wish to let our zeal destroy our reason.

J. A. BENT, JR.

[Note.—Friend B. speaks, no doubt, the wishes and feelings of thousands in the Republican party, but their sentiments have no recognition in the management of the party, and probably never will. Few who have not given some time to the investigation of the subject are at all aware of the power of the liquor interest in politics. We advise all Republicans to read the Review of the Anti-saloon Republican Convention, lately held in this city by S. W. Packard, Esq. It will be a revelation to some.—Ed. CYNOSURE.]

TRIBUTE TO PHILO CARPENTER.

Another grand man has risen. Truly grand men are indeed like angels' visits, few and far between. Indeed these are angels' visits. Usually our death record says, when such men as Philo Carpenter and John Dougall die, "Another great man has fallen." Is this the best way to express the fact? Did Stephen, Paul, Jesus, fall, save to fall asleep?

But my purpose is to pay my tribute to a man whom I met only once, that at Oberlin, Ohio, at our convention which inaugurated the American party. No man could see him and not be impressed with the grand qualities which spoke in every feature of his noble face. Beneficence, it seemed to me, was so prominent in his countenance that a mere child could read it. His majestic personality, and his commanding address impressed me. So mild, and yet so decided. How perfectly his grand record tallies with the grace and grandeur of his face. It is inspiring to think that he is risen, gone up higher, away from the conflicts and the infirmities of the world to live in eternal youth; that we shall meet him on the "Evergreen Shore" no more to part.

When men like Philo Carpenter take sides in the living issues of their day, we can safely follow their example. Like the loyal angels, they are volunteers to be marshaled on the right side—God's side. I am deeply impressed with the fact—it is a fact, that the movement of the N. C. A. in which Bro. Carpenter has worked so nobly embraces as grand a body of men and women as ever graced the reforms of our world. This is no delusion, and when "the books are opened," such men as C. G. Finney, Nathaniel Colver, Nathan Brown, John Dougall, and Philo Carpenter will be seen in their native grandeur.

NATHAN CALLENDER.

SENATOR WINDOM'S SPEECH.

CHICAGO, Oct. 7, 1886.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I attended for about two hours the Anti-Saloon Republican Convention in Chicago, and was far from being gratified by the evidently time-serving spirit of several of the speakers, whose aim evidently was to make prohibition a secondary question to the preservation of one of our political parties. Windom's speech recalled the subject. He seems to me to color history when he claims superior wisdom for the temporizing policy of the United Free Soil and Republican parties as against the Abolitionists, for surely that party, even with Abraham Lincoln, whom he styles the "grandest patriot modern or ancient times ever saw"—even with him there would have been no emancipation of the four millions of slaves and no citizenship conferred on the colored race in the South if it had not become a war necessity. What does Senator Windom mean then by advising Prohibitionists to cease agitation, except such as may be conducive to Republican ascendancy? When would prohibition come if such a policy should be pursued? Surely he does not contemplate war, and with it conditional prohibition, like the boasted conditional emancipation become the national necessity through the infatuation of saloonists, a la slave-holders.

Nay, nay! let us admit with Senator Windom that the liquor traffic is indeed "the Moloch of the infernal regions," and the claims of party ascendancy become of necessity quite secondary to the supreme importance of destroying the traffic. What! How dare any true man in this now happily free country suggest forbearance towards or alliance with "the Moloch of the infernal regions!" Such propositions are unworthy of a moment's consideration except to utterly reject them. As well may we hoist the red flag and have anarchy at once! T. H.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE WRITINGS OF JOHN.

LESSON IV.—October 24, 1886.—Jesus Crucified.—John 19: 13-30.

GOLDEN TEXT.—It is finished.—John 19: 30.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. Christ's Kingship proclaimed to the world. vs. 17-24. It is very significant that Pilate with no other intention than to vex and annoy the hated Jews should place over his cross an inscription bearing such emphatic testimony to his kingly character. Bad men often witness to the truth unwittingly, and however unworthy the source, such witness has a peculiar value. There is also a fearful significance in Pilate's answer, "What I have written I have written." With him the die was cast, the irrevocable deed was done. Henceforth history would know him only as the crucifier of Jesus. So there will come a time to every human being when his earthly account will be sealed up forever; when what he has written on the tablet of his life will be written, never to be erased. The exact fulfillment of prophecy in even the minutest details is another point to be noticed. The casting of lots for the seamless garment, this side-act in the great tragedy, narrated by all four of the evangelists, is a most important link in the chain of Gospel evidence, for it was foretold a thousand years before. The historic Christ, the ever-living Christ of to-day, is also the prophetic Christ, and thus belongs to all the ages that have been or shall be. This minute fulfilling of prophecy carries with it another lesson. In that wonderful prayer of Christ there is no more wonderful declaration than this: "Thou (the Father) hast loved them as thou hast loved me." The most trifling event in our lives cannot pass unheeded or unnoticed by divine Providence. It is as much foreknown to him as the day of our death or our birth.

2. It is only in Christ that our human relationships are made complete. vs. 25-27. No student of ancient history can fail to see the justice of Paul's charge against the heathen world,—"Without natural affection." Christianity alone brings the soul into its true relations not only with God but with humanity, and makes us realize that all family ties are sacred trusts to be accepted for him, and though, there may be cases when they entail trials and burdens, are not to be set aside for our own comfort or convenience. It is in our home life, among those who know us best that our Christian profession is put to the most unequivocal proof.

3. The Finished Work. vs. 28-30. It was a perfect work; nothing could be added thereto or taken therefrom. It needed no human device to make it more efficacious. A false religious system always puts some scheme of its own between man and the finished work of its Redeemer,—either human merit, or forms and ceremonies and superstitious observances. Satan cannot prevent his triumph but he can do all he can to mar it. In the errors of the Romish church, which institutes other mediators and makes the way to God difficult instead of divinely plain and simple; and in the false teachings of Freemasonry which teaches another righteousness than Christ's by making salvation depend on obedience to Masonic rules and principles we see his handiwork. The most successful revival labor is that which makes the most of Christ and keeps all human instruments and means as far as possible in the background.

LIGHT FROM THE WORD.

What Scripture warns us that character always tends to fixed permanence whether for good or evil? Rev. 22:11. Can obeying any system of morality, however perfect, save the soul? Rom. 3:2.

From Peloubet's Notes.

On the way to the cross.—ver. 17 (Matt. 27:32; Mark 15:21; Luke 23:26-32). Via Dolorosa, between Castle Antonia and Calvary. About half-past eight Friday morning.

"And he bearing his cross went forth." From Pilate's palace, probably Castle Antonia. The terrible preparations were soon made,—the hammer, the nails, the cross, the very food for the soldiers who were to watch under each cross. Four soldiers would be detailed for each cross, the whole being under the command of a centurion. As always, the cross was borne to the execution by him who was to suffer on it,—perhaps his arms bound to it with cords. Ordinarily the procession was headed by the centurion or rather preceded by one who proclaimed the nature of the crime and carried a white wooden board on which it was written. Thus Jesus came forth bearing his cross. He was followed by two malefactors, "robbers," probably of the class, then so numerous, that covered its crimes by pretensions of political motives. These too also, would bear each his cross, and probably be attended each by four soldiers.—Eberstein.

As the victim of God, Jesus carries the wood for his sacrifice; as a conqueror, the arms with which he is to conquer the world; as a king, the sceptre with which he is to rule his people.—Quenel.

"Into a place called the place of a skull . . . Golgotha." Golgotha is a Hebrew word, meaning a skull. From its Latin equivalent, calvaria, comes our English word, calvary, which occurs in the English New Testament only in Luke 23:33, where it should be translated "a skull." The place was doubtless so named because it was a small knoll in the shape of a skull. The exact site is unknown. It is far better for the purity of the Christian religion that this be so, lest such places be regarded as special means of holiness, when all true holiness is spiritual in the heart.—P.

"Where they crucified him." The feet of the sufferer were only a foot or two above the ground,—a fact of some weight, as showing that Jesus suffered in the midst of his persecutors, and not looking down from above their heads.—Schaff. Death by crucifixion seems to include all that pain and death can have of the horrible and ghastly,—dizziness, cramp, thirst, starvation, sleeplessness, publicity of shame, long continuance of torment, horror of anticipation, mortification of untended wounds,—all intensified just up to the point at which they can be endured at all, but all stopping just short of the point which would give to the sufferer the relief of unconsciousness. The unnatural position made every movement painful; the lacerated veins and crushed tendons throbbed with incessant anguish; the wounds, inflamed by exposure gradually gangrened; the arteries, especially of the head and stomach, became swollen and oppressed with surcharged blood; and while each variety of misery went on gradually increasing, there was added to them the intolerable pang of a burning and raging thirst. Such was the death to which Christ was doomed.—Farrar.

"And it was written in Hebrew, and Greek, and Latin." Pilate displayed the Lord's title on the cross in Latin, the language of Roman power; in Greek, the language of the world's best culture; and in Hebrew, the language of the Jew. Thus to power, to culture, and to piety was the sovereignty of Jesus declared, and it is still declared by means of such language. Power, culture, and piety, in their noblest forms, pay homage at the feet of Jesus.—J. R. Vincent, D. D.

"That the Scripture might be fulfilled." The Scripture referred to is quoted from Ps 22:18, Septuagint Version. In this Psalm, David doubtless had some reference to his own experience, but even if he speaks of himself, yet he was a type of Christ; and what is said of the type is more perfectly true of the antitype, and was so intended by the Holy Spirit. It would thus be a typical prophecy.—G. W. Clark.

Darkness over all the land.—For three hours, from twelve to three o'clock (Matt. 27:45; Mark 15:33; Luke 23:44, 45). This darkness was typical of the darkness over Jesus' feelings; of the dark hour of sin and depravity that could crucify God's beloved Son; of the darkness of sin over all the earth which was to be dispelled by the cross of Jesus, and his resurrection from the dead.

"And gave up the ghost." His spirit. This was accompanied by a loud cry uttering either the sixth, or the ninth word from the cross. All the other evangelists take pains to mention that it was a loud cry. His last cry "with a loud voice" was not like that of one dying, but was the shout of triumph and victory. In the language of the early Christian hymn, it was not Death which approached Christ, but Christ Death. Christ encountered Death, not as conquered but as the Conqueror.—Eberstein.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Ossage County jail, his subsequent conveyance by freemen to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his name to the letter, but attaches his address.

In closing his letter he writes: "I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a consciousness of having been governed through a 'Anti-Masonic excitement' by a sincere desire, not to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and to avert the threatened and dangerous influence of 'secret societies'."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the best historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. (Chicago, National Christian Association, 221 W. Madison St., Chicago, Ill.)

AMERICAN PLATFORM.

ADOPTED AT CHICAGO, JUNE 30, 1884

Viewing with deep concern the corrupt and unsettled condition of American politics, and witnessing with alarm the fearful prevalence of caste and classness by which our citizens are being adequately remedied, we, working secretly to compass political ends, a method directly and powerfully tending to increase corruption, to destroy mutual confidence, and hasten disruption and bloodshed; and having no hope of adequate remedy for these evils from existing parties, and believing the foundation of a party based upon the fundamental principles of the Declaration of American Independence, both inevitable and indispensable: We, therefore, a portion of the American people, believing with our fathers that we have our rights and liberties, not from men or parties, but from God; believing in the Christian marriage, and not in Mormonism; believing in the religious democracy of the New Testament, and not in the despotism of the lodge; believing, also, with our Scotch and English ancestors, that civil government, though ordained in God, is "founded in nature, not in grace," and, therefore, that all have equal civil rights, while we abhor the idea of enforcing religion or controlling conscience by human laws and penalties as calculated to make hypocrites, not Christians, and savoring of the days of priestcraft, the fagot and the stake, we at the same time as firmly believe that atheism and priestcraft are twins and both alike foes to human liberty and welfare. We further most firmly believe that a government without God has none but tyrannical power, and is destitute of all legitimate authority to maintain civil order, to swear a witness, to try a criminal, to hang a murderer, to imprison a thief, and while we consider government without God as a misnomer, we regard all religions, all sects, all worship invented by men, and so having no higher than human origin, as mere swindling impostures and cheats. We believe in peace and in natural arbitration as a means of perpetuating life, yet as so profoundly believing in the bravery and blood of our soldiers have bought us the peace which we enjoy, and we honor the memories of the dead and will be just to the living, and all that we can do to prolong the strain raised by the women of this country: "For God, and home, and native land," and trust that this beautiful and patriotic motto will soon be not only echoed by their sons, but sustained by their deeds.

We, therefore, solemnly adopt and present the following as containing a brief synopsis of the principles of our government, by which we intend to be governed in casting our votes. We hold:

1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.
2. That the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.
3. That God requires, and man needs a Sabbath.
4. We demand the prohibition of the importation, manufacture, and sale of intoxicating drinks.
5. We hold that the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.
6. We are opposed to putting prison labor or depreciated contract labor from foreign countries in competition with free labor to benefit manufacturers, corporations or speculators.
7. We are in favor of a revision and enforcement of the laws concerning patent frauds, for the prevention and punishment of frauds either upon inventors or the general public.
8. We hold to and will vote for woman suffrage.
9. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by Articles 13, 14 and 15 of our amended National Constitution should be preserved inviolate, and the same equality should be extended to Indians and Chinese.
10. That international differences should be settled by arbitration.
11. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.
12. That the general government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.

13. That it should be the settled policy of the government to reduce tariffs and taxes as rapidly as the necessities of revenue and vested business interests will allow.

14. That polygamy should be immediately suppressed by law, and that the Republican party is censurable for the long neglect of its duty in respect to this evil.

15. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice President of the United States.

The Christian Cynosure.

EDITORS.

J. BLANCHARD.

HENRY L. KELLOGG.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, OCTOBER 14, 1886.

Thirty-six years ago (Jan., 1850) a sermon on secret societies was reviewed in the Princeton Review, by the Elder Dr. Hodge, Professor of Systematic Theology in Princeton, which he then edited. This learned and honored man said in his review: "Let no one be deluded by the supposition that secret societies, whether Masonic, temperance, or Odd-fellows, are 'practical Christianity,' or Christianity at all. They are in their origin pagan, in their tendency popish, and in their spirit anti-Christian." The present Princeton faculty, Drs. McCosh, Hodge, Patton, and McCloskie, in the half century gone, have not degenerated, but regard the lodge as Dr. Hodge did fifty years ago.

GOOD TEMPLARS COMING.—Rev. D. C. Babcock, head and leader of the secret temperance orders in Pennsylvania, is the author of an able and excellent book, or large pamphlet on "The Philosophy of the Temperance Movement." It is replete with history and good sense. This writer, who is the most earnest advocate of the secret temperance orders we have met, on page 42 of his book, says: "These so-called secret orders, kept the movement alive during the war. * * * If they must decrease now, they may console themselves with the fact that others have heard their bugle call and entered into their labors." This leader sees that these orders must "decrease now." This is nearly all he says of them.

We give our readers, to-day, a sermon of rare excellence by the young pastor of the historic church where the Elder Edwards preached, whose tombstone, visited by multitudes, still entitles him THE AMERICAN DIVINE. The present pastor and author of the sermon writes in warm commendation of the Saratoga sermon on Prohibition and the Baccalaureate printed in the Cynosure. He says: "I believe you take the true position, both as to the liquor problem, and as to the 'progressive orthodoxy,' which is neither 'progressive,' nor 'orthodox.' I do hope the evil spirit of unbelief will not creep over the West as it has over a large part of New England." This sermon on building human society on Christ is a powerful protest against the whole family of secret "orders" which omit him and promise to send their members to heaven by "their inventions;" and, indeed, against all political parties which recognize neither God nor Christ. The sermon struck us as original, able and Scriptural; and though it mentions but few of the secret orders, as Mormonism, Socialism, etc., as Mormonism was chartered by the Legislature of Illinois as a civil despotism, after its "dispensation" as a lodge by the Grand Lodge of Illinois, the sermon of Mr. Lathe applied, would annihilate the whole secret lodge system; and it is the doctrine of the orthodox churches of New England.

THE RELIGIOUS EARTHQUAKE.

The prophet Isaiah (39: 6) makes earthquakes visitations of God. And the earthquake which convinced the centurion and "those that were with him" that Christ "was the Son of God," seems surely to have been such a visitation. So Shakespeare's is but the testimony of human tradition that earth's convulsions keep pace with and chronicle man's crimes; and especially the crime of superceding God's religion by man's inventions: so, divorcing the globe from God and making one thing as right as another.

"Some say the earth was feverish and did shake,"

But, theories aside, there is no denying the fact of the resemblance between our natural and religious earthquakes at the present time. Our earth shuddering have come unlooked for, given no explanations, touched and glanced on all parts of the United States, producing anxiety, alarm and positive damage. So with the religious convulsion, whose latest shock was felt at Des Moines, Iowa, last week. Fourteen years ago a Mr. Geo. A. Jackson was refused ordination in Massachusetts, because he substituted certain speculations of his own for the plain words of Jesus Christ, "These shall go away into everlasting punishment." A telegram flashed from Leavenworth, Kan., called him to that city where liquor defies law, where a second Kansas council ordained him. Rev. Henry M. Storrs, D. D., (who, nineteen years ago, wrote a large part of a tract against secret lodges, and, as chairman of a committee, voted to print it, but withheld his name from it,) being present, was understood strongly to endorse the speculations of Mr. Jackson in mitigation or modification of "eternal punishment," which, he thought, might mean "punishment in eternity." This matter ended in separating Dr. H. M. Storrs from the secretaryship of the old American Home Missionary Society.

After this (in 1875) Dr. Whiton, of Lynn, Mass., published a book entitled, "Is Eternal Punishment Endless," which was sent to theological students, not, of course, to settle their minds, for it asserted nothing; but to unsettle them. In 1876, next year, a council declined to install Rev. James F. Merriam near Springfield, Mass., for views, or no-views, similar to those of Jackson and Whiton.

A year later Rev. T. T. Munger, at North Adams, Mass., was installed by the aid and countenance of Pres. Porter, of Yale; which sold his book entitled, "Freedom of Faith;" and, soon after, Dr. Merriam, formerly president of Ripon College, was installed at Somerville, Mass., after vehemently advocating "new departure" doctrines which were pronounced by Rev. Mr. Plumb of Boston "vague and vicious."

By this time the Congregational denomination was, like Charleston in the late earthquake, badly shaken up by an unseen, undefined power or force, known only by the confusion caused by it. Meantime Chicago Presbytery was Swinging in the same cradle of unbelief; and Rock River M. E. Conference was shaking off another doubting Thomas, who had drunk the Knight Templars' "cup of devils," invoking double damnation on his soul if he should reveal their secrets, and so had come to believe, with Prof. Swing, that Christ spoke falsely when he taught that there was a "damnation of hell" to which corrupt churchmen were exposed.

Other cities, presses, and persons, are now shuddering in these "cold," earthquake "chills." A Methodist bishop, Foster, in a late New York Independent, thus meets Paul's declaration, that heathen who "have sinned without law shall perish without law." He says:

"Convince me that there is a God at the head of the universe who, without fault of theirs, or any chance of escape, will damn the dead, living, and yet to live, millions of heathenism, and you make it forever impossible that he should be worshipped by any but devils, and by them only because he becomes their chief."

This bold swagger, of course, imputes cruelty to God by the fallacy, "without fault of theirs," which the Bible does not teach.

This agnosticism, built on doubts, and defended by denials, having come into the low places "like a flood," has reached Andover Hill, which, we students used to call in our prayers, "The Hill of Zion!" And this "School of the Prophets," which has received hundreds of thousands of dollars, skimmed from the hard soil by the pious farmers of New England, to support teachers who are to tell them positively what the Bible teaches, now is teaching them a doctrine based on doubts. Dr. Lyman Abbott, perhaps the sincerest and adroitest exponent of their teachings, said last week at Des Moines, that what they insist on are only "minor points." And Norman Smyth, of New Haven, said at the same meeting, "Not one of them affirmed a belief in future probation, but only expressed a doubt concerning it." But the Scripture saith of plain Bible truth, "He that doubteth is damned."

Their most plausible propositions are:

1. That Christ is the Saviour of all men, and, therefore, none can be lost till they have heard and rejected him.

2. But many, nay multitudes, of heathen, and all dead infants, have never heard of him.

3. Therefore, these myriad multitudes, infants included, must have a probation and a "fair chance" after death; that is to say, our race, thousands to one, are to be preached to, converted and saved, if at all, after they die!

Well, what are we to think of these men?"

We are to leave their case, as we do that of the heathen, to a God, merciful as well as just. We are in the "falling away" which precedes the coming of Christ, and Satan, "the God of this world," is blinding the minds of them that believe not.

The old Andover faculty, Woods, Stuart, Emerson, and, we think, Skinner, published their solemn warning against the lodge. And nineteen years ago the late faculty, Park, Phelps, and Egbert Smyth, signed a paper requesting a tract to keep Christians out of the lodges. Since that time these teachers of the churches and ministry have stood still and seen our young men stripped, sworn and swindled into these lodges, whose creed is deism, and their ritual devil-worship; and the churches whose funds have fed them, have had no warning from their lips or pens! And now God is leaving them to wrangle about a doubt! This nation is called to sackcloth, mourning and weeping and prostration, as Ezra, in like circumstances, prostrated himself in front of the temple of God.

One, with the Bible in his hand, would far prefer the chance of an average industrious heathen, such as fed and sung to Mungo Park or Ledyard, than the chance of a watchman, who "seeth the wolf coming," swearing husbands to life-long secrecy from their wives, and children from their parents, trampling on the example of Christ, who "in secret said nothing;" filling our court houses with secret oaths, and swearing multitudes of laborers to obey they know not whom, and conceal they know not what.

We have carefully scanned the list of the "new-departure" men, and they produce no revivals, nor are they found in the ranks of reform. Let the American Board, with its more than half-million a year, take ground against the liquor crime; plead in its great meetings for the laborers' dishonored Sabbath, and the sworn organized deism of the lodge, and God will restore the honor and power which they had when they represented the active Christianity of the United States.

GENERAL RILEY'S RECOLLECTIONS OF MORGAN TIMES.

General A. W. Riley, of Rochester, N. Y. (known to our readers), is now ninety-one years and seven months old; yet is agile in his motions, and capable and correct in business, as ordinary men of fifty or sixty years. He was between thirty and forty years old when Morgan was murdered, and knew most of his abductors. Thurlow Weed started the first Anti-masonic paper in Rochester, when he found that Masons of both political parties had secretly united their votes and elected a city treasurer. As they had taken Masonry into politics, Weed accepted the challenge, and opened the campaign against the lodge, which gave to the country the statesmen Seward, Chase, Stevens, Stanton, Lincoln, Charles Francis Adams, and others who administered the Federal Government during the war, and which in 1832 gave Wirt and Ellmaker, the Anti-masonic candidates, a popular vote of two hundred and twenty-eight thousand, and which would have annihilated the secret lodge system, had not the slave question come to its rescue that year, absorbed popular attention, and sheltered the lodge, and prolonged its life to work disaster in future.

General Riley went down town to the principal hotel and saw handbills put up, threatening destruction to all who should presume to assail the lodges. He read the handbill, turned and walked to the office, and said to the secretary, "I am an Anti-mason."

"Are you in earnest, General?"

"Yes," he replied.

"Very well," answered the secretary, "there will be a meeting to-morrow night."

Riley attended, and the proceedings of that meeting were spread throughout Monroe county before the next night; and the county, at the next election, gave an Anti-masonic majority of seven hundred votes.

A regiment of eight companies, commanded by General Riley, was on drill the day after the night in which Morgan was taken off. Burrage Smith was lieutenant of the crack company of the regiment, the First Rifles. The General, observing that Smith was absent and knowing that he was profoundly engaged with his company and expected drill, rode up to the Captain and said:

"Captain, where is your lieutenant?"

"Out on important business," was the reply.

Smith was then absent as one of the kidnappers of Morgan. General Riley afterward visited Smith in the jail at Canandaigua. "He was cleared by Masonic perjury; went afterward to New Orleans," said the General, "and died a miserable wretch, though he had, in Rochester, been a respectable business man."

The General's memory is perfect for events of that political earthquake period; and a perfect storehouse of facts showing the capacity of the lodge to defy and defeat government, courts and laws, and we ought, by all means, to have those facts to benefit the country after his death. A citizen of Rochester when Thurlow Weed started his paper there, personally acquainted with the kidnappers, Cheesbro, Sawyer, Whitney, etc., and with the men then prominent in public life, there is probably not another man on earth so capable of doing this great service as himself.

The discussion of the "future probation" question at the American Board meeting at Des Moines was an exciting feature of the meeting. Secretary Alden in his report, and Dr. Withrow in his sermon, condemned the "new theology," and the report of the Secretary was approved by a two-thirds vote; while Prof. Egbert Smyth of Andover, one of the foremost advocates of the theory, was dropped from the Prudential committee of the Board. A Boston dispatch says that in consequence of the action at Des Moines, prominent Congregationalists of that city have brought charges for want of fidelity against five of the professors of the Andover Theological Seminary. The matter will come up for hearing before the board of visitors two weeks hence, and from them will doubtless be appealed to the Supreme Court.

—Secretary Stoddard is this week helping the Michigan brethren in their State convention at South Lake. We look for a good report next week from Bro. Day's efforts.

—Pres. and Mrs. J. Blanchard returned Friday morning from the East in excellent health and greatly encouraged with the result of their two months' absence, both personally and for the reform. Their report has been made to Dr. Gray, chairman of the committee on the national conference, who will call a meeting of that body soon.

—The Detroit Freemason editor is a man of wonderful and Masonic sagacity. The leading editorial last week is entitled, "Masonry not Secret," and the first sentence reads, "Freemasonry is not a secret society." The very next editorial is on the "Essential Secrets of Masonry." The argument of this editorial is that a secret society is one which is known only to its members. Will he tell us where one such ever existed?

—Instead of Bro. Hinman's usual letter reporting his progress in Tennessee, he has this week an account of the Knights of Tabor, a colored lodge which lately held its annual meeting in this city, and reports many thousands in its membership. A letter from Bro. Hinman too late for this number writes hopefully. He spoke twice in Memphis last week.

—Mrs. Mary E. Warren, "Past Grand Worthy Vice Templar" of the Good Templar order of Wisconsin, writes, returning a single copy of the Cynosure, that she has no use for such a paper, after reading Captain Wood's powerful indictment of Good Templar management in California. Does Mrs. Warren wish mankind to believe that she is in favor of knavery and fraud and hypocrisy?

STATE MEETINGS.

Thus far our State meetings this fall have been of deep local interest, but not largely attended from distant points. I do not attribute this state of things to a want of sympathy on the part of friends, but fear there are many who do not appreciate the importance of these annual gatherings. "Close times" for money has doubtless much to do with this question, but it is nevertheless a general truth that "Where there's a will there's a way," and if our friends make efforts commensurate with the interests at stake there would be a better representation and more effective work done.

There are a few persons in each State whom no ordinary obstacle prevents from attending. It would be a strange event for a State convention to occur in Michigan without pastors Day, Ross, Richards, and Bros. Foote, Clark, Torrance and Pool being present, and not to meet Elders Ames, Warner, Collins, Gardner, and Dea. Britten, Bros. Wood and Orvis, would be an unlooked-for disappointment in Wisconsin, but where are the "ONE HUNDRED AND ONE" others equally concerned? Have the few faithful ones greater responsibilities or more at stake than their brethren? I think not. Corruption in the church and injustice in the government blasts the hopes and wrecks the fortunes of the concerned and indifferent alike. If but one in ten of those really opposed to the secret lodge system in any State would turn out, the church or hall could not be found that would accommodate the hundredth part of them; and yet it has occurred, and may again, that an ordinary hall or country church will be ample with room to spare. As goes the annual meeting, so very largely goes the State work during the year. If friends want the enemy to triumph and the anti-lodge work to stop and the seed already sown to perish, let them stay away from these meetings and restrain their prayers and withhold their support. There is no surer way to kill a cause than to neglect it and leave it to starve. Death may be slow but it will be sure. If they desire to see the work prosper, the seed sown ripen into a full harvest, the enemy rebuked and shorn of his strength, then let friends come up to these annual gatherings, filled with the Holy Spirit, and make them reunions of Christian workers. Come to pray, to kindle afresh the enthusiasm begotten by contact with kindred spirits, to plan for a year's campaign of steady, well-directed effort, and to start out with a consecrated zeal that scorns opposition and surmounts difficulties, as a living faith grasps and holds the anchor amid the storms and wrecks of life. J. P. STODDARD.

those who are initiated. The covenants are immoral. No one has a right to swear that he will obey laws and covenants of which he has no present knowledge. He has no right to obey all signs that may be given him. These laws, covenants and signs may involve disobedience to God and no obligation can be innocently taken until it is known to be in harmony with divine law. The promise to keep any part of the obligation whenever it is made known is a surrender of the rights of conscience and a servile bondage to wicked men. The promise not to violate the virtue of certain women is an implied admission of the right to corrupt others. It is a most shameful and profane oath.

The allusion to Transfiguration and the farcical pretense of going to Mount Tabor, are both silly and wicked. The penalties are shocking, immoral and blasphemous. No one has a right to execute such penalties nor has any one a right to consent to their execution under any circumstances. To ask God to be a witness to such oaths, and to aid in their execution, is to insult him and to wrong all of his children. May he in his infinite mercy help those ensnared in this trap of the devil to repent and find mercy. H. H. HINMAN.

LITERATURE.

PARTURITION WITHOUT PAIN; A Code of Directions for escaping from the Pinal Curve. Edited by M. L. Holbrook, M. D. Pp. 159. Price $1. M. L. Holbrook, New York.

In spite of the questionable sub-title of this book and the more questionable quotation of Rev. 21: 4, on the title page, it deals with one of the very practical questions of human life, a question of unconscious interest to every one born into the world. Doubtless the dread of pain, coupled with the more dread uncertainty of death, has restrained many women from exercising the holiest function of her physical being, and tempted more to the crime of fœticide. The information given, therefore, by such a work as this is of greatest value. The ten chapters show that painless parturition may be secured by attention to the following points: Moderate healthful exercise, with avoidance of fatigue; a quiet and patient mental condition; agreeable occupation; judicious bathing; fruit diet, and kindness and indulgent treatment by friends. A considerable appendix, full of practical hints and advice, occupies a large part of the book (62 pages), and adds to its popular value.

Voters who wish to be well informed on the leading political issues should get a copy of the "Review of the Anti-Saloon Republican Convention," by S. W. Packard, a Chicago lawyer, who is identified with Christian reform work, and especially with prohibition.

The English Illustrated Magazine for October has well illustrated articles on Cambridge and its celebrated University, "Some less known Towns of Southern Gaul," and "The Spectator's return to Town," which is noticeable for its character drawings of some of the lighter numbers of the Spectator.

In the October number of The Old Testament Student of Morgan Park, Ill., a new contributor, Rev. Dr. Edkins, of Pekin, furnishes a paper on "Primeval Chinese Legends." "New Testament Judaism and its Genesis" by Dr. Schodde and "The Kingdom of God in the Old Testament" by Prof. F. B. Denio, are sure to attract attention. The Notes on the Sunday-school Lessons from the Old Testament point of view are very suggestive. The publishers will send a sample copy free on application.

FREEMASONRY IN CHINA.—It has been known for a long time to travelers in China, says a writer in the Inter Ocean, that there are in that wonderful country, secret societies whose emblems and characters nearly approximate to those of Freemasonry. H. A. Giles, in a recently-published work entitled "Freemasonry in China," quotes several statements of the Chinese ancient bodies which have a Masonic character about them. In London, (at No. 33 Golden Square) is a figure of Confucius wearing a "square" and an apron, and a very fine worked square of "Jude" which must be very old indeed. There is a secret society in China called the "Triad," which, being suspected of antagonism to the reigning dynasty, and as favoring the Wing dynasty, has been suppressed. It has always been supposed that this is akin to Freemasonry. Its catechism, emblems, and teachings are strongly suggestive of universal craft Masonry, and the gradual development of Chinese literature by this and other civilized countries will, we expect, prove clearly that the craft is as is claimed for it, "ancient" in the widest sense of the word. Mr. Giles is Master of Ionic Lodge, No. 1,781, of Amoy, China, under the jurisdiction of Great Britain.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

At last the public mind is relieved of the responsibility of deciding whether or not Secretary Manning will resume his duties. After every one has been pondering and discussing the question for six months, and re-enumerating the reasons why each course should be pursued, Mr. Manning, it is reported, has finally settled the matter by quietly saying that he will return to Washington and to his office in a few days. In physical appearance he seems to be in as good health as he was when he undertook the management of the Treasury Department; and his slight limp is the only sign of his recent illness. Still, as it is feared that the resumption of his duties may bring on another attack (and a second would probably prove fatal,) he will begin his work very gradually, and incur no risks. At first he will confine himself merely to a general supervision of the department. He will attend Cabinet meetings to give the Administration the benefit of his advice, and will leave the burdensome responsibilities of the office to his assistants. At best, it is only a trial, but it is believed that he will remain in the Cabinet until Congress meets, even if he does not stay longer.

The White House is again without a lady at its head. Mrs. Cleveland has been in Buffalo for several days, and will return during the week. The President consoles himself in his loneliness by working hard. He is very busy now, investigating the cases of Federal office holders who have disobeyed the order, directing them not to take any part in political meetings. There have been not a few violations of this rule, and the President, in speaking on the subject, expresses himself with great indignation.

Washington has improved very much during the summer. A force of workmen have been occupied putting the Capitol building and grounds in order ever since Congress adjourned. New trees and shrubs have been planted, and new walks have been laid in the beautiful parks, the American "Champs d'Elysees," that surround the building. The latter has been painted within and without, and now, fresh and beautified, it is almost ready for the reception of our law makers. The smooth green terraces, which formerly surrounded it on three sides, are given place to superb marble porticos, which will add greatly to the imposing effect; and the proposed grand staircase on the west front will be another great improvement. The Capitol, in fact, is turned the wrong way. It was built facing the east, but when Pennsylvania Avenue was stretched out in a northwesterly direction, and the Executive Mansion built at its other end, all the elegant and fashionable homes at once sprung up in that section of the city, towards which the Capitol had ignominiously turned its back. It is intended to improve this condition of affairs by making a majestic staircase and entrance on the west side.

The improvements in other parts of Washington are equally apparent. About one-third of the work on the Potomac Flats has been finished. The Navy Yard is being rapidly transformed into an ordnance foundry. The stairs in the Washington Monument are now completed, so that any one who has enough time, courage, and strength, is at liberty to climb it. It takes about an hour to make the ascent. During the month of September, about three thousand people made the attempt, but not all succeeded in reaching the top. The elevator will be run when Congress makes an appropriation for it.

Secretary Lamar, who has heretofore occupied a flat, has now leased a house on one of the quiet streets of the city. It is a modern, unpretentious looking building, directly across the way from the Japanese legation. This is not the first time the house has been used by a Cabinet officer, as it was here that Secretary of the Treasury, Folger, lived several years ago. The gossips see in this transaction of the Secretary's a further proof of their prophecy that another lady will shortly be added to the Cabinet circle. It is not probable, however that the event will occur very soon.

Mr. Benedict, the new head of the Government Printing Office, when a member of the New York legislature was understood to be hostile to the labor unions and their projects. In the Government establishment he finds that the printers' union has a firm grip, and submits to them by appointing a well known labor agitator to an important position in the establishment. This is understood to indicate his position toward this labor lodge which controls the Government printing and forces the payment from the public funds of a higher rate than is paid elsewhere. Thus is the dark and secret power of the lodge occasionally revealed in its control of affairs at the Capital.

THE HOME.

ON THE HIGHTS.

I stand alone upon the heights of years,
As stood on Sinai's peak of old
The prophet, while as if unrolled
Like pictured scroll the vale appears.

Yet, as stood Moses in that awful gloom
Whence shone Thy word as living fire,
While all his rapt soul did aspire
To Thee, above the darkness of the tomb.

So I—though gazing backward fearfully,
Beholding life's sweet visions fade,
While swiftly falls the gathering shade
Of Age—fear not, since face to face with Thee

My God! who smrest on these heights of years
Nearer than in life's sunny vales;
Whose strength my weakness never fails
To lift from out the dust of mortal fears.

Alone! 'Tis well; for thus this heart of mine
Shall, like the prophets' table, lie
Bared to the light; that only Thy
Dear name be graven there, the love divine.

HOLINESS BY FAITH THE SPECIFIC DISCIPLINE OF THE PREACHER.

While the nature of truth and the moral constitution of man remain as they are, holiness only, holiness by faith can be relied upon as the effective discipline of the successful preacher; without this the minister must be considered as without the specific discipline of his profession. Let ministers be rationally, self-forgetfully enthusiastic in the work of salvation; let love to it be, as with Paul and Whitefield, the dominating principle; night and day let the burden of souls rest on them, while they rest calmly upon Christ and he inspires them, then it is absolutely certain that their ministry would be a perpetual ingathering of souls into the kingdom of Christ.

So far as man's agency is concerned, it is this engrossing earnestness, more than any or all things else, that insures success in the ministry; for it implies, nay, it may be almost said to render certain the co-operating energy of the Holy Ghost. This very earnestness is first the work of that Holy Spirit upon the preacher's soul; and then it becomes the telegraphic battery for generating the divine electricity that is to run along upon the wires of communication with other minds, and to be continually charging them with truth, thrilling with conviction and self-abhorrence; exciting to repentance, faith, love, joy, activity in doing good, and, best of all, insulating them from the world, and making them, while in it, to live above it.

Our need then as ministers is, to become more powerful and perfect dissolving batteries, not fitfully getting out of order like an imperfect telegraph, just at the time when heaven's messages are to be transmitted along, and the most powerful impressions are to be made on waiting minds. But our souls must be always immersed and evolving heaven's own galvanism; at once responsive to every breath of the Spirit, every case of Providence, every intimation of duty, every exigency and voice of the times; and thus affording a fair vehicle for the messages of God to pass on to men. We want more constant immersion of mind in heavenly pursuits and exercises. We want a more self-forgetting engagedness in the angelic work of winning souls to Christ, both in the pulpit and out.—Rev. Henry T. Cheever, in Correspondencies of Faith.

SMOOTH THINGS.

From all those who are comfortable in their present positions, and whose consciences are not responsive to the voice of God; from all those who are in love with wrong and the advantage which it brings, or who are indifferent or unfriendly to the right, and to the crosses and burdens which it imposes, there comes again the ancient cry, "Prophecy not unto us right things; speak unto us smooth things, prophecy deceits." Isa. 30: 10.

But however frequently and importunately this request is urged upon the servants of God, they have ever been obliged to disregard it. There has come a mandate like that which came to Jonah of old, "Preach the preaching that I bid thee." They have been commanded to "diminish not a word;" to speak "not as pleasing men, but God, which trieth the hearts;" and their words must be uttered whether men will hear, or whether they will forbear. Smooth things are not always true things, and true things are frequently far from being smooth. The denunciations of wrong, the rebukes of iniquity, the warnings against evil, the threatenings with which God confronts wickedness, are not "smooth things." The world will love its own, and will pay the expense of proclaiming all the smooth things that it desires to have told; but when the Almighty calls and commissions men, and lays upon them the burden of his word and of his work, and bids them speak to the people and rebuke them for sin, or warn of approaching danger, though their message is a divine one, yet they carry unwelcome tidings; they proclaim rejected and disregarded truths; they speak words which grate harshly on the ears of lovers of pleasure and of sin; and it is because their message is unwelcome that they are so solemnly charged to declare it with fidelity. "The prophet that hath a dream, let him tell a dream; and he that hath my word, let him speak my word faithfully." Jer. 23: 28.

There are giant wrongs which seem to defy correction; there are concealed iniquities which should be exposed and hunted from their hiding-places; there are respectable villains who are unrebuked, and white-washed criminals who walk the land unpunished and unimpeached; and while easy-going and quiet-loving men may say, "Prophecy to us smooth things," the voice of God rings like a clarion in our ears, saying, "Cry aloud, spare not; lift up thy voice like a trumpet, and show my people their transgressions." Isa. 58: 1.

Let the servant of Christ make up his mind once for all, that he bears an unwelcome message, that he is, like the servants of God who have preceded him, a troubler of easy consciences, a disturber of those who seek peace without regard to purity or right, and that a world that hated the Master, will never love the servant whom he sends. Let him settle the matter once for all, that he can never be a friend of the world without being the enemy of God; that if he pleases men he is not the servant of Christ; and that if he would "prophecy smooth things," he may as well resign his commission in the Lord's army, and enter the service of the world at once.—H. L. Hastings.

LUTHER ON PREACHING.

For moving eloquence in the pulpit no one excelled Luther. He not only knew how to preach, but he could tell the secret to others. One defect, he observes, may eclipse numerous gifts in a preacher. "Dr. Justus Jonas has all the good virtues and qualities a man may have; yet merely because he hums and spits, the people cannot bear that good and honest man." Let a preacher stick to his text and not ramble: "A preacher that will speak everything that comes in his mind is like a maid that goes to market, and meeting another maid, makes a stand, and they hold a goose market." He despised the hunger for applause. "Ambition is the rankest poison to the church, when it possesses preachers." "Cursed are all preachers that in the church aim at high and loud things, and neglecting the saving health of the poor unlearned people, seek their own honor and praise, and therewith to please one or two ambitious persons. When I preach, I sink myself deep down. I regard neither doctors nor magistrates, of whom are here in this church above forty; but I have an eye to the multitude of young people, children and servants, of whom are more than two thousand. I preach to these, directing myself to them that have need thereof. Will not the rest hear me? The door stands open unto them; they may begone." "An upright, godly and true preacher should direct his preaching to the poor, simple sort of people, like a mother that stills her child, dandles and plays with it." "When they come to me, to Melancthon, to Dr. Pommer, etc., let them show their cunning, how learned they be: they shall be well put to their trumps. But to sprinkle out Hebrew, Greek and Latin in their public sermons savors merely of show."—Prof. Geo. P. Fisher.

ENTIRE CONSECRATION.

As the earth is but a point compared with the heaven, so are earthly troubles compared with heavenly joys.

Certain Moravian missionaries, in the old times of slavery, went to one of the West India Islands to preach, and found they could not be permitted to teach there unless they themselves became slaves; and they did so—they sold themselves into bondage, never to return, that they might save slaves' souls. We have heard of another pair of holy men who actually submitted to be confined in a lazar-house, that they might save the souls of lepers, knowing as they did that they would never be permitted to come out again; they went there to take the leprosy, and die, if by so doing they might save souls. I have read of one, Thome de Jesu, who went to Barbary amongst the Christian captives, and there lived and died in banishment and bondage, that he might cheer his brethren and preach Jesus to them.—Spurgeon.

"FAITHFUL."

It was a dreary day in late winter. There were wearisome gray clouds overhead, and dull brown, half-melted ridges of snow and ice under foot. In the great iron foundry at M—the men strode to and fro before their forges, bared their swarthy arms to the work, thrust huge glowing bars of metal into the panting fires, and swung their ponderous hammers—clang! clang! clang! The noise of the blows and of the ponderous machinery was so great that talking was impossible. A hoarse direction shouted now and then by the overseer, with gestures of the hand that the workers understood, was all.

At an anvil a little removed from the central uproar stood a solitary man, fashioning a piece of iron into a shape not unlike that of the rubber bands sold by stationers for small parcels; only it was over a foot long, and almost as thick as your wrist. The iron was held tight by a pair of tongs, and was glowing red, the sparks flying in a constant shower as the skillful blows fell, swiftly and surely. The workman himself was a quiet looking man, with tightly set lips; almost sullen, you would have said.

"Well, well," he muttered to himself, turning the hot iron, and commencing upon the other side, "it's the same old story. Pound, pound, from morning till night—no rest, no change, no hope. I'm of no importance in the world—it makes no difference whether I live or die—ah!"

He stopped suddenly, and bent closely over the article he was shaping. You and I would have noticed nothing particular, but this man was evidently puzzled. He struck the iron two or three sharp blows, listening intently to the sound it gave back. Then he frowned, and poised it a moment on the end of his tongs.

The other men were accustomed to laugh at him because he was so particular about his workmanship in little things. Two or three of them glanced at him now, as he stood that instant, undecided.

"Let it go, John," called one of them over his shoulder. "One out of a thousand won't make any difference."

But John had decided. "It's a flaw," he said. "I won't risk it." And, flinging away the iron loop on a heap of refuse metal, he patiently began his work over again, this time completing it, as he had hundreds of others, successfully.

Three years passed away. It was winter again, and the northeast wind, roaring through the sky from the far off forests of Labrador, rolling huge, foaming waves from mid-ocean against the rocky coasts of New England, unroofing houses, uprooting trees, sweeping over lonely lakes; and, joining its cry with the howl of the wolf and the cracking of ice-floes, turned the night into a tumult of darkness and doleful uproar dreadful to hear. On the western tracks of the A. M. & S. railroad, the late express was running at full speed. It had been delayed by the high wind, and the engineer was making up time. Twenty, thirty, thirty-five miles an hour, into the black night, with only a glow from the headlight on the steel rails, a few hundred feet in advance of the locomotive, as it plunged forward faster than ever. The fireman plied his furnace with coal, shovelful after shovelful. Now a few lights, dotting the darkness, from comfortable firesides in some small country village. The engine slackens its pace slightly, shrieks at the station master with his waving lantern, and dashes on at thirty-eight miles an hour. The engineer, with one hand on the polished bar before him, glances alternately at the steam-gauge and the track ahead. The wind is blowing more fiercely than ever, but he knows nothing of that; he thinks only of the hot, bounding, roaring creature on whose back he rides on into the night at forty miles an hour.

The passengers in the train are most of them asleep. There is a baggage and a mail car, in which a few men are at work; but in the Pullman cars behind are over a hundred souls, trustfully awaiting the end of their journey. There are fathers hurrying home to their children; boys and girls with heads upon the rocking pillow, dreaming of fir-trees and lights and bright gifts, for it is just after Christmas.

One of the passengers has a little girl nestling close beside him; her mother left them for Christ's country last week, and now she alone is left to him. As the rails rattle beneath the flying wheels of the train the man becomes uneasy and holds the little girl more tightly. Then he takes out his watch and calculates the speed.

"I wonder"—he says slowly, "I wonder"—Crash—h—h!

Darkness, wild cries, the car dashing furiously over timbers and wreck of rail and platform like a ship upon the rocks; screams, prayers, groans; a terrible sideways lurch and a prolonged creaking of strained iron and wood, above the shrill cries of men, women and children. Then dead, awful stillness.

One by one, the terrified, half-dressed, trembling passengers make their way over the slanting floor of the car, and out through broken doors and windows into the cold night air.

As lights began to flash upon the scene, the bravest hid their faces and turned pale. In the valley, far below, as if they were looking down from a lofty church belfrey, lay the monster of steam and iron which a few moments before was bounding homeward with them in apparent safety and with sure speed. Beside it were heaped the ruins of the mail car. And on the verge of the embankment, leaning dizzily over those awful depths, rested the forward Pullman. What held it back?

The locomotive left the rails and plunged over the embankment, seventy-five feet down to the bottom, turning completely over in its course and dragging the mail car after it. Only one man was killed, though the train was crowded; the forward Pullman would have gone over, after the mail car, had it not been held back by the link which coupled it to the next car.

So the report flew over the wires the next morning, and so you can read it in the newspapers, if you like.

And what of the obscure iron-worker who would not let that iron link pass his hands until it was perfect—a true and honest piece of work? No one knows his name. He will never know in this world how that faithful half-hour saved sixscore human lives. But there is One who knows, and who does not forget the humblest, every-day duty-doing of His children. He who said, "Thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy Lord!"—Congregationalist.

OCTOBER SONG.

When the leaves are ripe and yellow,
When the fields are shrunk and sere,
If thy thoughts are mild and mellow,
Sing, and praise the fading year.
If thy heart is full of groaning,
If thine eyes are near to weep,
Vex not Nature with thy moaning,
When she folds herself to sleep.

All things have their times and seasons,
Nought that lives from change is free;
God is wise: and for good reasons
Birth and growth and death must be.
All things find their fitting places,
High and low, and great and small,
Kings and peopes, creeds and races,
In the wonder of the All.

Breezy hills and leafy mountains,
Chirp of birds, and thunder's roll,
Tinkling rills and gushing fountains,
Powers that spurn weak man's control.
Cradle song and chariot's rattle,
Mighty thoughts that stir the soul,
Throng of business, roar of battle,
All make music in the whole.

Art thou young,—be bold and daring,
Flap thy wing and spur thy pace,
Fruitful labor never sparing,
Where a spade may find a place.
Art thou old—in quiet corner
Live from fretful labor free,
Wise with faithful hand to garner
Life's rich fruitage stored for thee.

And when death comes, ugly spectre,
Spare thy hand the fruitless how;
Bow thy head: the great Director
Wisely willing willed it so.
Death must be: and in the keeping
Of harsh frost all life must lie,
Till God shall please to rouse from sleeping
All from God that may not die!

TEMPERANCE.

THE MODERN SALOON.

[From D. R. Locke (Nashby) on "Prohibition" in North American Review for October.]

It is probable that if the liquor interest had confined itself to the old-fashioned ways of dealing in stimulants, there never would have been any demand for prohibition. In the old days, the spirit or beer shop was established in compliance with an existing demand. Everybody drank, more or less, and so the landlord established his place, and sold to those who came to it of their own will.

The thirty-years-ago sellers of stimulants never made efforts to extend their business; they merely sold to those who came for drink, and who conducted themselves with as much decency as liquor permits, while boozing. Had this continued there never would have been a movement for prohibition that would have had the strength of a straw.

But the nature of the business has changed entirely within thirty years. The introduction of lager beer opened a field for money-making so illimitable as to stimulate the cupidity of the more eager seekers after money.

The new drink which the German brewers introduced made rapid progress in public favor. The temperance advocates of that day looked upon it without hostility, for they preferred that men should drink the mild lager rather than the more fiery whisky or rum. Therefore its use was rather encouraged than discouraged.

The brewers saw in this their opportunity. They built great breweries, some of them with a capacity going a long way up into the hundreds of thousands of barrels per annum, which was not to be wondered at, as the profit on each barrel was from $1.50 to $2.

Then came the very important question, how was this great volume of beer to be sold? These acute men were not long in solving that problem. They took their good hard dollars and established everywhere what is now known as the "beer saloon." They found them conscienceless creatures, with neither morals nor decency, who never had money enough to pay for a meal of victuals, hang-dog fellows with long mustaches, and trousers chewed off at the heels, with dirty neckties to hide still more dirty shirts, paper-collar twice turned abominations, who would be thieves but for the lack of courage, the fellows who crawl between heaven and earth, living, the good Lord who permits them only knows how. They took this class of persons and rented for them each a room or two, and put in a counter, some round pine tables and cheap chairs; they supplemented a cheap pool-table and a few packs of cards, and put in behind the bar a keg of beer, a few bottles of whisky, and some glasses, and set them to work, perfectly equipped devil's missionaries.

How could they afford to trust this property with such men? Nothing could be more safe. They did not sell it—it remained their property, all there was of it. The keeper was compelled to sign an agreement to sell so many kegs of beer a day, as the condition of enjoying the use of the place. Of course, the beer had to be paid for on delivery, so all the capital required was the price of one small keg, which amounted to from $2 to $2.50. In most cases the poor wretch did not have this trifling amount, and the brewer was forced to give him the first keg on credit. But as there are one hundred glasses of beer in a quarter barrel, and as each glass brings five cents, the debt was always a safe one.

Now comes the point. This poor devil, this tool of the brewer, has to sell so much beer a day to keep his place. He has to pay the rent of the "saloon," for the brewer either owns it or is responsible for it, and also he must pay for so much beer per diem.

This new system changed the entire nature of the business. The retailer is no longer the quiet man engaged in a half disreputable business (for, in its best estate, liquor selling has never been counted a respectable trade), but he is a missionary for the diffusion of alcohol, and an urgent, indefatigable fastener of the alcoholic appetite upon just as many as he can get his unclean hands upon. He goes out in search of customers, and by his efforts liquor is no longer a passive nuisance, but an active, aggressive evil.

How does he do it? He has a thousand ways. He makes his rooms as pleasant as possible; he takes the daily newspapers, which are free to his customers; he hangs cheap but attractive pictures upon his walls—always of a demoralizing nature, for his business is to demoralize; he provides games of chance and skill for his customers, the stake being always beer; he invites workmen to sit in his place, where there is a warm stove in the winter, and artificially cooled air in the summer; he spreads a cheap lunch which is free to all comers, the viands being invariably thirst-provoking, and all this sort of thing.

Now the workman who comes into this place may have before, on occasion, taken a glass of beer, when he happened to be in the way of it, but he had no especial appetite for it, and no regular craving. Before the opening of this place in his neighborhood, he went to his home sober, and spent his evenings with his family, as a decent workman should, and there was always bread and meat in his larder, and his wife and children were decently and comfortably clad. For the purpose of meeting his mates and discussing the current topics of the day, and for the unhealthy pleasure of playing games, he becomes very quickly habituated to frequenting the saloon, and, of course, takes his glass of beer. He must do this, for he is too proud to enjoy the facilities of the place without making some return. Sociability being the chief attraction, he is invited to drink by the other frequenters, his sense of liberality compels him to reciprocate, and so he, who dropped in for one glass, goes out with a dozen under his belt, comfortably drunk. He didn't mean to, but custom, the custom of the place, most artfully devised, forced him into it. He goes home drunk every night, after a month or two of it.

The effect of the alcohol poison is not well enough understood. No man can touch it without fastening upon himself a craving for more. This is a physiological law which is fixed and certain. The man who comes to stopping at a place of this kind every night and taking one glass, within a week finds a half-dozen necessary. And the seller helps him along the downward road as rapidly as possible. There is always upon the counter a plate of pickled codfish, or red herrings cut into proper lengths, or pretzels covered with salt, all thirst-provokers, and they actually put salt into the beer, that the desire for the pleasant liquor may be increased. Beer becomes a necessity to him before he is aware of it, and his fate is fixed. The seller can count upon so much a day from him as certainly as though he had it in his till.

And this is not all, by any means. Lager-beer originally contained only three or four per cent. of alcohol, but it now contains ten and twelve per cent. The original beer did not make drunkards fast enough. It took too long a time to fix the habit so as to make the victim profitable. Hence they threw in glucose to make more alcohol, and all sorts of cheap drugs of the maddening kind, that the drinker might be bound hand and foot, and put into their possession in an absolutely helpless condition as soon as possible. It was not enough to make a "beer-drinker of him—to get the largest profit it became necessary to make a drunkard of him. It resulted as anticipated. The beer-drunkard is the worst drunkard in the world, and his chains are the heaviest and strongest.

A more infernal infernalism was never devised, and if it does not call for some sort of law nothing does.

But it does not stop here. Men are not the only victims. There are boys in the neighborhood, striplings from thirteen to sixteen. The agent of the brewers arranges his trap for them. They have no money, so he gives them credit. He has a room for them secure from observation, in which they may play cards, or pool, or other forms of billiards; all for beer, of course.

When the account swells to a sufficient amount he demands payment. The alarmed boy cannot pay. He frightens him with threats of appealing to his parents, and when the boy is sufficiently ground down, he suggests that his mother has linen, his elder brother a revolver, his father books, and his sister jewelry, and he gives him the name of a pawnbroker who will advance him all the money he wants on articles of this kind. The frightened boy jumps at this easy escape, goods are missed from the house, servant girls are discharged for theft, and the thing goes on until the boy becomes a confirmed thief, and so bold in his operations that discovery is made.

Whether he finally gets to the House of Correction or not, he is a beer-sodden wreck before he is eighteen, and is the bond-slave of the drink-fiend forever.

The vast brewing establishments of Milwaukee, Cincinnati, Toledo and Rochester have millions invested in this business, and their success in the introduction of their beer may be measured by their wealth. They are the richest corporations in the country, and no instances are known where, with fair business management, they have not amassed enormous fortunes.

They keep energetic men traveling all the time establishing saloons. In the city of Toledo, with 90,000 population, they have 800, and the number is constantly and rapidly increasing. A corporation cannot break ground in the suburbs for a factory, that the brewer's agent is not there to purchase a lot upon which to erect a saloon, and, the moment an addition to the city is platted, a saloon is the first building that goes up. They know every workman, and the wages he gets, and they demand their share of it, and generally get it.

Did they confine their operation to the cities, it would not be so bad, but they do not. They have invaded the country, and there is scarcely a hamlet or cross-roads in which they are not represented. With millions of capital, with an energy that is wonderful, with all the zeal that cupidity inspires and feeds, they are everywhere. There is not a family that they do not threaten, nor one that is outside their influence.

It is this aggressive feature of the trade which has awakened a demand for the interposition of the law to prohibit, instead of restraining. Heavy taxation of the traffic has no effect, for the profits of the business are so great that no taxation has ever been reached that they could not laugh at. The profit on beer is enormous, and they have a safeguard against taxation in this, that they make their own prices and they have possession of their customers. Should a tax upon beer be made so great that the seller should be compelled to double the price, it would make no difference in sales to his regular customers. They must and will have it.

"Back and side go bare, go bare,
And hand and foot go cold,
But belly, God send thee good ale enough,
Whether it be new or old."

This is as true as it was in the days when the song was written.

The wide-spread misery caused by this wholesale poisoning of the masses, the poverty, degradation, ignorance, crime and disease it entails, the increased taxation it has caused, have alarmed the general public, and made some action against it absolutely necessary. In five States, Maine, Iowa, Kansas, Minnesota, and Georgia, prohibition is an accomplished fact, and the sentiment in favor of it is rapidly spreading.

There is no doubt in the mind of anybody that, could the trade in alcoholic stimulants be wiped out entirely, the world would be better for it. No one doubts this, and no one questions it. The liquor seller himself admits it, when what sense of decency is left in him prompts him to remove his own children as far from the business which he follows as possible.

The business is, in and of itself, an organized hunt after weak men and children. If a druggist should entice boys into his store and feed them with opium, that, after the habit was fixed, he might make money by selling them the drug, there would be no question as to what the community would do with him. If there should be found no law upon the statute books to meet his case, one would be made immediately. There would be no talk of "personal liberty" in such a case. Wherein is the difference? The beer-shop keeper makes it his business to entice boys and weak men into his place and lures them on to an appetite more destructive than opium.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—The Interior says that "of the eighteen or twenty members of the Chinese Young Men's Christian Association connected with the Chinese Mission of the Third Presbyterian church, Chicago, nine are already engaged in studies preparatory to missionary work among their countrymen, and more are to follow."

—Rev. Albert Ethridge, for some time pastor of the Independent church, Streator, has been commissioned by the Illinois Home Missionary Society as State Evangelist. He began his labors Oct. 1st, with the church in Rantoul, of which J. L. Fonda is pastor.

—The Congregational church in Fresno, California, where there is an Armenian colony from Turkey, has just enjoyed a good work of grace, in which those foreigners participated, and quite a number of them as well as others will join the church. Some forty Armenians were already members. There is also a considerable United Presbyterian colony near Fresno.

—The receipts of the American Board for the year now closed are, from donations, $384,247, as against $387,013 the preceding year; from legacies, $107,190, as against $121,478, being a total of $491,438 this year, $508,491 last year. It will be seen that of this $17,000 falling off, $14,000 is in the legacies, always an uncertain quantity. There is to be placed against the remaining $3,000, the fact that the donations of last year were swelled at the last moment by an extraordinary gift from Dr. Cheever of $19,000. From all of which it appears the regular gifts from the churches are an increase on those of the preceding year. The following is a summary of the work of the Board for the past year, as given by Secretary Clark at Des Moines: "The Gospel has been preached by missionaries and native preachers in nine hundred different cities, towns and villages in various parts of the globe; the number of churches has increased from 303 to 310, to which 3,481 members were reported as added on confession of faith—a larger number than in any previous year since the great gathering at the Sandwich Islands; from 4,000 to 5,000 youth are gathered into high schools, seminaries and training classes, besides 32,000 children in 856 common schools, and more than 15,000,000 pages of educational and religious literature have been put into circulation in twenty-six different languages."

—There are thirty-two Presbyterian Sunday-schools in the United States having more than 1,000 scholars each. The largest one is at Throop Avenue church, Brooklyn, N. Y., with a membership of 2,777.

—The last report of the International Committee of the Young Men's Christian Association makes the startling assertion that 75 per cent of the young men of this country are never seen inside of any church; that only 15 per cent of them can be called regular church goers, and that but 5 per cent are communicants.

—At Mr. Moody's school in Northfield, there are between 300 and 400 young men now preparing for missionary work, many of whom will be stationed in Chicago to carry on this enterprise of evangelization.—Christian at Work.

—In October Mr. Moody will return to Chicago, and devote three months to establishing permanent missions throughout the city on the plan of the McAll Mission in Paris. In these missions services are to be held every evening, and will be made self-supporting if possible.

—The Central Association of Free Baptists of New York has adopted, unanimously, resolutions favoring union between the Free Baptists and the Christians of New York, Pennsylvania and New Jersey. The New York State Association will act upon the resolutions this week.

—The East Pennsylvania Evangelical Lutheran Synod, in session at Reading, the other day, resolved not to receive nor retain hereafter as beneficiary any young man who indulges in the use of tobacco in any form. The Synod educates a number of young men yearly for the ministry at the Pennsylvania College, at Gettysburg.

—The Wesleyans of Great Britain spend $100,000 yearly in building chapels in London, and the attendance upon Methodist worship has increased by 56 per cent in twenty years.

—According to the estimate of the Dean of Westminster, one-fifth of the whole population of England and Wales are in Sunday-schools; that there are 600,000 teachers and 5,200,000 scholars.

—The Provincial Synod of the Church of England in Canada, after fully discussing the educational question, decided that members of the Synod should do everything in their power to influence the Legislatures of the various Provinces to authorize the reading of the Scriptures in the public schools.

—Mr. Henry Varley, the evangelist, and Mr. Joseph Huntington (brother of the late Bishop Huntington, who was killed in October last while prosecuting mission work in Central Africa) have sailed from England for Cape Town, with a view of conducting a special mission there for a few months.

—At the General Conference of the Canada Methodist church just held at Toronto, it was recommended that the Conference ordain that non-alcoholic wine be used in the sacrament of the Lord's Supper; that juvenile temperance societies be organized in all the congregations and that a day be set apart in each year, known as Temperance Sunday, which should be entirely devoted to temperance questions.

—The native Christian communicants in India are estimated at 528,000, and their numbers are growing at an increasing ratio.

—The London Missionary Society is about to withdraw from Tahiti. The French Protestants are carrying on the work which that society has sustained.

—In ten years, more than 30,000 people embraced Christianity in the Samoan Islands. It is thought that there are not more than twenty houses in the whole group where there is not a Bible and family worship.

—A Braham is said to have written to a missionary: "We are finding you out. You are not as good as your Book. If your people were only as good as your Book, you would conquer India for Christ in five years."

—It is probable that the communicants and adherents won to Christianity from the actual heathenism of to-day, by all the missionary organizations maintained by the Christian world, are about four millions.

—Mr. Knowles, a devoted evangelist in India, tells of a great fair, at which 22,000 victims used to be sacrificed in a few days, which will soon lose its sacrificial character altogether, through the preaching of the Gospel.

—Rev. G. H. Rouse, of the English Baptist Mission at Calcutta, says that if the same rate of progress is made by Protestantism in India as during the past century, India will be Christianized, in the sense that England is, in one hundred and eight years.

—During the past twelve years the number of Christian converts in Japan has increased from 150 to 10,000.

—The Christian community in India is increasing at the rate of $8\frac{1}{2}$ per cent a year, and therefore doubles every twelve years.

—A Chinese Young Men's Christian Association building has been erected in Honolulu at a cost of $5,000. About $2,000 was contributed by the Chinese themselves.

—The sad intelligence comes from London by cable that the young King of Uganda has put to death all the converts of the Protestant and Catholic missions, and that the missionaries are in great peril. The King is more cruel than his father even, who had intervals of friendliness, and who never proceeded to extremities in his worst moments. The mission of the Church Society had prospered greatly in the past two or three years, notwithstanding the great difficulties the missionaries labored under, and many converts had been won, among them members of the royal family. Quite a number of the boys had been taught to read and in industrial arts, and a flourishing community might soon have been gathered in Rubaga, if the King had been tolerant. The last published letter from the missionaries of the Church Society bears date January 31st last. It was from the Rev. R. P. Ashe, and shows how the knowledge of Christianity was spreading among the people. A page of the King's had brought about the conversion of his mother, grandmother and little sister, and they had been received into a company presided over by one Zacharia. A chief was in charge of another company. There were also several other teachers who were working very quietly. The missionaries dared not bring the converts together. On the 17th, however, a company of forty-two had communed. At that moment the King was inclined to be gracious, and had given Mr. Mackay two loads of cowries.—Independent.

HOME HINTS.

CLEANING OUT WASTE PIPES.

The annoyance arising from the stoppage of waste pipes in country houses, although very great, is but a small matter compared with dangers which may follow obstructed pipes. The "sewer gas," about which so much has been written and which is so justly dreaded, is not as many suppose the exclusive product of the sewer. Indeed, the foulest, most dangerous and deadly gases are not found in the sewers themselves, but in the unventilated waste pipes and those which are in process of being clogged by the foul matters passing through them. Any obstructions in the soil or waste pipes are therefore doubly dangerous, because it may produce an inflow of foul gas into the pipe, even though the entrance to the sewer itself has been entirely cut off.

The question is how to get rid of the accumulations in pipes partly stopped or already closed. Digging up and cleaning out is a costly remedy, often ineffectual by reason of careless workmen. The second is the plumber's force pump, which is usually only a temporary relief. In pipes leading from the house to the cesspool there is a constant accumulation of grease. This enters as a liquid and hardens as the water cools, and is deposited on the bottom and sides of the pipes. As these accumulations increase, the waterway is gradually contracted, till the pipe is closed.

When the pipe is entirely stopped, or allows the water to flow away by drops only, proceed thus: Empty the pipe down to the trap, or as far as practicable, by "mopping up" with a cloth. If water flows very slowly, begin when the pipe has at last emptied itself. Fill the pipe up with potash, crowding it in with a stick. Then pour hot water upon it in a small stream, stopping as soon as the pipe appears to be filled. As the potash dissolves and disappears, add more water. At night a little heap of potash may be placed over the hole and water enough poured on so that a supply of strong lye will flow into the pipe during the night. Pipes that have been stopped for months may be cleaned out by this method, though it may call for three or four pounds of potash. The crudest kind, however, appears to act as well as the best. If the pipe is partially obstructed, a lump of crude potash should be placed where water will drip slowly upon it and so reach the pipe. It is also well to fill the upper part of the pipe with the potash as before, and allow hot water to trickle upon it. Soda and potash are both used for the purpose of removing greasy obstructions, and the usual method of application is to form a strong lye and pour it into the pipe. It is better to put the potash into the pipe, because the water which it contains, instead of diluting, helps to form the lye. As water comes in contact with the potash it becomes hot thus aiding in dissolving the grease. Potash, in combination with grease, forms a "soft" or liquid soap, which easily flows away, while the soda makes a hard soap, which, if not dissolved in water, would in itself obstruct the pipe.

When a pipe is once fairly cleaned out, the potash should be used from time to time in order to dissolve the greasy deposits as they form, and carry them forward to the cess pool or sewer. The potash is very valuable for this purpose, because, in addition to its grease-solving powers, it is exceedingly destructive to all animal and most vegetable matters. The most dangerous and deadly gases appear to come from urinals and wash basin pipes, these, in many cases, seeming to be more foul than those from water closets. The decay of the soap and animal matter washed from the skin appears to be the sources of the gases. The potash will be effective in keeping these pipes clear, and in this way may lessen the dangers. — A correspondent in the American Artisan.

TYPHOID FEVER AND THE COUNTRY.—The Christian Guardian says concerning this disease, that, "according to a recently published volume of vital statistics in the United States, typhoid fever in the fifty largest cities in this country is the cause of 16.7 in every 1,000 deaths from specified causes, while it causes twice that number outside the city. This goes to show that typhoid is not so much a disease of cities and places of general water supply as of country districts where little attention is paid to sanitary matters. The immediate surroundings of many village homes, healthful in most respects, are in others directly against the plainest sanitary rules. Country life can never be what it is represented to be until more attention is paid to the healthful arrangement of homes.

LODGE NOTES.

It is reported that there are 1,032 "Sublime Princes of the Royal Secret" or Freemasons of the 32nd degree in this country.

The reports of the General Secretary of the Knights of Labor, read at the convention in Richmond, show that the membership of the Knights of Labor in good standing is 1,300,000.

The Grand Lodge of Illinois Masons which met in the Second Regiment Armory in Chicago last week reported 40,203 members of the order in the State. This is a loss of nearly one-tenth since the report of J. H. Drummond of Maine in 1884.

A correspondent of the Mystic Circle of this city says of the late Odd-fellow meeting in Boston: "It is a matter of profound astonishment that the voice of protest has not been raised in the Sovereign Grand Lodge against legislation that can not fail, in time, to seriously embarrass the progress of Odd-fellowship, and wean and alienate from the order many of its valuable members. In joining Odd-fellowship is one required to barter away his manhood? The Sovereign Grand Lodge has adopted a form of application for membership in the order that not only violates State law, but is, also, in direct contradiction of the Ritual's most solemn assurance to the candidate."

The New York Grand Lodge I. O. G. T. has had its 22nd annual session. It had a good time as usual and resolved the usual amount of twaddle of the order, that it is a social and educational (?) rather than a political institution. It is about the 1146th time that this discovery has been made. It also demands that while members shall do as they please, they shall vote against licensing the traffic through the selection of Excise Commissioners; and demands of the Legislature a constitutional amendment. It also went through the gigantic game of thanking the 53 members of the New York Assembly who played the hypocritical game of voting so as to almost pass the submission of a prohibition amendment, making sure at the same time that it should not pass. Thirty-five years of education ought to have developed a prohibition organization. — Los Angeles Centinel.

The admission Tuesday night of Farrell, the colored New York delegate to the Knights of Labor convention, to the orchestra circle of a Richmond theatre has caused the bitterest feeling among Virginians, and many of the local knights threaten to abandon Mr. Powderly's order and join an organization that is sworn to oppose the Knights of Labor.

NATIONAL SUICIDE,
AND
ITS PREVENTION.

BY OSCAR F. LUMBY, PH. D.

Prof. Lumby's book, "National Suicide and Its Remedy," will be read with profit even by those who do not accept its doctrine, that taking interest for money loaned, one or more percent, is sin, taking something for nothing. For, as Goldsmith said of his Vicar of Wakefield,

"Lenny his fallings lean to virtue's side.

—Cynure.

Dr. Lumby is a man of ideas and never fails to make his readers understand just what they are. Every sentiment he writes has such an air of honesty that it will in a measure disarm those who read to criticize. It is a good book to set people to thinking, whether they believe his theories or not. The book is well worth a careful reading and study. — Inter Ocean.

On all the points named they differ radically from those which prevail in the organization of society. Either they are true or false. It is a curious fact that all of them have been stigmatized as crazy, and yet nearly all of them have been for some years steadily gaining the adherence of men of intellectual ability. — Times.

THE GREGORY, Their Sermons;
THE STUDENT, His Lessons;
THE BUSINESS MAN, Items of Business.

The author of this work was put to the severest public test, a few days ago by reporters of the leading Chicago daily papers. The commendatory notices which appeared the following day showed how well he stood the test:

"The author, an old man, claims to have a memory more to be trusted by training under this system than even while he was young.—CHICAGO INTER-OCEAN.

We cordially commend it to all persons of falling memory as the best book obtainable on that subject.

Most ingenious; enables any one, who familiarizes himself with the system, to carry an immense mass of digested information, ready for production on demand. By experiment we have tested the author's memory, and, and been moved by them to wonder.—ADVANCE.

HOURS with the BIBLE

"A work beyond Criticism."—The Churchman, New York.

HOURS with the BIBLE, or the Scriptures in the Light of Modern Discovery and Knowledge. By CUNNINGHAM GEIKIE, D. D. In six vols., 12mo, Brevier type, leaded. With many illustrations and notes. Price per volume, in cloth, 60c.; half Morocco, marbled edges, 90c.

The volumes are as follows, each complete in itself, and sold separately:

Volume I. From Creation to the Patriarchs. New Ready.

" II. From Moses to Judges. Ready November 1.

" III. From Samson to Solomon. Ready November 25.

" IV. From Rehobah to Hezekiah. Ready December 25.

" V. From Manasseh to Zedekiah. Ready January 15.

" VI. From the Exile to Malachi. (Completion.) Ready February 15.

DR. GEIKIE has won a place in modern religious literature that is almost unrivaled. For profundity of scholarship, grace and beauty of literary style, eloquence and power of presentation of religious truth, and graphic, entertaining statement of the facts of science and of history, he is, in popular estimation, unequalled.

"It meets a real need."—Pacific Baptist.

"A perfect encyclopedia on Old Testament facts and teachings."—Baptist Weekly.

"This work ought to be on the shelf of every man who professes to be a searcher after truth."—Old Testament Student.

"A work of comprehensive scope, excellent workmanship, and real moving power."—the hama Baptist.

GEIKIE'S "Life and Words of Christ" had sold probably not less than 750,000 copies in this country. It deserves to sell by the million. Its evolution in price from $8.00 to 50 cents (I now publish an improved edition at 60 cents) was one of the early notable achievements of The Literary Revolution. The extraordinary merits and wide popularity of this work has naturally attracted attention to Dr. Geikie's other writings, and in response to a very great popular demand I have decided to undertake the publication of "Hours with the Bible."

Two Offers. With a view to securing (upon their merits), promptly, the immense sale that will warrant the low cost, I offer to send Vol. I, post-paid, for the nominal price of 40 CENTS. Or, for $2.80, received on or before November 1, 1886, I will send, as issued, the entire set of six volumes. FARM NOTES.

WHY SEEDS FAIL—KEEPING THEM.

The proper keeping of seeds has much to do with their germination. While there are many seeds of perennials, that should be sown as soon as ripe, it is different with annuals and biennials. The carrot, parsnip and most other garden vegetables are in an unnatural condition. Cultivation has caused these to produce roots many times larger, and much more succulent than in their wild state. The seeds of these, when self-sown as soon as ripe, produce degenerate plants, which have reverted to the natural state, and are no longer useful. In the experiments of Prof. Buckman, and M. Vilmoren, on the improvement of the carrot, radish, etc., from the degenerate forms, known as weeds, it was found that keeping the seeds dry during the winter and sowing them in spring was an important agent in restoring these plants to their useful condition. Rest, suspended growth for a time, has an important influence in keeping such plants in the artificial condition produced by cultivation. The manner in which seeds are kept during the winter has much to do with their value at sowing time. We should keep in mind the fact, that seeds are not a collection of fragments of vegetable matter, like a lot of shoe pegs. They really contain living plants—living, but in a state of suspended animation—dormant.

Seeds kept in closely stoppered bottles often fail. The ordinary method of keeping them in paper bags for small quantities and in sacks of coarse fabric for large ones, is found to be the best, as it secures dryness, and does not entirely exclude the air. The exposure to a high temperature for a long time, or to a very low one, is injurious. The most suitable temperature is just above the freezing point, or about forty degrees. An inner closet or room, which is not heated, will be better than a warm dwelling room or kitchen. The number of years that seeds contain their germinating power, varies greatly. Parsnip seed will not usually grow after the first year, while seeds of cucumber and others of that family are good for ten years and more. With the exception of parsnip, all other vegetable seeds, if well kept, are good at the end of two or three years.—American Agriculturist.

STUMBLING HORSES.—The Pittsburgh Stockman, in a recent issue, says: "Some good horses are addicted to stumbling while walking or moving in a slow trot. A well versed veterinarian states that there are two causes that would tend to produce this faulty action; one, a general weakness in the muscular system, such as would be noticed in a tired horse; the other, a weakness of the exterior muscles of the leg, brought about by carrying too much weight on the toe. 'To effect a cure,' he adds, 'lighten the weight of each front shoe about four ounces; have the toe of the shoe made of steel instead of iron, it will wear longer; have it rounded off about the same as it would be when one-third worn out, in order to prevent tripping; allow one week's rest; have the legs showered for a few minutes at a time with cold water through a hose, in order to create a spray, then rub dry, briskly, from the chest down to the foot. Give walking exercises daily during this week for about an hour twice a day. When you commence driving again omit the slow jog; either walk or send him along at a sharp trot for a mile or two, then walk away, but do not speed for at least several weeks. By this means the habit of stumbling from either of the above causes will be pretty well overcome.'"

COAL ASHES FOR HEAVY CLAY SOILS.

Those having soils of this kind should procure all the coal ashes they can get, and spread them over the land quite thickly. There is nothing that lightens and pulverizes the soil like them. Sand is recommended for such soils, but unless put on in very large quantities it rather hardens the soil, more especially at the surface, as after heavy rains the sand and clay run together, forming a sort of hard mortar.

There is probably not much nutritive quality in coal ashes, but as there is always abundance in these heavy soils which the roots of plants cannot reach, owing to their compactness, the ashes disintegrate the clay, and let the roots penetrate everywhere, doubling the capacity of the ground for plant-food.—Ex.

ONE HUNDRED AND THIRTEEN MILES OF ORGANS.—In numbering the organs of their manufacture, Mason & Hamlin have reached No. 160,000. Arranged in a line these would reach one hundred and thirteen miles, or would fence the railroad on one side from the Grand Central Station in New York, to within twenty miles of Springfield, Mass. Not only does this show the great popularity of American organs, but it illustrates what was declared by James Parton to be a general fact, that he who makes the best article in his line always has the greatest success.

We understand that the Mason and Hamlin Company's new Upright Piano is now commanding a large sale, and is, in every way, up to the standard of their unrivaled organs. We predict a large success for this piano, which is constructed on a new system, said to be a decided advance over the prevailing wrest-pin system.—Boston Journal.

ALL-NIGHT INHALATION!

"A positive revolution in the treatment of Air-Passage Diseases of the Nose, Throat, and Lungs, and, for the purpose designed, as valuable a discovery as vaccination."

THE PILLOW-INHALER.

A Speedy, Positive and Permanent Cure for Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Chronic Consumption.

It is a hair pillow, with reservoirs of evaporating liquid, the fumes or vapors of which are inhaled all night long, without sleeping as usual, and without any discomfort. It is used only at night, and is placed perfectly safe on the most delicate. There is no stomach-aching, douching or sufficing; but just as a smoky lamp will leave a deposit on a whitened wall so the PILLOW-INHALER, for eight hours at a time, spreads a powerful healing balm or salve on the inflamed inner coating of the diseased air-passages, from the nostrils to the bottom of the lungs, and hence into the blood.

Thus, Catarrh, Inflamed, throat-tubed, inflamed, throat-tubed, for a few minutes a day, sometimes cured. Think of eight hours constant action, on the same principle, but intensified a hundred-fold! It is not as pipes or tubes. The medicine is breathed in, not swallowed, and goes right to the diseased parts.

How, R. L. HENNER, Collector of the Port of New York, says: "I take pleasure in stating that the use of the Inhaler has given great relief and relief to my personal health, to my wife, who has been a great sufferer from Bronchitis and Catarrh of the Throat, and to my children. I recommend its use to all persons afflicted with such malady."

DR. L. HENNER, 38 West 46th St., New York. MR. H. O. TAYLOR, 50 Bay St., Chicago, Ill., says: "I suffered from Catarrh of the Throat, and was unable to sleep at night. I bought a PILLOW-INHALER, and since using it my cough has gone, my lungs are no longer weak and sore, and I am no longer coughed. I have been cured."

During the six years of its existence the PILLOW-INHALER has cured cases of Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Consumption, that have been more like miracles than the usual treatment of disease. It is not expensive, and is within the reach of every one. Send for Explanatory Pamphlet and Testimonials, free.

The Christian's Secret

A Happy Life.

28th THOUSAND.

Baptist Commendation.

"We are delighted with this book. It reaches to the very core of Christian experience, and is as interestingly experimental in its teachings. It meets the needs of the millions of converts who are struggling with the bread and water of life, but whose efforts result only in alternate failure and victory. The author, without claiming to be a theologian, sends out the results of a happy and rich experience to help others into a happy Christian life."—Baptist Weekly.

Presbyterian Endorsement.

"The book is so truly and reverently devout in its spirit that it discards criticism. It contains so much that is sound and practical, so much that, if heeded, will make our lives better, happier and more useful; that the intelligent reader who really wishes to lead a life 'hid with Christ in God' can scarcely fail to derive profit from its perusal."—Interior.

Methodist Word of Praise.

"We have not for years read a book with more delight and profit. It is not a theological book. No effort is made to change the theological views of anyone. The author has a rich experience, and tells it in a plain and delightful manner."—Christian Advocate.

United Brethren's Approval.

"We have seldom met with a more interesting volume, abounding throughout with apt illustrations; we have failed to find a dry line from title-page to title-page."—Religious Telescope.

Congregational Comment.

"It contains much clear, pungent, reasoning and interesting incident. It is a practical and experimental treatise on the work of the soul, and is worthy of universal circulation."—Church Union.

The Indian conference at Lake Mohonk, New York, last week, developed a great unanimity, among those who have studied the question, in favor of making the Indian a self-supporting citizen in the shortest and kindest possible way. Senator Dawes, of Mass., urged this in his address as a short and effectual remedy for the endless trouble about reservations, treaty-breaking, agencies, etc. The work of the Indian schools, especially of Hampton, Virginia, had only approval, and it was urged that the four hundred Apaches lately removed to Florida, have an urgent claim for this work as three-fourths of the number are women and children. An interesting part of the Indian question is the settlement of the claims for depredations which now number some 4,000, involving an aggregate of $15,000,000.

The Chicago Stock Yards strike is no nearer settlement than a week ago. Some 20,000 men have left their work in the pork-packing establishments at the command of their leaders, and are in idleness, though probably against the will of four-fifths of their number. The Knights of Labor representatives in their negotiations have found the packers firm in their demand for a day of ten hours. The leaders of the men as firmly insist that this shall not be. They blame the Armour brothers for the strike and have ordered the men to leave the beef-packing house of that firm. Other beef houses are unmolested. This discrimination, made without good reason, has aggravated the case. The Armours are bringing in new men, though the threats of the strikers are deep, and except for a strong armed guard of Pinkerton police there would doubtless be bloody rioting. The end is yet a matter of speculation. The labor lodge threatens a boycott on the Armours, though the boast of the order is that it is against such a measure. One consideration which seems to be lost sight of by the men is that they are attempting to force an eight-hour rule here and nowhere else; the effect of which must be to destroy the packing business in Chicago, and with it their own hope of employment.

LATER.—Monday evening the report that the strike would be raised was cheerfully heard about the Stock Yards. The ten-hour rule was accepted by the men, who were all anxious to return to work before the engagement of new hands should shut them out for the season.

The Knights of Labor General Assembly at Richmond will not complete their work until sometime this week, when a general review of the meeting will be given. Last Friday the officers elect, led by Powderly, formally pledged themselves to total abstinence from intoxicating liquors during their two year's term. This will be hailed by some of the short-sighted temperance journals as a notable event, and they will dilate upon this secret order as a great temperance society. It is certainly an occurrence of singular interest, and shows to what a place of popularity the prohibitory movement has been carried. But at the same time it reveals the real moral weakness of this order. Why should these men not have pledged themselves forever to temperance? why not the whole body as well as the few? and why do they stop at temperance? If they are sincere in their profession of moral reform there need be no hesitation in this matter. Suppose the same pledge should be asked of the officers of the National Council or the Episcopal Convention, would there not be such an air of hypocrisy in the performance that honest men would repudiate such churchmen? We rejoice in the pledge, but it is far from proving that the Knights of Labor care for temperance as a virtue.

The three great religious conventions, the Rock River Methodist Episcopal Conference, the Episcopal Church Convention, and the Congregational National Council have just held, or are holding, their meetings in Chicago and vicinity, and all have felt it necessary to say something upon the reform now most on the tongues of people—the temperance issue. The Episcopalians gave up an evening to a public meeting in Farwell Hall, but it must be said with regret that Mr. Robert Graham, secretary of the Church Temperance Society, lifted up his voice for the delusion of high license. Other speakers asked modestly for prohibition. The Congregationalists adopted a brief paper which only expressed sympathy with the workers in the temperance reform, hoping they may lessen the evils of the liquor traffic and finally secure its overthrow. The Methodists, however, in their meeting at Evanston, were more filled with the spirit of the battle against the saloon. It was surmised by some that their strong men would ask for an endorsement of the Prohibition party, and as this would have been fought by Dr. Hatfield and his sympathizers, much interest was manifested in the result. The report finally presented was adopted with a unanimous cheer. The report is long and this is the exalted tone which it rings out at the end: "While we deem it unwise as a conference to endorse any political organizations, we do heartily urge all patriotic and Christian citizens to condemn by their ballots all partizan subservience to the liquor power, and to vote for only such men and measures as will effectually support the principle of immediate and complete prohibition."

In a brief but very suggestive note respecting the secret societies of England, Rev. John Boyes, our correspondent in that country says: "Apart from Fenian escapades there is not much of a secret nature that seriously affects the condition of the churches or nation. Freemasonry in this country seems a kind of aristocratic plaything, very few of the middle classes knowing or caring about it, and the working classes seem to have nothing whatever to do with it. You may live here for years together amid the busiest communities and never even hear the name mentioned, unless you keep making inquiries, and very rarely will you find any one that either knows or cares about it. The last half century has witnessed a terrible decadence in Freemasonry and kindred associations. Trades unions seem to be altogether another thing, and to be seeking by open and legal methods the attainment of their respective objects."

THE SITUATION IN MASSACHUSETTS.

BY REV. H. T. CHEEVER.

I had it lately in this city from the senior editor of the Cynosure, while on his Eastern tour, that when Senator Salmon P. Chase, early in his political career, was remonstrated with by certain personal friends for expressing himself as he did in regard to the position of the great Whig party, "Gentlemen," said he, "one thing is clear, the pathway to the overthrow of the now dominant slave power in this country lies through the grave-yard of this old Whig party."

I need not remind Mr. Blanchard how correct was the topographical survey of this sagacious statesman forty years ago; how accurate the judgment and foresight of this political prophet in his day. But I have it to say to the Republican leaders of Massachusetts and to the Republican party everywhere, what one need not be the son of a prophet to see, that by the will and providence of the All-wise Ruler of human society, it is now given to the Republican party of Massachusetts to choose whether the pathway to the overthrow of the now dominant liquor power in this country shall run through its grave-yard or its Waterloo!

Gladstone has lately said in his masterly way—master as he always is of the situation, whether in the ministry or out of it,—“What our antagonists call precipitancy I call promptitude.” What courtiers of the liquor power, timid counselors of expediency and politic tide-waiters among us may call precipitancy I call promptitude—promptitude to perceive and promptitude to seize the question of the hour, and put our Republican party fair and square upon it—the great question of the hour and the age—the home and the people versus the saloon.

Let us see it that we now engraft the healthy scion of constitutional reform upon the old Republican stock. That stock cannot live, but will surely die, without such an engrafting. The Republican party will not survive another national defeat. The sods of two defeats will bury it beyond the possibility of rising; and that second defeat is certain if the great moral reform of the age, and its tried method of constitutional amendment suppression be not now fairly and squarely taken into its policy and platform. Let us then be fully up to the hour. Let us seize the providential opportunity with grip and enthusiasm, and the hour and the duty will carry us grandly on to noble achievement and a glorious future.

I cannot better define the situation than by a brief reference to the old Greek of Posidippus in the Dialogue between the Traveler and Phidias's notable Statue of Opportunity. The statue says, standing in impressive, solemn majesty by the market place:

My name, I hear, through all the world has flown,
As Opportunity to mortals I am known.

Traveler—

And who is she behind so sad of mien?

Statue—

Repentance is her name; still is she seen
To follow him, the wretch who weakly falls
To seize me when the timely hour avails
Of noble action! Thus she seems to teach,—
Be swift to seize the good within thy reach,
Lest it be lost forever! Ask no more,
E'en while I speak, away, away I soar!

For a knowledge of the situation in this city after five months of no-license, I cannot do better than to refer to the quarterly report of Rev. Hugh Montgomery presented last night to the Worcester Temperance Union, representing twenty-two churches, of which Mr. M. is the paid actuary to watch and direct in their behalf the working of no-license. After an exhaustive comparison of the figures of arrest and conviction and relief to the poor in five months of 1885 under license, with the same months under no-license in 1886, he finds that under no-license there has been a diminution of about one-half the crime in general, one half the jail inmates and one half the amount of relief to the poor. But he adds that the social benefits of no-license have been far greater than appears from even the most favorable records. "I can take you," says he, "to many families in Worcester in which the change from the license days has been as a change from darkness to light. In many households in this city hungry babes have been fed, ill-clad children have been clothed, sick mothers have been cherished, maltreated wives have been protected and maddened husbands have been sobered by the power of no-license. The gain can only be known by the Infinite One who loves even the lowest of his creatures. But some say that intoxicating liquors are still sold in the city. No-body denies this. There are many vendors who make their own persons a bar-room and sell from a pocket flask. In short, prohibition has not accomplished the entire suppression of the rum traffic in Worcester. And we know by experience of many years that the liquor traffic cannot be controlled. It is a villain you cannot trust with a license in any form. It is only behind bolts and bars and chains and scourges that it can be kept from crime and forced to do honest work. God grant that the day may soon come when every rum-seller shall be treated as one who scatters poison and robs us of our little ones. Then would a curse more terrible than slavery be removed from our midst, and there would be a cry of joy from widows and mothers more exultant than the Emancipation Proclamation ever produced."

Hugh Montgomery is exceptionally the right man in the right place, an intrepid explorer in the field of reform, a skillful navigator through unknown seas of danger for the craft of no-license. Standing for the churches and backed by the moral sentiment of the city, he is carefully taking the gauge and dimensions of its wretchedness through the drink traffic. Under the definition of Carlyle he is a true genius—a man with an immense capacity for taking trouble. Rum-sellers of whatever class fear and hate him as gamblers and vendors of obscene literature do Anthony Comstock. May his shadow never be less, nor his sun go down till it sets upon the final extinction of this odious traffic in the heart of the old Bay State!

MASONIC PENALTIES.

BY REV. ROBERT LOGGAN.

Are any Masons required to inflict the penalties of the various degrees upon the traitors or violators of Masonic covenants? It has been said by Masons, boasting, since the revelation of Masonic oaths, that, "If the penalty of our laws is death, no one is bound to inflict it."

I know that in the revelations of the degree of "Thrice Illustrious Knights of the Cross," it is said in the oath: "You further swear, that should you know another to violate any essential point of this obligation, you will use your most decided endeavor, by the blessing of God, to bring such person to the strictest and most condign punishment, agreeably to the rules and usages of our ancient fraternity; and this by pointing him out to the world as an unworthy vagabond; by opposing his interest; by deranging his business; by transferring his character after him wherever he may go, and by exposing him to the contempt of the whole fraternity and the world, but of our illustrious order more especially, during his whole natural life."

In the explanations in the twenty-eighth degree of the Scotch Rite, it is said: "By the man you saw peeping, and who was discovered, seized, and conducted to death, is an emblem of those who come to be initiated into our sacred mysteries through a motive of curiosity; and if so indiscreet as to divulge their obligations, we are bound to cause their death, and take vengeance on the treason by the destruction of the traitor."

This, I have no doubt, is true, as it came from "Sovereign Grand Inspector General," Rev. Dr. Frederic Dalcho. Yet, it comes to us through seceding Masons: and hence, while, to well-informed Anti-masons the evidence of its truth is satisfactory, the Masonic denial will have weight with the uninformed.

I have been impressed with this thought for years, and have been looking for some unquestioned Masonic authority to prove that some were obligated, and expected to inflict the penalties in the different degrees of Masonry.

I have, at last, as I think, found the long-sought proof, that they have in all the rites special arrangements, or degrees, for the purpose of cutting the throat, tearing open the breast, and severing the body in twain. See Mackey's Masonic Lexicon, page 341, on the word, Penalty.

Others may have seen and published what I am about to present; but I have failed to see or notice it.

The proof to which I refer is found on page 133 of Mackey's "Lexicon of Freemasonry."

The Masonic definition of the word "Elu," is as follows:

"ELU. This, which may be translated 'Elected Mason,' is the fourth degree of the French Rite. It is occupied in the details of the detection and punishment of certain traitors, who, just before the completion of the Temple, were guilty of a heinous crime.

Next follows immediately:

"ELUS. All the degrees, whose object [mark it!] whose object is that detailed in the preceding article, are called 'Elus,' or 'the degree of the Elected.' They are so numerous as to form, like Ecceasism, a particular system, which is to be found pervading every rite. In the York Rite, the Elu is incorporated in the Master's degree. In the French it occupies a distinct degree. In the Ancient Scottish Rite it consists of three degrees: 'Elected Knights of Nine, Illustrious Elect of Fifteen, and Sublime Knights Elected.' Those higher Elus, in which the object of the election is changed and connected with Templar Masonry, are more properly called 'Kadoshes.'"

Here we learn that the object of all the degrees called "Elus"—and they pervade every rite—is the detection and punishment of the traitors of Masonry; and while certain degrees are named in the French, York and Scotch rites, the writer (Mackey) speaks of "higher Elus," connected with Templar Masonry, "More properly termed Kadoshes."

Now on the word "Kadosh" he quotes from Pluche, that in the East, a person preferred "to honors bore a sceptre, and, sometimes, a plate of gold on the forehead, called a 'Kadosh,' to apprise the people that the bearer of this mark or rod was a public person, who possessed the privilege of entering into hostile camps without fear of losing his personal liberty." Again he says: that "Oliver enumerated six degrees of Kadosh, and one of them is called, 'Kadosh Prince of Death.'"

Again, on page 247, on the word, "Knight of K-H," he says "Grand Elected Knight of Kadosh," (otherwise) "Grand Elu Chevalier Kadosh;" and he says this is the 29th degree in the Ancient Scotch Rite. In this degree the initiate swears "to take revenge on the traitors of Masonry," thus: "And if I fail in this my obligation, I desire that all the penalties of my former obligations may be inflicted on me. Amen." He then rises and "kisses the Bible." See "Light on Freemasonry," p. 291.

Again, does not Mackey confirm this when he connects Freemasonry and the Ancient Mysteries; and then tells us on page 316 of his Lexicon that, "To divulge them was considered a sacrilegious crime, the prescribed [mark it!—prescribed] punishment for which was immediate death." Now is it not astounding beyond measure, that men raised under the benign influence of the Gospel, as realized both in the church of Christ and this Republican government, could be induced to unite with, and uphold, a society having such horrid, heathenish and brutal penalties, and so many degrees whose "object" is to inflict the penalties?

Hear what Mackey says on the word "Penalty." After referring to Jeremiah 34: 18, he says:

"An English writer, Brother Goodacre (quoted by Dr. Oliver), thus fully expresses the object of making a covenant. The division will not escape the attentive Mason:

"After the animal had been selected, his throat was cut across with one single blow, so as to divide the windpipe, arteries and veins without touching any bone. (First or Entered Apprentice degree.)"

"The next ceremony was to tear the breast open and pluck out the heart, and if there be the least imperfection, the body would be considered unclean. (Second or Fellow Craft degree.)"

"The animal was then divided into two parts, and placed north and south, that the parties to the covenant might pass between them from east to west, and the carcass was then left as a prey to voracious animals." (Third or Master's degree.)"

Now, I ask, can a Christian or a Christian minister, as a scribe, "well instructed in the law" of liberty, believe that the holy, righteous, and loving God of the Christian Bible can be a party to a covenant with such horrible brutal penalties as we thus find, even in the first three degrees, with all the horrid oaths to suffer or inflict those penalties? Surely none but Satan, who was a murderer from the beginning, could require such of his wretched subjects, led captive by him at his will.

A SECRET SOCIETY IN TYROL.

TRANSLATED FROM THE GERMAN BY MISS J. N. OLDS.

The following manuscript was discovered in a monastery in Tyrol, which proved to be that of a Piedmontese officer of rank, who had died there:

The societies in Tyrol do not consider it necessary to make their initiation ceremonies secret, although they are more extraordinary and complicated than those of similar institutions in any other part of the world. As an example, I will relate the experience of one of my friends, an officer of high rank, from whose lips I learned all the particulars. After having enjoyed the favor of Napoleon in the highest degree, he became suddenly the object of the Emperor's suspicions, and was obliged to take refuge in the Austrian mountains, where he lived in great seclusion. Accident and necessity, however, brought him in contact with many of the inhabitants, and, after having convinced his new friends of his hatred for the tyrant of Europe, he was informed that there existed among themselves a numerous brotherhood, whose sole object was the overthrow of the Napoleonic power. He accepted, without hesitation, their invitation to become a member of the society, and was initiated in a manner which surprised him by its simplicity. He had, however, only taken the first degree, which was often conferred upon whole communities at once, and which was within the comprehension of the most commonplace mind.

Two months passed without his hearing anything more of the society or of its object, and without his even suspecting that it was anything more than he already knew it to be: a secret insurrectionary society, with signs and pass-words. He had about concluded that the whole thing was a deception, when he received a letter, expressed in terms which reminded him of his initiation, and calling upon him to meet a number of the brethren at a certain time in a retired spot on the mountain. He went thither without taking any precautions for his own safety, as the nature of his initiation and the character of the members forbade the suspicion of an ambush.

He easily found the place indicated in the letter, and waited for hours, but without seeing any one. A few days later he received the same orders and obeyed with the same promptness, but again met no one. This trial of his patience—as he considered it—was repeated four times within three weeks, and without other result. The fifth time, becoming weary of waiting, he was about to return home, when he heard, at a short distance, fearful cries as of one in deadly peril. The day-light was almost gone, the paths in that late autumn season nearly impassable to a stranger, but no personal considerations could prevent him from hastening to the assistance of a fellow-being in distress. Armed with only his sword, he made his way through the thicket as quickly as possible toward the place whence the cries proceeded. He reached an opening in the forest at the same instant that three suspicious looking men on horseback fled in an opposite direction, firing their muskets at him as they went.

In the late twilight he could just distinguish lying upon the ground the form of a man bound hand and foot, wounded, bleeding, and apparently dying. Our friend had hardly time to make these observations and regret his own helplessness to aid the poor man, when a detachment of mounted police, drawn thither by the cry, surrounded the spot. Although almost gone, the poor victim was able to breathe a few words, which seemed to throw suspicion upon our friend as the murderer. The late hour, the sword, his excitement and surprise were only additional proofs of his guilt, and he was hastily bound and taken to the nearest village, where he was thrown into a horrible dungeon, which served as prison. Here he passed three wretched nights without food, and shut out from all communication with the world, before he was led out for trial.

After a strict cross examination of many witnesses against him and his supposed accomplices, who had also been arrested, our friend was found guilty and sentenced to death. He was unable to explain the suspicious circumstances, and could only bewail the unhappy fate which had led him to such an end. Weakened by his long fast and imprisonment, and despairing of succor he was glad that his sufferings would soon be ended, even by death.

The next day was a great holy-day, which could not be desecrated by an execution, and it was decided that he should be beheaded the same evening by torch-light. At midnight the executioners appeared, bound his hands behind him, and to the solemn tolling of the bell led our friend from his prison to the great public square, where the execution should take place. The scaffold was surrounded by a circle of soldiers, and behind them were groups of men and women, from whom murmurs of horror and impatience were heard from time to time. Our friend was led upon the scaffold, after his sentence had again been read, and was about laying his head upon the block when an official stepped up to him and whispered a few words in his ear which recalled his thoughts to earthly things.

It seemed that the government had issued an edict granting free pardon to any condemned prisoner, whatever his crime, who would betray the signs and pass-words of the secret society to which our friend belonged. Again and again he was entreated to save his life by the confession, until at last, wearied and indignant, he demanded that there should be no further delay in his execution—his initiation was complete! The ceremonies ended with a kiss, and no further oath was required of him. All the bystanders were in the secret, and had aided in the performance of the drama which had been enacted to prove to the utmost our friend's truth and firmness.

MR. CARPENTER'S PLACE IN THE PROGRESS OF MORAL EVENTS.

In an editorial January 6, 1886, the Inter Ocean unites some useful reflections upon the year past with a hopeful outlook for the present, and in connection makes such reference to Mr. Carpenter, who was then living, as indicates the esteem in which he was held by all who were interested in moral reform.

Some people, says the writer, go to London and declare it to be the wickedest city this side of Tophet. Mr. Moody says it is the most religious city in the world. As to what one will find it depends a good deal on what one goes to see. A few months ago the Pall Mall Gazette revelations of certain infamous forms of wickedness shook London society like an earthquake. Was it because the London of to-day is so much worse than the London of 1785? Not at all. It was rather because the dominant moral sense of the London of our time has grown more sensitive than it was then. It shudders at that which then it merely winked at. If evolution holds good anywhere it is in the general development and advance of the moral standards and judgments of men.

Those good and brave men and women who sailed into immortality in the Mayflower were indeed a scarce sort of people three centuries ago. Such men and women in America to-day would scarcely be deemed odd or peculiar at all. All the Western States and Territories got their most radical and organic characteristics from just about the same sort of people. Some such could be named in Chicago without rising from the chair. There was Colonel C. G. Hammond; he was not a whit behind Elder Brewster. Nor did all the men of that stamp in Chicago go to heaven when that good man died. Here, for instance, is good old Deacon Philo Carpenter still alive. He might just as well have been a leader among the founders of the Plymouth commonwealth as be what he has been, foremost in founding and fostering so many of the best things in Chicago. But the amazing multiplication of the grand institutions and organizations which he has seen spring up here, and in so many of which he has had a hand, would never have been possible had there not been such a host of other people with him actuated by essentially the same spirit. Think of the moral sense of America not fifty years ago, tolerating and defending as it did the horrible institution of human slavery; and then think how far it has got beyond that point now. Contrast the Indian policy of that time with the new Indian policy of our time. President Fillmore appointed Brigham Young Governor of Utah. What if President Cleveland now should appoint a Mormon apostle Governor of Utah? Think of the public sentiment at the beginning of the century in respect to temperance, and what the temperance sentiment is becoming.

The fact is, where once there was one way or agency for the diffusion of knowledge and for the moral enforcement of the higher standards of righteousness, there are now a hundred ways. The forces of evil may be growing more intense, but so are the forces of truth becoming more and more inventive, more intense, more grandly enterprising. Chicago is a bad, a very bad city, so far as it is bad. But any one who will take the trouble to look about and see, and take an inventory of the countless forms of good, and the innumerable ways men and women have in all parts of the city of doing what they can to build up good homes and to make other homes happier and better, and toward making the Chicago of the future incomparably better than the Chicago of even the present, he will be astonished at the result.

It is a saying of Goethe, "Let no solitary man think that he can accomplish anything." That may seem to be so; but let a thousand men get to work at the same task and things will move. Once a great moral reform gets into the air something is certain to happen. Mormonism will not last always. Its doom is near. The demands of mercantile honor are growing more imperative. The various races, nationalities, and classes will gradually learn to understand each other better. The capitalist will become more considerate, the laborer more faithful, the pulpit more direct and practical, the churches more consistent.

The widow of the Rev. G. C. Haddock, whose murder in Sioux City, Iowa, is well known, seems to possess something of the spirit of her husband.

After the murder of Mr. Haddock the Tribune of that city started a fund for the benefit of the family. It reached a considerable sum, and this was sent Mrs. Haddock the other day by the Tribune. She refused to receive it on the ground that the Tribune is opposed to the temperance cause, to which she asserts her husband was a martyr.

THE LATE SAMUEL MORLEY.

English journals of all classes have mourned the death of Hon. Samuel Morley. As one of the warmest friends and counselors as well as supporters of Mr. Gladstone, and as a philanthropist and Christian of abundant wealth but larger heart, his place in the English religious world has been compared to that of the late William E. Dodge, and Dr. Cuyler mentions him in connection with the late Lord Shaftesbury and John B. Gough. He once refused the offer of a peerage. That he was one of the most genial and considerate of men might be understood from the long list of a hundred or more societies, philanthropic, temperance, educational or religious, power maintaining the truth against all gainsayers, so as to establish young men in the faith, had a special delight in showing how Christianity was intended to elevate our practical daily life here, and to redeem it from selfishness and bitterness—intended to lay down the principles on which all business transactions should rest, and the spirit in which they should be carried on; how it can convert politics into a school of national morality, and so sanctify science and art as to save them from becoming the abettors of the idolatry of man and the human intellect, and render their aid to the wider and profounder adoration of God. This remarkable preacher was never weary of insisting on the fact that the present offers a sphere for the attainment and exhibition of the loftiest character and the accomplishment of the most useful work, and that life becomes great in virtue, not so much of great and uncommon achievements, as of common and even trivial acts pervaded ennobled by great principles. To him there was no beauty in a life of timid seclusion, no charm in that 'unbreathed and cloistered virtue' (as Milton has it) which seeks safety by shunning the light. His heart was with that nobler, manlier virtue which dares the battle, and by Christ's strength stands fast and prevails. Both these orders of preaching laid a firm hold on the young Samuel Morley, and did much to mould his subsequent life. The one led him to cling with unwavering tenacity to the Cross of Christ, as the true way to God and to live for Eternity. The other showed him that the Gospel has the promise of this life as well as of the life to come; that it brings a present salvation from selfishness and sin, and opens up a grand field of beneficent service and usefulness. And thus his life became a life of calm, pure devotion and intense realization of the spiritual world, and at the same time a life of intense activity, of noble consecration to every good work.

"He entered into church fellowship with the Nonconformists. He was a firm Congregationalist, and, because firm, therefore temperate. His main work was in connection with Congregational churches, which he personally visited and encouraged, as well as assisted with munificent liberality. As years advanced his spirit became more and more catholic, and drew him lovingly to all good men in evangelical communion. Indeed, through his whole life the one moving power which gave unity and tone to his character was simply Christ—admiration of Christ, faith in Christ, union with Christ. 'Lovest thou me?' 'Lord, thou knowest all things, thou knowest that I love thee.' That was the secret of all he was and all he did. His heart became possessed more and more with the love of Christ, and this raised his natural sympathy into the loftiest Christian sympathy.

Sometimes, in familiar speech, he spoke of the people as the masses, but he never could think of them only or chiefly in the mass. He tried to look at them individually—to call them up before his imagination one by one, and to enter warmly into the peculiarities and needs of each. It was this which kept alive his interest in mankind so unchangingly. The term 'people' was to him not an abstraction; it represented a number of individuals whose separate lives all had a distinct claim on his sympathy. They were so much alike and yet so amazingly different. Each had his particular need, it might be his particular sin—these he studied, and then met each case in such a way as to show that his heart was in it. And this, too, enabled him to understand so fully different classes of sinners or sufferers as it might be, and to join with others in great works of philanthropy. Children needed to be lifted out of the gutter; he joined hands with the promoters of ragged schools and reformatories. The youth of the nation needed education, as his spiritual instincts taught him—religious education—and he threw himself with characteristic ardor into the plans of those who sought this great end. The fallen needed to be raised out of their sin and shame—social purity needed to be protected, and he did not shrink from taking his part with those who labored in this field. In a word, his heart yearned over the young and helpless who were exposed to temptation, over the drunkard in his pitiable degradation, over those who were living in spiritual ignorance, without God, without hope in the world, and all that his purse and his personal influence could do to save them he did with a whole heart. Yes, out of love to Christ sprang his sympathy, his deep individual sympathy with men, and never, never whilst he was blessing others, could he forget how wonderfully his Lord had blessed him."

which were represented at his funeral; but no lodge is named among them.

From the sermon at his funeral by Rev. Joshua C. Harrison, in the London Daily Chronicle of September 11th, the following eloquent tribute to this noble character is taken:

"But we should make a grievous mistake if we ascribed all that he was to natural disposition or careful self-culture. There was something deeper and more to be relied on, to which he was indebted for his higher qualities. He was a pre-eminently Christian man, and all that he did was coloured and ennobled by Christian faith. He was brought up in a godly home by parents whom he held in profound veneration. He passed his early days in an atmosphere of Christian purity and love, and from childhood showed that these advantages had not been lost upon him. But about the time that I first knew him he came under the influence of two remarkable men, the Rev. James Parsons, of York, and the Rev. Thomas Binney, of the Weigh House. The former, by his vivid delineations of the Gospel and clear exposition of its central truths, by his fidelity to the Cross, and his passionate appeals to all men at once to yield themselves to Christ, as well as by the glowing visions he opened of future blessedness, touched him profoundly. As he listened he felt that it was the highest wisdom to decide at once to trust and serve the Lord—felt that if ever he was to enter upon the high joys of heaven he must live a life of purity now and here which would correspond with the life he hoped to live then and there, so he gave his heart to God, and sought daily the sanctifying influence of his spirit. He strove to act on the inspired assurance, 'Every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself even as He is pure.' The other, Mr. Binney, while often touching on these same subjects and with great intellectual

JOHN DOUGALL AND THE "WITNESS."

It was, says the New York Observer, in an appreciative article on the late Mr. Dougall, as the founder of the New York Daily Witness that the newspaper world knew him. In the earlier years of his residence in this city he was frequently taken for Horace Greeley, being much of the same build and appearance, but stouter.

Frequently he would be seen in the evening walking in City Hall Park, in earnest conversation with his son-in-law, then a young man about thirty, who was helping him in trying to establish a religious daily paper.

The history of that seven years fight cannot be written; the disappointments and difficulties and opposition that would have broken down a less sturdy veteran seemed to draw him nearer to the source of all strength and consolation.

In earlier years, in Canada, he had been known as "Praying John," and this habit of constant prayer was the secret of his power.

A most rigid observer of the Sabbath, he would never go on a car on that day, but walk sometimes to Dr. Taylor's or Dr. Ormiston's church and back to his lodgings, down town, a distance of five or six miles. He was a great lover of flowers and poetry, charming in conversation from extensive reading and observation, apt in quoting from the Scriptures or Shakespeare or the classics. "Ah, yes!" he said on one occasion, "the history of this seven years' struggle would make an epic which would rank with Xenophon's Anabasis, the retreat of the ten thousand" through the enemy's country was not more of an undertaking than we have done here." At another time he remarked: "The great Scottish patriot, Robert Bruce, said that when his heart was taken out of his body to be carried in a casket to Jerusalem, the name of SCOTLAND would be found written on it, and when I die 'NEW YORK DAILY WITNESS' will be found written on my heart."

In this effort to establish a daily religious paper a large amount of money was invested, more than a hundred thousand dollars, but it has been as good seed sown in good ground; numerous letters have been received in which the writers ascribed their conversion to the reading of the Daily Witness, and out of it has grown the New York Witness, a well-established newspaper of large circulation; known all over the world, and now a valuable property.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

This is the busy season of the year in Washington—a season of preparation. The President is preparing his message. The members of the Cabinet are preparing their several reports. The chiefs of bureaus and the heads of divisions are busy compiling the data from which these reports are made. So much for the business of the Government. But there is bustling preparation in other quarters. From the lady in the White House to the lady in charge of the cheap boarding house, there is preparation for the annual event—the opening of Congress, the advent of the fashionable season, with its entourage of legislators, lobbyists, fortune seekers and fortune spenders—in short, that great transient population peculiar to a great Capital. The Congressional session will be short, for it must terminate with the fourth of March. The social season will be brilliant and less brief. There is promise that the Executive Mansion will be the scene of many large entertainments. The young mistress of the White House is extremely popular, and is fond of society. Mr. Cleveland is a shrewd enough politician to avail himself of the valuable political adjuncts which his wife and his position furnish to his hand. Miss Cleveland, it is said, will leave her editorial throne by the pyramid of chops in the pork-packing Venice of the Western Adriatic, and wear her Tyrian purple gown at the White House receptions.

Attorney General Garland, who prides himself on his Democratic simplicity, occupies a severely simple little house. Although in the most fashionable part of the city, it is merely one of a long row of three story brick buildings, so unadorned that the windows look like holes cut in the wall. The interior of the Attorney General's home is as plain as the outside.

Here, in the midst of the social and political maelstrom of Washington life, he lives a hermit-like existence, and looks on everything with a philosopher's eye. It is strange that he ever accepted the position he now occupies, for any one more averse to society, or even public life, except in a strictly business sense, can hardly be imagined. During his recent vacation he sought a quiet little village, and devoted himself to hunting and fishing. He received no visitors, read no newspapers; and was much surprised, on his return, to hear that there had been an earthquake in Charleston. His family, which consists of his mother and children, accept no invitations, and give no entertainments. His daughter and three sons display real talent for music, and are adept performers on various instruments.

Next in order, in regard to appearance, is the residence of the Secretary of State. It is situated on a steep hill, and is difficult to reach. Probably the Secretary, in choosing such an inaccessible location, reflected that it might be discouraging to those modern Philistines—office seekers and bores.

Then comes Mr. Lamar's house, which is a little more attractive looking than either Mr. Garland's or Mr. Bayard's. The houses of Secretaries Whitney and Endicott and of Post Master General Vilas are great improvements on the above mentioned, but Mr. Manning's residence is the only one occupied by a Cabinet minister that is really an elegant home. It is a large, stately mansion, about a square from Mr. Blaine's famous house.

The report that Secretary Endicott is thinking about retiring from official life has been received with universal regret by the clerks of the War Department. He is unexacting and a firm advocate of the civil service laws, and every faithful clerk feels secure in his position under Mr. Endicott's management. It is said, however, that the Secretary does not like his duties, and the recent troubles between himself and General Sheridan, and again between Generals Howard, Miles and Drum, has had the effect of turning him against anything relating to military matters.

The Washington labor unions are expecting many visitors when the assembly at Richmond breaks up. They are already feeling their power, since the Government Printing Office is under their control, and a daily paper to represent their interests is proposed. If Powderly's proposition for a lodge lobby to watch Congress is adopted it will yet more increase the despotic power of the unions, which is felt in several boycotts which are being pushed with vigor. *

—Bro. Hawley's report of Iowa work came in late for the present number. In Wisconsin and New Hampshire the State conventions will be in progress when most of our readers open this number. Let a prayer arise for a great blessing upon these gatherings.

REFORM NEWS.

FROM TENNESSEE TO MISSISSIPPI.

Southern Colleges—Le Moyne Normal Institute—Rust University—Mississippi State Normal School and State University—Tougaloo University—Baptist Normal and Theological School.

OXFORD, Miss., Oct. 8th, 1886.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—It was my privilege to speak twice in Memphis; once to the congregation of Rev. B. A. Imes, and once to that of Rev. R. N. Countee. In both I had not only respectful attention but earnest sympathy in what I said on the subject of the lodge system. A third appointment failed because the man who was to show me the way was behind time. I called on a number of the colored ministers and found an intelligent interest in our work. Bro. Imes was absent. I spent a number of days most pleasantly at the Le Moyne Normal Institute, and was greatly pleased with the teachers and general management of the school. Pres. J. Blanchard's visit is remembered with great interest.

I went on to Holly Springs on the 7th, and after a night in a hotel which is "first-class" only in price, I visited Rust University under the patronage of the M. E. church. The president received me cordially, and I listened to what I had to say until I told him our work was to oppose secret societies, when with some earnestness he said, "What, Masonry and Odd-fellowship?" I told him it was, and he said most decidedly that he regarded them as most excellent institutions, and could not countenance any opposition. I told him I admired his frankness, but thought that if he continued long in the Southern work he would change his mind. He said, "Perhaps so." He had been on the ground but a few days. The matron of the industrial department, who has been there three years, thought differently. Like nearly all other teachers, she thought the lodges were in antagonism to the churches. She received my tracts and papers gratefully, and promised that the Cynosure, if sent, should be placed in the reading room and the tracts placed before the students. The school seems to be in a flourishing condition.

A walk of half a mile brought me to the State Normal School for colored, under the care of Prof. Henderson. The building is out of repair. Last year the Legislature repealed the charter and granted a new one. This was to get rid of the old board of trustees. They are now hoping for prosperity. Prof. Henderson told me that he is a Freemason, and that he did not think that a man could be a good Mason unless he was a Christian. He had read the Cynosure some time, but had seen nothing to change his belief. I was not surprised to find the school small and in little favor.

Leaving Holly Springs, which is more remarkable for its numerous saloons than for any business enterprise, I came on a freight train thirty miles to this temperance town, the seat of the State University, and the most tasteful and best appointed I have seen in the State. The man I wished to see is ten miles away. I have just conversed with an African M. E. minister who says he is a Mason, and don't see how they could get along without their societies. He admitted that there was much that was wrong and the whole system was unscriptural, but saw no way out of the dilemma.

JACKSON, MISS., OCT. 11.—One hundred and fifty miles directly south makes a perceptible difference in face and productions of the country. Leaving Oxford, Miss., on the morning of the 9th, the swift trains of the Illinois Central bore us rapidly onward so that we soon saw, in low places, the small palmettos, and somewhat later the sombre Spanish moss hanging from the trees. We reached Tougaloo station, seven miles north of here, at 3:30 P. M. A walk of half a mile through a grove of magnificent oaks draped with the long bunches of gray moss, brought me to the Tougaloo University and the hospitable home of Pres. G. L. Pope. The institution occupies the site of an old plantation, and the first of the three buildings now used for school purposes was a fine country mansion. The natural grove stands in its perspective beauty, and there is a single live oak in the grounds which manifestly belongs to a more Southern clime.

Tougaloo University has the great merit of training its students in manual labor and industrial arts, as well as intellectually. Nearly 500 acres of land are carefully cultivated under the supervision of a competent farmer, and others are taught various trades. Pres. Pope was absent, but Mrs. Pope entertained me, and by invitation I preached on Sabbath and gave a lecture on Africa and its missions. I spoke to considerable extent on the evil and danger of the secret lodge system, and was glad to find that my statements of fact and argument were cheerfully received and heartily endorsed by both the faculty and students. In the evening I attended a prayer meeting, and was requested to occupy twenty minutes of the time in a further consideration of the lodge system. Arrangements have since been made for me to lecture again Friday evening. This morning I attended the opening exercises in the college chapel and a number of recitations. At 1 P. M. I stepped into the carriage with Mr. Bishop, the farmer, and rode over his fields which he manages to make more fertile while they are at the same time yielding a reasonable profit. There can be no better evidence of the success of this institution than that the Governor of the State pointedly commends it, and the Legislature appropriates $3,000 a year for its support.

I left Tougaloo and came to Jackson. A mile ride on the street cars and a walk of half a mile brought me to Jackson College, a fine large structure built two years ago and occupied as the "Baptist Normal and Theological School" for this State. It is one of the seventeen institutions that have been planted by the Baptist Home Missionary Society for the education of the freedmen. I was kindly received by President Ayer, who assured me of his hearty sympathy in our work. He told me that he was the successor to the pastorate of Elder J. G. Stearns, and that he preached his funeral sermon. He had long been impressed with the pernicious influence of the orders over the colored people, and had never failed to let his position be known. He said they would be glad of the books and tracts of the N. C. A., and it was arranged that I should address the students next Wednesday at 1 P. M.

In the city I called on the venerable Elder Dunbar, who paid $1,000 for his wife's and $3,000 for his own freedom, and completed the purchase just before the close of the war. For about twenty-five years he has been the pastor of a Baptist church here, and has not failed to testify by both precept and example against the lodge system. With the weight of nearly four score years upon him he still ministers to his own people and visits distant congregations.

TOUGALOO, MISS., OCT. 14, 1886.—Hinds county, Mississippi, is in many respects the most interesting portion of the State. With more than average fertility, and the seat of the State capital, it has always had a large proportion of wealthy and cultured white people, although they are largely outnumbered by the colored. There is much being done for the education of both classes, and with most encouraging results. Race prejudice, though strong, has essentially modified its demands. It no longer says that the negro shall not be educated or that he shall be entirely without political influence. It only asks that the controlling influences shall be in the hands of the race that has been longer accustomed to rule. Northern people who come here to educate the negro, though they may not yet be admitted to social intimacy with the elite, yet they are treated with respectful consideration, and their work is commended and aided as essential to the prosperity of the State.

Perhaps no one thing has tended more to develop a kindly and harmonious feeling among all classes of society than the late movement for prohibition. The better class of white people are with entire unanimity in favor of the suppression of the liquor traffic. To secure this result they welcomed the aid of the northern teachers, and of the colored people who had been educated in temperance principles by their instruction. Local Option was carried, not without earnest and persistent effort, but by such a majority as will, it is hoped, secure its enforcement. At present most of the saloons are running in Jackson; their licenses do not expire, some of them, till next spring.

Perhaps no one individual did more to secure this result than Miss Sarah A. Dickey, principal of the Mt. Hermon Seminary at Clinton, ten miles west of Jackson. Prominent citizens and temperance workers pay a grateful tribute to her self-denying work. I visited Mt. Hermon Seminary and spent a day. I was most hospitably entertained, attended the recitations during the day, and in the evening addressed a congregation of students and neighbors on the nature and evils of secret societies. I was glad to be assured of her hearty co-operation. This school has not the aid of any missionary society, and has heretofore been sustained by individual effort. It is an institution of great value to the colored people of Mississippi, and should have the sympathy and aid of all friends of Christian education. Miss Dickey kindly took me in her carriage to Clinton and introduced me to the president of Central Female Institute, Rev. W. Hillman, L. L. D., and to Rev. W. S. Webb, D. D., President of Mississippi College. These are among the oldest institutions in the State, being respectively thirty-three and thirty-four years old. They are exclusively for whites, and in a tolerably flourishing condition, but, I should judge, in need of larger and better buildings. They are doing an excellent and much needed work, and are exerting a marked influence in favor of evangelical religion and the temperance reform.

Both Drs. Hillman and Webb are Northern men, but have long been identified with Southern interests. Dr. Webb told me he had once been a Mason, but had long since given up all connection with that or any secret order. He said he would be glad to have our paper and books, and would request the students to read them. He would be glad to have me lecture, but for a protracted meeting and a deep religious interest which occupied every evening in the week. He hoped I might visit them again. Dr. Hillman took me through the buildings of the Female Institute, and showed me the cabinet of minerals, etc., which is far the finest I have seen in the South. He too, expressed his sympathy with our work and wanted his students to read our publications.

From Clinton I went to Jackson and walked out to Jackson College. After listening to several recitations at 1:30 P. M., the whole school (150 adults) assembled, and I was introduced by Pres. Ayer, who said that the work of the association that I represented was to oppose secret societies, that this work had his hearty approval, and that while some of these societies are comparatively harmless—only wasteful and foolish—all were useless, and some most decidedly pernicious. I spoke thirty minutes, and the president added the testimony of personal experience and fully endorsed what I had said. He brought me in his carriage back to the city, where I took the train for this place, and am taking some needed rest, hoping next week to go on to New Orleans.

H. H. HINMAN.

MICHIGAN SEMI-ANNUAL CONVENTION.

The semi-annual meeting of the State Christian Association opened in South Locke Wesleyan church with an animated and full attendance. The officers were all present at the opening session, one of them having driven seventy miles with his carriage, accompanied by his zealous wife. Others came even further by private conveyance, and a noticeable feature, and one highly to be commended, was that nearly every man was accompanied by his wife or daughter, whose presence added much to the influence and good effect of the meetings. The Dominion was represented by Rev. J. L. Wilkinson, who came from Toronto with cordial greetings from Bro. Robert Jones and a few others who earnestly desire that an effort should be made to organize a co-operative branch of the reform work in Canada. To Bro. Wilkinson was accorded the full privileges of the convention, and his judicious, cultured and Christian bearing endeared him to the hearts of all present. His brief recital of facts and concise, clear presentation of the condition and needs of the people among whom he labors were listened to with the deepest attention, and I hazard nothing in saying all felt that it was a call from God—the Macedonian cry—"Come over and help us." I hope to respond in person as soon as space can be found, and I request all persons, male or female, who are interested in the proposed movement in the Dominion to write me as early as practicable at this office.

Too much cannot be said in commendation of Bro. H. A. Day, to whose thorough preparation and earnest prayers the success of the convention was very largely due. Measured by the "square" the parsonage is not a "stately mansion," but when generously supplied by the thoughtful forecast of Bro. Day (and I suspect some of the generous ones who know how it is at quarterly meetings and conventions when reformers meet) and under the tasty and skillful ordering of sister Day, there was room and food and good cheer for all; and though one table of the apostolic number twelve followed another for two consecutive days, at the close if asked, "Lacked ye anything?" each one could say, "Nothing." In a word, the whole gathering from key note to doxology, was one grand benediction approximating that meeting in an upper chamber when the disciples saw their triumphant Lord with death, hell and the grave cast down and overcome by his almighty power. How could it be otherwise, with father Foote speaking back from the very portal of heaven, father Clark singing the anthems of the redeemed with the gray of life's evening and the dawn of eternity's morning upon him, with the good and godly who had come from near and from far, all "baptized by one Spirit into one body." How could it be other or less than a foretaste of that communion which shall become universal when the will of God is done "on earth as it is in heaven."

The discussions were animated and the positions taken radical, and while very much of interest to our readers might be mentioned I forbear, leaving the field to the secretary, whose official report you will read with interest, and to others who will, I trust, feel moved to add items of encouragement. Brethren and sisters, were you repaid for your long journeys and the self-denial you made? If you were, and others knew it, they might be encouraged to do likewise.

J. P. STODDARD.

BRO. ARNOLD IN CHICAGO.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I believe that of all the American cities there is not one to surpass Chicago, as far as ignorance of the things that are of God and the human souls is concerned. If it belongs to the sailor to speak of the dangers of the sea, it belongs to men who visit the slums of cities to speak of the deep stupidity into which men of Chicago have been brought, and in which they will probably die unless we as men of God go to their rescue to enlighten them.

I wish to speak of the good done at my mission hall in this city by the two lectures of Bro. I. R. B. Arnold. The hall was well filled each time, and every body seems well satisfied with the representations accompanying the lectures. Chicago people generally seem to know little about the evils of Masonry. They certainly know less concerning the worship of Baal, Adonis, Atys, Molech, or Osiris, as identified in Masonry. These lectures have done an immense amount of good to our Sunday-school children, who will never forget the stupid attitude of the Freemason when initiated to his devilish rites. May God open the eyes of the blind-folded lovers of secretism.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE INDIANAPOLIS LABOR CONFERENCE.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—In accordance with your request, even at this late date I will give some brief account of the conference of Labor organizations and Greenbackers at Indianapolis, Ind. As it was not a delegated body but a general meeting for consultation there was no attempt to make out an accurate roll, yet one hundred names with their post-office address were handed in to the secretaries. They were from five States, and the old party papers whose reporters were present put down the number present at two hundred. They were mostly laboring men, who belonged to various organizations and to no organization.

After an earnest and harmonious comparison of views it was determined, in view of the facts that the conference had been called together hastily and without time for extended notice or previous preparation, to adjourn to meet at Cincinnati on the 22d of February, 1887, to take measures to organize the now scattered elements of the laboring party of the country. One good is certainly perceptible of the various labor organization. Laboring men are beginning to think. When the action that naturally follows thought comes, they will see that measures gotten up in secret lodges and candidates that represent not the whole laboring people but secret rings, will not carry the whole labor vote and will not succeed. They will then be ready for open measures and men.

In excuse for their present secrecy, their leaders tell me, some of whom say they never belonged to any other secret society, that but for their secrecy they could do nothing. The moment their leaders did anything that their employers did not like they would be discharged and driven away, and so their organizations would be discouraged and broken down. Their employers combine, indeed, set the laborers the example of combining for their own interests. Railroad companies and other corporations secretly water their stocks to enrich their principal members. To pay large dividends on such stocks and interest on fictitious bonds the wages of laborers must be cut down even though the laborer and his family suffers for bread. God is just, and he has no weightier condemnation for the forced secrecy of the laborer than for the voluntary secrecy of his employer.

Let us seek to bring about a reign of justice to all men when, and probably not till then, both will cease.

O. F. LUMRY.

A PARABLE.

BLOOMINGTON, Ill., Oct 9th, 1886.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Being attracted by the stirring strains of a brass band before one of the residences of our city we were led to enquire the occasion of so much commotion. We were informed by a neighbor that Mr. B. had been awarded a prize and this was the presentation. This, of course, still further excited our curiosity and we learned that this prize was offered by the Odd-fellows of the State for the most punctual attendance at all meetings, and the most prompt payment of all dues.

Now that this gentleman had won the prize for punctuality to lodge duties, we at once inquired about his punctuality in church duties. We learned that he had been connected with a church in this city for the last sixteen years, and my informant had heard his voice in prayer-meeting just twice in that time, and one of these was in reference to an entertainment. We further learned that the pastor of that church saw the fearfully growing evil of lodgery and mourned over the want of interest in the church; that he privately admitted the antagonism of the lodge to the church of Christ, but did not dare to mention it in public lest he should cause ill-feeling and drive people away from the house of God; that he is trying to convert people and fill them with interest in Christ's cause and he hopes thereby to draw them from the allurements of the lodge; but they don't draw worth a cent. The poor man finds that drawing people by the Gospel cords is very much like drawing a pig. So long as you lead him the way he wants to go he is very obedient and grunts his approval of your efforts, but so soon as you attempt to steer him away from his (lodge) swill-trough there is trouble and discord.

Certainly the poor husbandman is to be pitied as he looks out on his cornfield which is poor, yellow and spindling, with only here and there a nubbin, hardly worth calling grain. Right in the middle of each hill is growing a great rank (lodge) jimson weed (Stramonium). He does not dare meddle with the weed, but carefully cultivates and waters his corn only to see the weed appropriate the water and most of the nutriment of the soil. Meanwhile the weed sends out its narcotic stench (self-praise). We learn also that the jimson weed grows in the night; if so it still further typifies those institutions which "choose darkness rather than light because," etc. They grow in the night and had their origin then. (Matt. 13:25.) While the jimson roots are strangling the corn if one stalk cries out he is a crank at once and must be punished.

The church is left to women whom the lodge bars out, and the poor pastor gets what comfort he can from Matt. 13:29, and it really looks as though Matt. 13:30 will tell their story.

EDUCATIONAL ENTERPRISE IN LOUISIANA.

NEW IBERIA, La., Oct. 8th, 1886.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—In reading your valuable pages, I have noticed that you take a great deal of interest in the rights and general progress of the colored people, and, therefore, I thought you would like to hear something about what they are trying to accomplish for their own improvement in South Louisiana.

About two months ago the Congregational minister of New Iberia, Rev. Byron Gunner, called a meeting of the colored people of the town and parish to lay before them plans for the establishment of a high school in this place. The meeting was largely attended and great interest manifested, followed by several others, resulting in a permanent organization called "Iberia Christian Educational Association." An industrial department will be connected with the school and it is to be entirely unsectarian. The Executive committee represents all the colored churches in town. Its president is Rev. Byron Gunner.

The interest in the movement is widespread. Mr. Gunner, who is himself a graduate and B. D. of Talladega College, Ala., and a man of extensive influence, was the instigator of the movement and is the leading spirit and is prosecuting the work with great energy.

They have selected an improved lot for the school at a cost of $5,500 which is very suitable for the purpose and the committee are making arrangements to hold a grand celebration on the 16th of this month to consist of speeches from prominent colored men from a distance, and they hope to raise on that day one or more thousand dollars. If they succeed it will be greatly to their credit, for while many of the colored people here own homes and some of them little farms, that is about all, but the great mass are poor. Such a school is very much needed for there is nothing of the kind in this State outside of New Orleans, and New Iberia is 125 miles west of that city, and most of the people are too poor to send their children away to school.

There is a class of very intelligent people in the town and surrounding country who declare themselves determined to do all they can to help get the school established, though many of them can neither read nor write.

By the payment of one dollar a person may become a member of the Association, for one year, and by paying ten dollars one may become a member for life. And no doubt any one giving to this good cause will be laying up treasure in heaven, for the object is the elevation of a poor but worthy and appreciative people.

WAS THE CLOVEN FOOT VISIBLE?

CHICAGO.

The great Episcopal convention is here. It claims to represent the true church of all the ages, but there is a desire to have some question settled. Shall there be any change in the prayer book? Shall the name remain Protestant Episcopal, or be changed to Holy Catholic church? And how shall universal unity be best promoted?

Bishop Bedell, of Ohio, delivered the convention sermon in which he says that Barak was "a worshiper of the true God," (we quote the report), "although beginning to mingle the customs of the worshipers of fire and the sun with his simpler patriarchal ritual!"

Thus the Bishop stretches his true church mantle considerably, and no doubt would equally admit that the modern sun and fire ritualism of Freemasonry neither does nor should exclude its observers from "The True Church!" So Bishop Paul must be wrong if Bishop Bedell is right about "the unfruitful works of darkness." And yet the Bishop says many very good things about the true church, (we don't say his church), even although he also claims the Egyptian Pharaohs as true worshipers for at least some two hundred years from Abraham to Joseph—to us a very questionable assumption—still, no worse than much that ranks as true worship in our day.

The Knights Templar have been making a great display of their benevolence at the dedication of their Orphans' Home. But the location is one which a private party sold at a great sacrifice on account of the noise of the constantly passing rail cars.

Question: If the location was so annoying to a private family, how shall we suppose it the best for orphans, homeless and fatherless and motherless, especially in sickness, when rest and quiet, or the lack of them, are often equivalent to the life or death of the tender sufferers?

Did Knight Templarism think of this, or of the display of its unselved trappings and to gratify its hungry vanity, by attracting the popular gaze and applause?

PITH AND POINT.

FATHER STEWART OF WHEATON.

This aged servant of God, known to many readers of the Cynosure as one of the consistent and devoted friends of the truth, has just passed through a critical illness. He suffered an acute attack by strangulated hernia, and was for a time under the care of three physicians, a surgical operation being required in order to afford relief. He is now rapidly gaining in health and has yet, we trust, years of earthly service before he goes to his reward on high. I came from his side an hour ago, and it was good to be in his sick room. His confidence in God was so strong and triumphant, his submission to the divine will so perfect, and his eye so bright with hopes of immortality, that it was a walk on the delectable mountains where, you know, when the sky is clear the towers of the celestial city may be seen. His friends who knew of his illness have been praying for his recovery, and all who learn of the answer to their prayers will be glad to give thanks.—C. A. B.

MODERN HEATHENISM.

I have received all the papers and books that I sent for, and have made good use of them: after reading I give them away. I gave to R. W. Reynolds, pastor of the M. E. church, South, the tract on "Modern Heathenism," and he preached a sermon in which he spoke the sentiment of that tract. He is a Freemason, but he told me he had seen the folly of the lodge and was bound to preach the truth. So I am encouraged to work on.—THOMAS WATERS, Marshfield, Mo.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE WRITINGS OF JOHN.

LESSON V.—October 31, 1886.—Jesus Risen.—John 20: 1-18. GOLDEN TEXT.—The Lord is risen indeed, and hath appeared unto Simon.—Luke 24: 34.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The Empty Sepulchre. vs. 1-10. Like the napkin and the linen clothes laid away because no longer needed, so the old law of rites and ceremonies was forever abolished when Christ rose from the dead. It had accomplished its purpose and could be of no further use. His resurrection inaugurated, for all nations and all ages, a pure, spiritual worship. Papal traditions, its vain forms and superstitious observances are so many empty sepulchres. Not there do we find the ever-present, ever-loving Christ. Masonry is supposed, by many who have not taken the trouble to investigate its true character, to be a great aid to Christian living. They are perhaps told so by Masonic friends, or they base their judgment on the fact that their minister, their Sabbath-school teacher, or superintendent belongs to it; but whoever seeks the lodge, hoping to receive religious benefit, will not find even a dead Christ. Nor will they find even so much as his empty shroud, the mere types and symbols of a Redeemer, which we do find under the most corrupt form of Romanism. "They knew not the Scriptures," etc. Error thrives through ignorance of God's Word. A close and prayerful student of the Bible will never seek the risen Lord in the empty sepulchres of a false belief.

2. The Risen Saviour. vs. 11-18. "They have taken away my Lord," etc. There is no robbery of humanity so cruel, so utterly unjustifiable and irreparable as that which takes away its Saviour, and leaves at the best but an empty tomb. This is the mischief wrought by Robert Ingersoll and his followers. They take away the one Joy of the sorrowing, the one Hope of the despairing, the one Helper of the weak, and offer no substitute. When their Christ has been taken away from the masses, and with him all hope of a future life for themselves, the result will be a natural desire to seize all the good they can out of this life, even if it must be by force and violence. "Let us eat and drink for to-morrow we die." Take away the doctrine of a hereafter, and human life, with its inequalities of condition between the rich and the poor, will seem to them, what it really would be on that hypothesis—monstrous and horrible injustice. The hope of civilization against anarchy, of society against lawless license, is in this truth of a risen Saviour. It is evident that the early Christians kept Christ's resurrection in constant view. Every Lord's day brought it to their minds as its central thought, its joy and inspiration. To keep up the memory by setting apart one day in the year for this purpose is a clumsy human device. Easter Sunday with its theatrical displays, is more apt to obscure this crowning fact of redemption, and relegate all thoughts about it into the realm of mere sentimental feeling, till it comes to have as little influence on the life as if it were a mere poetic fiction. As Mary failed to recognize Christ in the dusk of the early morning, so we often fail to recognize him when he comes in the shadows of disappointment, of crosses and daily trials. "Go to my brethren and say unto them," etc. When Christ reveals himself to us in any especial way, the revelation is never for ourselves alone. Every Christian should be, not a mere receptacle, but a channel for the divine grace.

LIGHT FROM THE WORD.

Can the mystery of life be understood except through the resurrection? 1 Cor. 15: 17, 19. What is the first duty of every one who has found the living Christ? Psa. 22: 22. Who are Christ's brethren? Rom. 8: 29; Heb. 2: 11.

From Peloubet's Notes.

Our Lord appeared after his resurrection: 1. To Mary Magdalene alone (Matt. 28: 9; John 20: 11-18), near Jerusalem, Sunday, April 9, early in the morning.

2. To the women returning from the sepulchre (Matt. 28: 9, 10), near Jerusalem, Sunday, April 9, early.

3. To Simon Peter alone (Luke 24: 34), near Jerusalem, Sunday, April 9, early.

4. To two disciples going to Emmaus (Luke 24: 13), Sunday, April 9, four to six p. m.

5. To the apostles at Jerusalem, excepting Thomas, who was absent (John 20: 19), Sunday, April 9, evening.

6. To the apostles at Jerusalem a second time, when Thomas was present (John 20: 26, 29), Sunday, April 16, evening.

7. At the Sea of Tiberias, when seven disciples were fishing (John 21: 1).

8. To the eleven disciples on a mountain in Galilee (Matt. 28: 16).

9. To about 500 brethren at once (1 Cor. 15: 6), in Galilee, near the time of the last.

10. To James only (1 Cor. 15: 7), probably at Jerusalem.

11. To all the apostles on Mount Olivet at his ascension (Luke 24: 51), Thursday, May 18.

"Touch me not: for I am not yet ascended." This cannot mean that there was any reason in the nature of his body why she should not touch him, for he allowed the other women to touch him (Matt. 28: 9), and he told Thomas to touch him and see that he was unchanged (John 20: 27). The more common, and perhaps the best-founded interpretation, may be expressed in the paraphrase of Doddridge: "Do not stay here to embrace me now, either to pay thy homage to me, or to confirm thy faith, both which thou wilt have other opportunities of doing; for I am not yet withdrawn from your world, and ascended to the heavenly court of my Father, as you imagine I shall presently do, but I shall yet continue for a little while on earth, and give you further opportunities of seeing me again; let nothing therefore detain thee any longer, but go immediately to my dear brethren and say unto them," etc.—Owen.

THE BODY OF JESUS DURING THE 40 DAYS. It is of the utmost importance that we remember that the body Jesus rose with was the very same body which died on the cross. For otherwise it is impossible to prove that Jesus himself actually rose from the dead. Some have thought that Jesus rose with a body like our resurrection bodies, because he seemed to have peculiar power over his body, entered rooms apparently with closed doors, and appeared occasionally and for brief seasons only. But (1) he expressly says that his resurrection body was flesh and blood; Thomas felt it. Jesus ate common earthly food. While Paul tells us that our resurrection body is to be a spiritual body, and is not flesh and blood. (2) Jesus could have the same power over his earthly body as over his resurrection body, since both were flesh and blood, and he gave hints of this power several times. The Spirit of Jesus always had perfect power over matter. (3) There is no possible way to prove that Jesus arose from the dead, if the body was not precisely the same after that it was before he was buried. (4) Jesus's body was doubtless changed at the ascension into a spiritual body. It was not till that change that we have in the resurrection of Christ a type of the change to be made in our bodies by the resurrection. Then took place what Paul declares is to take place on the resurrection day in those who are alive. We shall be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye.—P.

PRACTICAL. 1. We have in the disciples an excellent example of keeping the Sabbath.

2. How often we say, as we approach a difficult duty, "Who will roll away the stone?" only to find we go straight on, that God in his own way has removed the obstacles. Often exemplified in the history of modern missions.

3. The very efforts of opposers to destroy and hinder the Gospel are made to minister to its success.

4. Our eyes are often hidden from seeing our Lord because he appears in unexpected ways and strange providences; but at last "his sheep knew his voice."

5. The resurrection of Jesus is full of comfort and hope to all who believe on his name. (1) This resurrection is the crowning proof that Christ is the Son of God. If he could not conquer death, and come back from heaven, he could not prove that at the first he came from heaven. (2) It is the proof of immortal life beyond the grave; that death does not end all, but the soul lives after the body dies. (3) It is the assurance of our own resurrection. (4) It shows that our Saviour has power over every one of our enemies. (5) It teaches the moral resurrection, that being dead to sin we should be alive unto God. (6) Hence the resurrection was the basis of the preaching of the apostles. "A dead Christ might have been a teacher and a wonder-worker, and remembered and loved as such. But only a risen and living Christ could be the Saviour, the Life, and the Life-Giver,—and as such preached to all men. This is the foundation of the Church, the inscription on the banner of her armies, the strength and comfort of every Christian heart, and the grand hope of humanity: 'The Lord is risen indeed.'—Edersheim.

BY GREAT MEN IN THE STATE.

George Washington, in a letter written a year before his death: "I preside over no lodge, nor have I been in one more than once or twice during the last thirty years."

Charles Francis Adams: "A more perfect agent for the devising and execution of conspiracies against church and state could scarcely have been conceived."

Thaddeus Stevens: "By Freemasonry, trial by jury is transformed into an engine of despotism and Masonic fraud."

President Millard Fillmore, J. C. Spencer and others: "The Masonic fraternity tramples upon our rights, defeats the administration of justice, and bids defiance to every government which it cannot control."

Chief Justice John Marshall: "The institution of Masonry ought to be abandoned as one capable of much evil and incapable of producing any good which might not be effected by safe and open means."

William Wirt: "I view it as at war with the fundamental principles of the social compact, and a wicked conspiracy against the laws of God and man, that ought to be put down."

John Quincy Adams: "I am prepared to complete the demonstration before God and man, that the Masonic oaths, obligations and penalties cannot by any possibility be reconciled to the laws of morality, of Christianity, or of the land."

Charles Francis Adams: "Every man who takes a Masonic oath forbids himself from divulging any criminal act, adequate it might be murder or treason, that may be communicated to him under the seal of fraternal bond, even though such concealment were to prove a burden upon his conscience and a violation of his bounden duty to society and to his God."

Charles Sumner: "I find two powers here in Washington in harmony, and both are antagonistic to our free institutions, and tend to centralization and anarchy—Freemasonry and Slavery; and they must both be destroyed if our country is to be the home of the free, as our ancestors designed it."

Thurston Weed: "I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the Anti-masonic excitement by a sincere desire, first to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of secret societies."

William H. Seward: "Before I would place my hand between the hands of other men in a secret lodge, order, class, or council, and, bending on my knee before them, enter into combination with them for any object, personal or political, good or bad, I would pray to God that that hand and that knee might be paralyzed, and that I might become an object of pity and even the mockery of my fellow-men."

Wendell Phillips: "I wish you success most heartily in your efforts to arouse the community to the danger of secret societies. They are a great evil; entirely out of place in a republic, and no patriot should join or uphold them. Considering the great forces which threaten the welfare of the nation in the next thirty years, and how readily and efficiently they can use any secret organizations, such should not be allowed to exist."

George Washington's Farewell Address: "The very idea of the power and the right of the people to establish government presupposes the duty of every individual to obey the established government. All obstructions to the execution of the laws, all combinations and associations, under whatever plausible character, with the real design to direct, control, counteract, or awe the regular deliberation and action of the constituted authorities, are destructive of this fundamental principle, and of fatal tendency."

AMERICAN PLATFORM.

ADOPTED AT CHICAGO, JUNE 20, 1884

Viewing with deep concern the corrupt and unsettled condition of American politics, and witnessing with alarm the fearful prevalence of caste and clanishness by which our citizens are held arrayed in hostile hands, and earnestly to compass political ends, a method directly and powerfully tending to increase corruption, to destroy mutual confidence, and hasten disruption and hoodedness; and having no hope of adequate remedy for these evils from existing parties, and believing the foundation of a party based upon the fundamental principles of the Declaration of American Independence, both inevitable and indispensable: We, therefore, a portion of the American people, believing with our fathers that we have our rights and liberties, not from men or parties, but from God; believing in the Christian marriage, and not in Mormonism; believing in the religious democracy of the New Testament, and not in the despotism of the lodge; believing, also, with our Scotch and English ancestors, that civil government, though ordained in God's "founded in nature, not in grace," and, therefore, that all have equal civil rights; while we abhor the idea of enforcing religion or controlling conscience by human laws and penalties as calculated to make hypocrites, not Christians, and favoring of the days of priest-craft, the fagot and the stake, we at the same time as firmly believe that atheism and priest-craft are twins and both alike foes to human liberty and welfare. We further most firmly believe that a government without God has none but lynch power, and is destitute of all legitimate authority to maintain civil order, to swear a witness, to try a criminal, to hang a murderer, to imprison a thief; and while we consider government without God as an usurpation, we regard all religions and worship invented by men, and so having no higher than human origin, as mere swindling impositions and cheats. We believe in peace and in national arbitration as a means of perpetuating it; yet we as profoundly believe that the bravery and blood of our soldiers have bought us the peace which we enjoy, and we honor the memories of the dead and will be just to the claims of the living; and we take up arms and prolong the strain raised by the women of this country: "For God, and home, and native land," and trust that this beautiful and patriotic motto will soon be not only echoed by their deeds, but sustained by their votes.

We, therefore, solemnly adopt and present the following, as containing a brief synopsis of the principles of our government, by which we intend to be governed in casting our votes. We hold:

1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

3. That God requires, and man needs a Sabbath.

4. We demand the prohibition of the importation, manufacture, and sale of intoxicating drinks.

5. We hold that the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

6. We are opposed to putting prison labor or deprecatory contract labor from foreign countries in competition with free labor to benefit manufacturers, corporations or speculators.

7. We are in favor of a revision and enforcement of the laws concerning patents, and of the laws for the prevention and punishment of frauds either upon inventors or the general public.

8. We hold to and will vote for woman suffrage.

9. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by Articles 13, 14 and 15 of our amended National Constitution should be pressed into and the same equality should be extended to Indians and Chinamen.

10. That international differences should be settled by arbitration.

11. That land and other monopolies should be discontinued.

12. That the general government should furnish the people with an armed and armed navy.

13. That it should be the settled policy of the government to reduce tariffs and taxes as rapidly as the necessities of revenue and vested business interests will allow.

14. That polygamy should be immediately suppressed by law, and that the Republican party is censurable for the long neglect of its duty in respect to this evil.

15. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice President of the United States.

HENRY L. KELLOGG.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, OCTOBER 21, 1886.

A HORSE SHOE hung up in a parlor is a prayer to an unknown god for good luck. The ancient heathen worshipped a female statue, hoodwinked, and standing on a rolling ball as the goddess of Fortune, for the same purpose, viz., to secure "good luck."

THE SERMON by the senior editor, before the W. C. T. U. of Saratoga and printed in the Saratoga Eagle—urging the dropping of the secret temperance lodges, and union of Prohibitionists and Americans under a changed name, was read by General Clinton B. Fisk, of New Jersey, who said: "I am in entire accord with you." A few copies of the Eagle containing that sermon are to be had, without price, by applying at this office.

THE AMERICAN gives notice that Miss E. E. Flagg has been engaged as associate editor of that paper. We congratulate Mr. Bailey and the public on his good fortune. Miss Flagg will still continue to write for the Cynosure as heretofore; and if we could multiply her life we should still urge that she speak as well as write for our holy cause.

A SMALL SPIRITUALIST PAPER entitled Light for Thinkers, Atlanta, Georgia, has reached us. The editor ridicules the people in Charleston who prayed in the streets in the time of the earthquake. He seems rejoiced that "no people have been more frightened by the unseen power which heaves the earth than the orthodox churches," and adds with the most asinine gravity, "There should be a more general enlightenment upon the forces of nature and the truths of eternal life. We cannot afford to have these panics." The same paper gives a two column "revelation" from a medium of Quincy, Ill., which is a prophecy of desolation and destruction sweeping over the earth.

THE LATE JOHN DOUGALL.

This great and gifted man, born in Paisley, Scotland, in 1808, died at Flushing, Long Island, August 19th, 1886, at the home of his son, James D. Dougall of the New York Witness. He began his career as editor of the Canada Temperance Advocate, and though he made money as a successful business man, he had no use for money but to do good with, and his earnest, straightforward, practical way of life, and style of writing was so popular with the masses that he became the popular tribune of the religious press; and he probably reached and instructed more minds in the science of applied morals, than any other man living or dead.

Great reformers like Huss, Wickliffe, and Luther have their fields assigned them by Providence, and like great rivers, make themselves deep channels, and flow in them. The genius of Mr. Dougall resembled rather a steady shower of rain refreshing the whole face of society. His school was business, his book society, and his law the Word of God. He walked into the halls of trade and commerce, law and legislation, and whatever traversed the supreme rule of love to God and our neighbor was dragged from the shelter of its surroundings and held up to public view with an honesty of purpose and vigor of style which disarmed opposition and carried conviction. A genius like his was born for the pen, and it took him to the press as water finds its level. His personal magnetism drew to him such men as James Court of Montreal and William E. Dodge of New York, whose means enabled him to reach the public as Jerome sustained Huss; the Elector of Saxony, Luther, and John, Duke of Lancaster, protected Wickliffe. He started the Witness in Montreal, which sunk large sums, but made a fortune at last; but his beau ideal was a religious daily, which should be an electric light in the mart of business. He started a half-penny daily in Montreal, and perseverance made it a success. He then, had wealth been his object, was in reach of his end. But he was in Canada, which is not included when "America" is spoken of. He looked on New York as the citadel of America, and on America as the focus of the human race. He longed for a Christian daily in the city which promised to become the metropolis of the globe. He put his faithful and beloved Witness in safe hands, and removed to New York to repeat there, upon a larger scale, the bold ventures which had been successful in Montreal. His daily, crippled by a money pressure, went under, but his Weekly Witness ran up an enormous list, and a small army of employees from its office went out to Flushing to look through their tears on his loved and honest face. The press sent his decease throughout the world; and multitudes in two great cities, and thousands throughout a vast country, felt a pang as at the death of a friend. A throng attended his funeral in Montreal, and a long procession went to "the dear old home" on the green hill-side, where children and loved ones had grown up under the shadow of a great and good man.

Of the many writers who chronicle his name and memory, all put his child-like, "perfect sincerity" in the front of the picture. An incident will illustrate this amiable trait. When the Cynosure was struggling as a small fortnightly paper, its outspoken fidelity against the myriads of the lodge had attracted his notice. He had studied the secret Orange lodges, by which Satan took charge of the Protestant cause in Ireland against Tyrconnell, who was beaten at the Boyne in 1690, and their history for more than a century had convinced him that a secret lodge is the devil's instrument, not God's. He knew, too, the terrible power of that instrument in a wide country where every hamlet has its secret temples; and he saw how the American press quailed in silent terror before it. Our editor sent up his name and was at once admitted to Mr. Dougall's office. The good man arose, and, extending both hands in greeting, exclaimed, "THE BRAVEST OF THE BRAVE!" And then added, "I find but one fault with your paper—it is too small!" The New York Witness was and is a general newspaper, but while Mr. Dougall was at the head of it, it gave clear, unmingled testimony against the secret lodge system, and engaged some years later the editor of an anti-secret paper to write letters from Washington.

It is melancholy to see, in the teeming notices of his death, his opposition to secret societies wholly suppressed, not only from his obituaries, but also from the promise of the future conduct of the paper. The Witness is hereafter to oppose "The Liquor Traffic;" to advocate "A Prohibition party;" to "Uphold the sanctity of marriage, and of the Sabbath, the cause of missions," etc., etc. But if the Witness is hereafter to oppose secret lodges, which antagonize all the above objects by omitting Christ, we are left to infer it from general pledges to "follow Mr. Dougall as he followed Christ." Let us hope that the testimony of the holy dead will yet be heard and heeded.

THE SIXTH CONGREGATIONAL COUNCIL.

This body now meeting in the Union Park church of this city is an august meeting, which we may notice more at length on the conclusion of its labors. For the present a brief notice must answer to engage the interest of our readers.

Prof. Benner, eight years a teacher in Salt Lake Academy, moved the Council by his able report on Mormonism. At his suggestion and that of Secretary Bliss of the New West Commission a committee of three or five able men are to visit Utah, memorialize Congress, and report to next Council. A vote was adopted protesting against receiving Utah as a State unless by consent of the loyal minority in the Territory opposed to polygamy.

To all this the Cynosure adds its cordial God-speed. But do not this large body of Congregational pastors know that Mormonism was recognized under Joseph Smith by the Masonic Grand Lodge of Illinois, which gave them a dispensation to work; that its bloody, base and brutal oaths are all Masonic in conception and origin; and that Dr. Quint, who is one of the leading members of the Council, has taken a human skull in his hands, and over it, and the wine within it, invoked double damnation on his soul if he violates his Knight Templar's obligation. And while his friend, Benjamin F. Butler, has publicly recanted, in part, his Masonry, Dr. Quint adheres in silence to his loathsome and blasphemous libation.

Now when these beloved brethren go to their churches for money against Mormonism, will not the enlightened among their members see and know that leading members of this Council now practice secretly in New England all of Mormonism which they can in New England society? And do they not know that if the covering of secrecy was taken off while Dr. Quint is taking and administering such blasphemy to our young men, he would be driven from respectable New Hampshire society? And does not God see and know these abominations, endorsed by this great Council in his person?

Beloved brethren in Christ, as the United Hebrew States fell by substituting these secret worship for the worship of Jehovah—Christ, so will our United States fall if our church leaders practice and we endorse such abominations. They are disintegrating our churches, South and North. In the reports to Elgin Association last week, a deacon said, "Three-fourths of our members are women and children." It is so through our Union. The women and children go the churches and the men to secret lodges, run by saloonists, dcists and infidels.

AN OFFENCE TO BE PUT AWAY.

TO THE MINISTERS AND MEMBERS OF ELGIN ASSOCIATION, ILL.—AN EXPLANATION.

Eight years ago, May, 1878, the Elgin Association withdrew its privileges from the senior editor of the Cynosure until he should be restored to the "First church of Christ in Wheaton." That church had been divided by internal agitation, as the Congregational denomination may yet be by another agitation; and other divisions among God's children must doubtless come before

"Jesus shall reign where'er the sun Does his successive journeys run."

The Elgin Association took sides with the minority of the divided church. Our senior editor remained with the majority. The minority church excluded him, and Elgin Association withdrew from him; imputing no moral wrong, but on the technical ground that he had lost his church-standing in the minority church.

All the ministers who then constituted Elgin Association are now gone from their places; most of them from the State, and some from this life. The new pastors who fill the twenty-three pulpits vacated in eight years, it is hoped, are happily ignorant of the troubles which led to the withdrawal of privileges. Hence no committee has been appointed to inquire whether the vote of the Association has been obeyed and reconciliation sought with the excluding church. This, it is your right to know.

The venerable and beloved Prof. Fisk of Chicago Seminary has often insisted that "These difficulties ought to be settled while you and I are yet alive;" Dr. Flavel Bascom has written urging the same thing; and Dr. E. F. Williams wrote a letter, which was adopted, endorsed, and forwarded to the pastor of the minority church, by our senior editor, asking what the said church desired or required of him, as conditions of reconciliation. The church replied, in substance, that the matter was closed and would not be reopened.

Meantime, substantial reconciliation has taken place. The two churches have co-operated and met together in revival labors. Successive pastors of the minority church have extended the usual ministerial courtesies to our senior editor in their house of worship; their pastor has led a union prayer meeting, and their superintendent has addressed union Sabbath-school meetings in the College chapel; and the pastor of the College church in Wheaton, whose local membership is in the same church to which our senior editor has belonged, and still belongs, has been received and is a full member of Elgin Association. And if local church membership is necessary to membership in the body, and if membership in the College church is good enough in case of the pastor, it is good enough for our senior editor, and the action against him was irregular and unjust.

And, further, as the proper measures seeking reconciliation have been taken by the advice and co-operation of Dr. E. F. Williams; and as the two churches are walking together in harmony as churches of Christ, though there may be some lingerings of an evil state of things in a few bosoms, it would seem that the unhappy resolution adopted eight years ago by brethren now all gone should be rescinded and Wheaton and its college restored to its former harmony with the surrounding churches when they were mutually happy in and helpful to each other. And if brethren Sears of Garden Prairie, Davidson of Elgin, Burton of Geneva, Tindall of Malta, Dow of Sycamore, and a few others of the lay brethren of the churches, would take the time and trouble to meet together for prayer and consultation, they can accomplish a great and desirable object by preparing the way for the final action of their pastors, most of whom are new in their respective charges, and thus "take up a stumbling block out of the way of God's people," and prepare for a glorious coming of the Lord in the churches of Elgin Association.

It might seem sinister if this explanation should omit all allusion to the secret lodge discussion, as that system lies at the bottom of our difficulties in church and state; and differing opinions among good men and interference by bad men were the root of the Wheaton difficulty; and fear of disturbance from that cause occasions apprehension and hesitation in some pastors of Elgin Association. But there is no avoiding this question by hiding our eyes from it. Seven of the best men in Chicago were appointed at Farwell Hall parlors last July, to call a national congress of Christians for this discussion; and their appointment has been approved and the congress endorsed by Drs. McCosh, Hodge and Paxton of Princeton; by Drs. Cheney, Stevenson, Joseph and David Collins of Philadelphia, and by Dr. Richard S. Storrs and T. DeWitt Talmage of Brooklyn, N. Y., so that discussion must be had. And the churches in Elgin Association are so free from complicity in secret societies, that a little fearless fidelity and loving patience will speedily remove all obstructions to Gospel work, and avoid all distractions in the churches of Christ.

—Bro. I. R. B. Arnold gave two lectures and exhibitions each in the mission room 135 West Van Buren street, and in Harmonia Hall on Union street in this city last week, and so far as we can learn, with universal satisfaction. This week he is announced for one evening at Wheaton and two in the Free Methodist church near Humbolt Park, Chicago, (Thursday and Friday.)

—Pastor B. A. Imes, the associate of pastors Countee and Brinkley in reform work in Memphis, and a valued contributor of the Cynosure, preached an eloquent and powerful sermon to the College church, Wheaton, last Sabbath morning. In the afternoon he gave an address and answered questions on the condition of the churches in relation to the lodge in the South. Bro. Imes, as assistant moderator of the National Congregational Council, is making many friends by his courteous and modest bearing, while his abilities and courage as a public speaker will always secure him a welcome in Wheaton whenever he comes this way.

—Sabbath evening the Wheaton churches enjoyed another rare and able address by Professor Benner, of Salt Lake Academy, Utah. Prof. Benner was the first man to welcome the assistant editor of the Cynosure in Salt Lake City last May, though coming as a stranger. He is at the head of an important work in that city, and as representative of the New West Commission for the promotion of Christian education among the Mormons spoke in the National Council last Saturday. The Baptist and Wesleyan churches united with the College church Sabbath evening, and aided generously in the impromptu collection taken for the New West work.

—The Iowa Prohibition ticket is as follows: For Secretary of State, V. G. Farnham, of Plymouth county; for Auditor of State, J. L. McReynolds, of Jefferson county; for Treasurer of State, Jas. Mickelwait, of Mills county; for Attorney-General, Jacob Rogers, of Fayette county; for Clerk of the Supreme Court, E. B. Howard, of Marshal county; for Reporter of the Supreme Court, Prof. J. W. Wolfe, of Van Buren county. We publish the list so that Anti-masons who vote as they pray may early question the candidates on their position for or against the lodge. Correspondence is also invited from our readers who may have reliable information respecting this matter.

—The Voice, published by Dr. Funk, of New York, is the ablest Prohibition paper in the country and is so recognized by the foes of that movement. A daily edition begins on Tuesday of this week to continue till the 2nd of November. The price for the thirteen issues is only 25 cts.

PERSONAL MENTION.

—Bro. Edmund Ronayne is engaged to attend and address the Wisconsin convention this week at Waupun, and will contribute greatly to the success of that meeting.

—Secretary Stoddard and Pres. C. A. Blanchard returned from Michigan Friday morning, having driven three miles the evening before in a lumber wagon through a driving rain to do so.

—Revs. B. A. Imes of Memphis, Tenn., and C. L. Harris of Jackson, Miss., attended the National Congregational Council in this city. Bro. Imes was elected an assistant moderator by a very large and complimentary vote, Dr. McLain of Oakland, Cal., being the other assistant. He accepted the honor in a neat little speech.

—Robert Smalls, the negro statesman, has been elected to Congress five times. He will, no doubt, secure his sixth election in November, as he has been renominated in the Seventh District of South Carolina, where there is a dense colored population.

—Gladstone has written an indignant letter to the press characterizing the rumor of his conversion to the Roman Catholic faith as a malicious slander. The "grand old man" has made many enemies during his long political career, but the circulation of false stories can do him no permanent injury.

—Dr. H. W. Thomas, the "liberal" preacher of this city, was appointed Grand Chaplain of the Illinois Grand Lodge at its late meeting, and has thus at length reached the summit of his ambition.

—A number of friends and supporters of our reform have of late honored the Cynosure with a friendly call. Rev. B. T. Roberts stopped to give a hearty hand-shake on his way to Coopersville, Michigan, and his General Conference. Brethren George B. Hopkins, Ira Green, and Hodgman of this State, and Rev. Mr. Skinner of Michigan, have also looked in upon us.

—Rev. John Boyes of Grimsby, England, whose judicious and able contributions on the public affairs of Great Britain have been welcomed by all the readers of the Cynosure, has for several months been in precarious health, which accounts for the absence of his letters. He has so far recovered as to be able to resume his ministerial labor, but we regret to say that he cannot, for the present, write for us. He will, however, be a vigilant observer of events for the Cynosure, and will assist their knowledge of European affairs by sending newspaper articles frequently. The excellent sketch of the late Samuel Morley in this number is from him.

—A letter from Bro. J. F. Galloway of Okahumpka, Florida, brings the sad news of the death of his beloved and faithful wife of heart disease on the 23d of August last, after an illness of some five or six weeks. She was not all this time confined to her room or under the care of a physician, but was suffering from the disease. Her death was happy and peaceful through the presence of her Saviour. Bro. Galloway, himself in broken health, feels deeply this heavy loss; and on account of his children, whom their mother was anxious should have the privileges of an education, he desires to sell his Florida property and remove. Let all who read this note remember him in prayer and sympathy.

—Our Nebraska Antimasons must be congratulated on their coming opportunity to vote for the "Fanatic" of "In the Coils," the Prohibition candidate for Lieutenant-governor, Rev. E. B. Graham of Omaha. The New Republic of Lincoln, lately sketched this candidate in worthy colors thus:

"His political antecedents were Republican, but Mr. Graham left the party several years ago, convinced of its unworthiness. In 1884 Mr. Graham was nominated for Regent of the University on the Prohibition ticket and made a few speeches. He showed a clear insight into the well-defined policy and pronounced doctrines of the party and demonstrated his ability as a platform orator. So satisfactory was the brief campaign of Mr. Graham, that again in 1885 he was nominated for Regent. He took the stump and accepted quite a list of dates arranged by the State committee. Everywhere he spoke the vote that followed showed the result, we believe he ran ahead of his ticket at every point where he addressed the people. Edwin B. Graham is a man of strong convictions, vigorous, well-trained and logical mind; has a fine command of language and brings to the discussion of the great political issue of the day, a comprehensive knowledge of the subject. He loves the truth. He despises hypocrisy. He is a positive, determined character, ready to face the opposition of the whole earth when he knows his cause is just. His conscience is his crown. If elected to be president over the next Nebraska Senate, he would lift the stigma left on Nebraska's fair name by the last man who held this office, and appoint a committee in the interests of the people instead of the saloon-keepers. Mr. Graham is a fine parliamentarian and would fill this position with credit to himself and honor to the State."

THE CENTRAL BIBLE SEMINARY OF NEBRASKA.

STROMSBURG, Neb., Oct. 12, 1886.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The Central Bible Seminary is a Baptist institution lately organized at Stromsburg, Neb. Its principles are as follows:

1. The Bible in the language best understood by the students, shall be studied throughout by whatever method shall be thought best. This shall be the principal study of the Seminary. Next in order shall be a theological course as complete and thorough as circumstances shall allow, together with such practical training as shall seem best.

2. The aim of the instruction shall first be development of the spiritual life, then development of the mind and impartation of such knowledge as shall best prepare the student for missionary and ministerial work.

It is also the design of the corporation of this institution to open academic and collegiate courses of instruction besides the Seminary course, as soon as means to do so shall be obtained, and for these departments the following principles have been placed on the constitution:

1. Courses of study which shall best prepare for practical or student life, and especially for further studies in the Seminary department shall be arranged and pursued, as circumstances shall demand and allow.

2. Chosen Bible subjects shall also be taught in the various classes of these departments, remembering that the Bible contains the highest wisdom and the most important truths needed in preparation for both the present and the future life.

As the institution is organized by Swedish Baptists, it is provided that the Swedish language shall be used as a medium of communication as long as, and in the degree that, it shall be needed for missionary work among the Swedish people of America. But the English language shall also be used, as far as it shall be needed, until it becomes the language of the institution as well as of the people.

The Board of Trustees, and the Faculty of the Seminary department shall be composed of members in good standing of regular Baptist churches. No one shall be elected, however, as a member of the corporation, or the Board of Trustees, or the Faculty of the institution, or remain in such position, who is a member of any secret society or fraternity whatever; nor shall any secret society be allowed to exist among the students.

This institution has been in existence now during two years, although it was preceded by thirteen years of preparatory work. In all this time about one hundred and two students have availed themselves of the instruction, and sixty-five have graduated. As a result of their labors, the reports state that three thousand converts have been baptized, seventy-five churches and a number of Sunday schools have been organized, and thirty-five new church-buildings have been erected. Thus the Lord has blessed the work spiritually. There have also, amid great struggles, been temporal blessings. Thus we have, during the last year and a half, obtained for this school a Seminary building and forty acres of land with it, together worth $15,000. We have also subscriptions and promises of money from Swedish Baptists which may amount to twenty-five or thirty thousand dollars, though much more on paper, and we have been able with the aid of a few hundred dollars from American friends, to meet the current expenses so far. But just now we are hard pressed because of a small indebtedness on the building since last year. Other small indebtednesses have been paid. We have a good class of students for the ministry present, and hope to be able to open academic instruction, with a tolerably full faculty, by next fall. We need aid of friends of Christian education if we shall succeed. The subscriptions and promises are on time, and will not be very productive until they are paid, but we hope to increase them gradually.

At the request of a friend who has liberally aided us, we desire, through the kindness of the Cynosure, to make known our existence and our needs to brethren of a like faith and of like principles with ourselves, who are readers of that valuable paper: i. e., to Baptists who greatly prize the Bible in ministerial education, and who would not for conscience' sake be members of secret lodges or favor such membership in the churches of Christ.

We will gladly by letter answer any inquiries that might be made concerning this institution. Yours truly in Christ, J. A. EDGREN.

A GOOD ENDORSEMENT.

WASHINGTON, Iowa, Oct. 12, 1886.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—At a meeting of the Iowa Presbytery of the Reformed Presbyterian church, held at Avery, Iowa, Rev. C. F. Hawley, agent of the Christian Association opposed to secret societies for the State of Iowa, being present, responded to an invitation to address the Presbytery. After his address the Presbytery adopted the following resolution:

That this court has heard with satisfaction the address of Rev. C. F. Hawley, State agent of Iowa Christian Association opposed to secret societies, and bid him God-speed in the good work of seeking to overthrow the lodge power in this State.

S. A. H. WYLLIE,
Clerk of Presbytery.

—Mrs. General Grant last week received from Webster & Co., the publishers of the General's memoirs, a check for $150,000, being the second payment on account of the profits of the work. The former payment was $200,000. Mr. Webster said that probably within a few months Mrs. Grant would receive $100,000 more. The check paid represents the collections on the book up to date.

THE HOME.

THE LAST WALK IN AUTUMN.

I know not how, in other lands,
The changing seasons come and go;
What splendours fall on Syrian sands,
What purple lights on Alpine snow!
Nor how the pomp of sunrise waits
On Venice at her watery gates;
A dream alone to me is Arno's vale,
And the Alhambra's halls are but a traveler's tale.

At times I long for gentler skies,
And bathe in dreams of softer air,
But homesick tears would fill the eyes
That saw the Cross without the Bear.
The pine must whisper to the palm,
The north wind break the tropic calm;
And with the dreamy languor of the Line,
The North's keen virtue hieud, and strength to beauty join.

Home of my heart! to me more fair
Than gay Versailles or Windsor's halls,
The painted, shingly town-house, where
The freeman's vote for Freedom falls!
The simple roof where prayer is made,
Than Gothic groin and colonnade;
The living temple of the heart of man,
Than Rome's sky-mocking vault, or many-spired Milan.

More dear thy equal village schools,
Where rich and poor the Bible read,
Than classic halls where priest-craft rules,
And Learning wears the chains of Creed;
Thy glad thanksgiving, gathering in
The scattered sheaves of home and kin,
Than the mad license following Lenten pains,
Or holidays of slaves who laugh and dance in chains.

And sweet homes nestle in these dales,
And perch along these wooded swells;
And, hiest beyond Arcadian vales,
They hear the sound of Sabbath bells!
Here dwells no perfect man sublime,
Nor woman winged before her time,
But with the faults and follies of the race,
Old home-bred virtues hold their not unhonored place.

Then let the icy north wind blow
The trumpets of the coming storm;
To arrowy sleet and blinding snow
Yon slanting lines of rain transform.
Young hearts shall shud the drifted cold,
As gaily as did I old;
And I, who watch them through the frosty pane,
Uncensured, live in them my boyhood o'er again.

And I will trust that He who heeds
The life that hides in mead and wold,
Who hangs yon alder's crimson beads,
And stains these mosses green and gold,
Will still, as he hath done, incline
His gracious care to me and mine;
Grant what we ask aright, from wrong debar,
And, as the earth grows dark, make brighter every star!

PRIME MINISTERS ON SABBATH OBSERVANCE.

A circular is being issued by the British Workingmen's Lord's Day Rest Association, in opposition to the two motions introduced in Parliament for opening museums on Sabbaths, which gives the opinions of late eminent Prime Ministers on this question as follows. The Earl of Beaconsfield, in voting against the Sabbath Opening of Museums, said in the House of Lords: "Of all divine institutions, the most divine is that which secures a day of rest for man. I hold it to be the most valuable blessing ever conceded to man. It is the corner-stone of civilization, and its removal might even affect the health of the people. It [the opening of museums on Sabbaths] is a great change, and those who suppose for a moment that it could be limited to the proposal of the noble Baron to open museums, will find that they are mistaken." Mr. Gladstone has always voted against the Sabbath opening of the British Museums, etc., and in reply to a deputation in March, 1869, he said: "The religious observance of Sabbath is a main prop of the religious character of the country. From a moral, social and physical point of view, the observance of Sabbath is a duty of absolute consequence." In a letter dated the 13th of January, 1876, Mr. Gladstone wrote as follows to Mr. C. Hill: "Believing in the authority of the Lord's day as a religious institution, I must, as a matter of course, desire the recognition of that authority by others. But over and above this, I have myself, in course of a laborious life, signally experienced both its mental and its physical benefits. I can hardly overstate its value in this view, and for the interest of the workmen of this country alike in these and yet in other, yet higher respects, there is nothing I more anxiously desire than that they should more and more highly appreciate the Christian day of rest."—Exchange.

HOW BEST TO DEFEND THE SABBATH.

It is manifest that we Christians must make the most of the Sabbath in our homes and in our churches, if, at least, we mean to conserve it in our cities and in our States. So soon as we become careless and indifferent about it, the one reason for the selection of the first day of the week, rather than any other for the day of periodic rest, will disappear. If there had been no Ark of the Covenant in the inner sanctuary of the Tabernacle, there would have been no outer covering of curtains round the Tabernacle court. And so soon as, in the holy of holies of the church, the Sabbath is disregarded, the curtain of legislation that encloses its outer court of rest will be removed. The responsibility rests on us, therefore. We are in the Thermopylae of this conflict to stem the incursions of the enemy that would take it from us; and we are to do so, not so much by weapons of legislation as by our own earnest and holy Sabbath-keeping. Our conduct here will do more even than our words. Let us make the day the happiest of the week in all our homes. Let us prize it for its intellectual and spiritual stimulus in the house of God, as well as for its physical rest. Let us avoid all travelling for business or driving for amusement in its sacred hours. Let us regard it, not as a restraint to be chafed under, but as a precious gift to be religiously guarded from all sacrilegious hands. And then we shall have nothing to fear from any influence in the land.—Dr. Wm. Taylor.

A SABBATH FOR THE CHILDREN.

As to the question, what to do on Sunday with the little ones who are too young to read. It is true that if the mother spends all her spare time reading and talking to them, Sunday is anything but a day of rest to her, and the children are apt to get nervous and restless, and by night are too "cross for anything." But we recognize that the day must be made different from others. It ought to be the pleasantest and sunniest of the whole week. I know of one family in which the custom was adopted of giving some trifling present on Sunday morning at the breakfast-table. It was often nothing more than an orange or a bunch of white grapes or a paper doll, but, slight as it was, it marked the day and made it one to be pleasantly anticipated. The experiment has been tried of having Sunday toys, or a book of Sunday pictures, not to be brought out except on that day. Noisy plays should be forbidden—the croquet set and the carts should be put away. If the little girls have their dolls, they are not to make dresses for them, but only to take care of them, just as mamma takes care of the baby on Sunday. It is carefully explained to the little ones that when they get old enough to read they will be "too big" to play on Sunday. All this sets apart the day as one of quiet enjoyment, and prepares them to understand real Sabbath-keeping when they grow up. Happy that family where the father, perhaps too busy through the week to get much acquainted with his children, takes an hour or two of the precious Sunday-time to talk or read to them. We hear a great deal of the value of the mother's influence—the father's ought to be just as valuable. The children need the invigorating influence of another mind, fresh from a new sphere of thought and action. Papa's stories are different from mamma's and so refresh the children. While the weary mother steals away, out of all the children's chatter and confusion (so necessary and yet so wearisome when you hear it all the time) for a precious quiet hour or two all by herself, she has the inexpressible comfort of feeling that the children are not left to hear the gossip of servants, but are being taught in some things even better than she could do it. Our younger children are sometimes too much left to feminine influence. The servants and their day and Sunday-school teachers are almost always women; good and faithful ones they may be, but the children need the masculine element of strength and enterprise to supplement the feminine teachings of docility and gentleness. One balances and completes the other. The girls ought to be stimulated and strengthened in character by contact with their father's mind; the boys should learn from his example what true manliness is. They see sham manliness enough every week-day among their school-fellows. To our busy business and workmen, Sunday is the only time they have to really reach their children. The fact that papa is to be at home all day ought to be the very biggest and best treat of the whole happy Sunday-time. I heard a four-year-old "tot" say, last night, in the midst of the bed-time frolic: "Oh, isn't it most time for Thursday to come again? I think Thursday is best of all."

Do not be troubled. Children can be taught to be orderly without becoming precise little prigs, and they can have jolly good times without being riotous.—Mary Blake in Scribner.

HOW LOTTIE HELPED.

"Did you ever see such a looking room!" The sharply accented exclamation sprang from the red lips of a young girl as she crossed the threshold of the red farm-house kitchen on her way to school.

Very pretty and wholesome Lottie Emery looked as she came lightly tripping downstairs, across the shaded, orderly dining-room, in her airy suit of nun's veiling and graceful sun-hat knotted about with a wide, blue sash.

Early risers were the inmates of this busy farmhouse; and not three-fourths of an hour before, Lottie had left that same wide, low-ceiled kitchen in "apple-pie" order, which was her favorite term for scrupulous neatness and orderly arrangement of a room.

"Cleaning up" after breakfast was always Lottie's work, and so, too, was the care of the dining room and chambers. Very seldom did the old Townsend clock, perched on one end of the kitchen mantel, whirl for eight o'clock in the long summer mornings but found Lottie's tasks neatly accomplished and she at liberty to commence her half-mile walk to school.

This morning it wasn't quite eight, yet beds had been aired and made, chambers and kitchen put to rights, and the dining-room swept and dusted, fresh flowers picked for the parlor vases, and she, lunch-basket and book-strap in hand, ready for school; but on the kitchen threshold she paused in dismay. "Such a looking room! Who did it?"

Well, that great stack of milk pans, smeared with bonny-clabber inside and out, that Lottie's tired-faced mother had just brought from the milk-cellar and piled into the sink till leisure—no, not leisure who ever heard of leisure in a farm-house kitchen in the summer time?—till she found a hurried opportunity to wash them—helped in the confusion; and that litter of ash-shavings by the wood-box, that father Emery had scattered there not ten minutes before, as he whittled an ox-goad while he chatted with "mother" a moment, added to the chaos; and the unwashed churn, also from the milk-cellar, with dasher and ladle and dripping butter paddles tilted across its top, waiting for those same tireless mother hands and hot water, added not a little to the disorderly state of affairs; and the overturned box of red bell-peppers in the open window, with dirt-sifting along the ledge and across the floor—the combined work of a hungry, foraging hen and the June breeze—helped in the clutter; and a big slop-pail by the sink, and a train of little slops across the floor leading from the well to the water pail rest on the sink-board told even Rover, as he indignantly lifted his clumsy feet from the slops to track them across the bell-pepper's dirt-sifting over the floor, that careless Fred had for once brought his mother a pail of water.

But this patient, busy mother, where was she? A pile of pie-plates, flanking the heaped pan of flour on the long kitchen table, another pan of prepared pumpkin and prepared "mixing" and cream gave promise that pies were underway. The cellar door standing open, and the big dinner pot jarring its iron cover with imprisoned steam, and a flank of corned beef over the hot stove, noisily testified that the house mother was in the cellar foraging for vegetables.

"I should think mother would stifle working all the forenoon in this sweltering kitchen!" Lottie exclaimed, reaching for her sun umbrella that hung on the wall.

"Better help her by putting the kitchen" to rights," whispered the little voice that sometimes gives an unpleasant jog to our thoughts. "You will have plenty of time before school, and only think of the surprise and pleasure it would give her!"

A little scowl came between Lottie's pretty blue eyes. "It's not my work to wash the milk-dishes, nor is it my fault if the kitchen is all in a clutter. I am sure I put it in apple-pie order not an hour ago"—the little foot poised over the plank door-step.

"For even Christ pleased not himself."

Why should that Scripture passage flash in mind just then?—the day's verse on the bright-colored calendar that hung just under the clock. Lottie had read it with a quick glance as she paused in her dusting to tear off vestryday's leaf.

"But it is so stifling hot here, and I have hurried all the morning to finish my work that I might walk to school before the sun gets scorching high in the heavens; besides, mother doesn't expect me to help her."

"Then give her a pleasant surprise as well as rest, by setting the kitchen in order before she comes in," buzzed the little voice close at hand.

"Pleased not Himself."

The red letters of the calendar seemed to glow before Lottie's eyes, but it wasn't that; it was only those red bell-peppers that had toppled on to the floor from the window-sill.

"I'll do it. Mother will have her hands full with the vegetables and pies and the dinner. It's a pity if I am not willing to give her a little extra lift in the work now and then."

The shade hat went up on a nail with a toss; off came the dainty cuffs and tiny ruffled apron, and in place—broadly covering the neat school dress—went on her big checked apron.

"I hope mother will dress the vegetables before she comes into the kitchen, and then I shall have plenty of time to straighten things before she sees it," thought Lottie, softly latching the cellar door, that the clatter of pans and whisk of the broom might not reach her mother's ears.

A shadow fell across the kitchen window, and looking up Lottie saw her mother carrying from the roll-away a basket of vegetables, carefully selected from last year's sand-packed supplies, to the cool shade of the lilac trees in the back yard, there to dress them for the dinner-pot.

Broom and dish-cloth, wing and dust-pan—how they flew that next half-hour!

The warped, forked hand of the old clock pointed the quarter to nine before the jaunty sun-hat came down, and Lottie lightly tripped through the red-framed door-way of the kitchen on her way to school.

A little later in the day, deep in the intricacies of geometry and the bewildering dates of history, in the cooler temperature of the breezy school-room, out of mind went the remembrance of her morning's kindness. Only once she thought of it, and that was in the noon-hour when little Johnny Andrews confidentially whispered to a class mate that "Ma is going to have a 'biled dish' for supper."

Lottie smiled, thinking of the vegetables she had seen losing their rough coats in the shadow of the lilac trees that morning; and "I wonder what mother said when she came in and found the revolution in her kitchen!" was the thought that set her bright eyes dancing as she passed to her desk.

"Dear child! God bless the dear child!" was just what her mother said as she entered the kitchen heated and tired, wearily thinking of the work that must be met before noon.

Oh, it was such a help, and so restful for that hurried, discouraged mother to find her kitchen in order, and her sink cleared of its stock of milk-pans.

"The dear, dear child!" Lottie little knew how often she was in her mother's thoughts that day, and how her loving attempt to lift a burden from her mother set a little bird singing in that heart all day as she toiled; for love lightens labor, and these mothers never forget, never overlook or cease to hunger for expressions of love and sympathy from the dear ones of their household unto whom they minister unceasingly and uncomplainingly; but in many and many a home, all too late, this lovingly expressed sympathy and tender care come.

When the tired feet are still, the hands crossed in strange whiteness and idleness, the sweet lips, that never before in all our lifetime refused to answer us or be dumb to our entreaties, mute and cold; then all too late, we wake to her worth, and bitterly regret we had not "made more of mother" when she was with us!—Quiver.

TEMPERANCE.

THE STORY OF HADDOCK'S MURDER.

[Chicago Daily News.]

SIoux CITY, Iowa, Oct. 10.—Unpretentious tomb stones in widely separated cities of Iowa mark the graves of two martyrs to the cause of temperance. The first tragedy—the assassination of Lawyer Pierce at Dubuque twenty-five years ago—is a fast fading reminiscence. He had been in court that day prosecuting saloon-keepers for violating the old prohibitory law, and was shot down at night almost within the shadow of his home. He was never avenged. The second tragedy—the murder of the Rev. George C. Haddock at a dismal intersection of the main street of Sioux City one night more than two months ago—was the result of the same cause and a similar conspiracy; but such was the sensation of horror it excited that the lapse of time has vivified rather than abated the memory. In the latter case there is every reason to believe that the mystery will eventually be solved and the criminal punished.

To-night, if you were here and possessed by the spirit of inquiry, you would find the back door of every saloon in the city wide open in utter defiance and contempt of law, and prosperous. Were you to prosecute your investigation to any extent it would be impossible for you to avoid meeting a big, broad-shouldered German, plain of dress, and of a sunny pleasant countenance. From one saloon to another he has been nervously flitting all day and evening, and everywhere he goes his friends are legion. In his hand-shake you would detect a lingering, clinging fervency, a mute appeal for the confidence which guilty men often seek without hope. While one after another assures him that he is incapable of such a deed, you would hear him utter little more than an echo of their words or an invitation for a fresh drink. He swallows his portion quickly, anxiously, though with a smile, but the eyes, red and swollen from nervous prostration, would look vacantly into the distance beyond you. All these things you would observe only to wonder whether this John Arnesdorf, with his open, honest face and unflinching blue eyes, is a mental sufferer from remorse or unjust disgrace. And then perhaps you would decide that if it were he who killed Dr. Haddock on the night of Aug. 3, the crime was the consequence not of premeditation but of accident.

Arnesdorf is a brewer—rich, public-spirited, of excellent business repute, and popular. His character has stood without a blemish in the community for years, and against mere suspicion he would be invulnerable. His accuser, Harry L. Leavitt, distinguished as having been the keeper of a disreputable variety theater, is immured in one of the leading hotels. He arrived in a buggy this afternoon in the custody of Sheriff MacDonald and accompanied by D. W. Wood, the chief attorney in the prosecution of the liquor cases. His position is not alone awkward, but dangerous, and he realizes it so fully that he has exacted pledges of official protection for every hour of his stay. Among the desperate saloon classes the feeling against him is bitter in the extreme. An attempt to do him harm would be no surprise. Confined in jail is a rambling, irresponsible painter named Lange, who is expected to corroborate his statements. Of further substantiation the prosecution speak with great confidence, but they decline to make any more disclosures until they are demanded in the preliminary examination which begins Monday. Leavitt's confession is weak where he endeavors to exculpate himself, but strong in material evidence as to the manner of the crime and the identity of the perpetrator. The testimony given before the coroner, taken with previous facts and Leavitt's subsequent admissions, makes an interesting digest.

When Dr. Haddock set out to rid the community of the saloon evil he found that he must become prosecutor, so apathetic was the prohibition feeling here, outside of the sturdy little band that tendered him personal support. From one step to another he had progressed until case after case was piled up in the courts against the offenders. Murderous mutterings were heard on all sides, but he was an athletic man and assured his friends that he had no fear. On Aug. 2, however, while in court as a prosecuting witness, he noticed a face that alarmed him. It was that of Leavitt. "Wood," said he, turning to the attorney, "I see some one out there that I think is after me—an old enemy from Wisconsin. I wish you would ask the court to grant me the privilege of carrying a revolver." Wood only laughed.

Leavitt was at that time arranging to reopen his theatre, and expected to renew his liquor traffic. Noted for shrewdness, he was singled out by the saloon men, first for a confidant and next for a leader. That very night he was elected a member of their association. After the adjournment he entered into a conspiracy with Fred Muncrath, George Treiber, Louis Plath, and others to hire thugs to waylay and beat Mr. Walker, a prohibition witness, and Dr. Haddock. One hundred dollars was the sum to be paid. Two saloon "bummers" were engaged, but they failed to carry out their agreement when Leavitt pointed Walker out to them. The following night—Aug. 3—Dr. Haddock and Dr. Turner, another divine, took a buggy at a stable adjoining the Columbia house on Water, only a few yards from 4th street, and went to the Greenville house, a short distance from town, to procure fresh evidence for a pending injunction proceeding. Meanwhile George Treiber had hired two Germans for the intended assault, and had stationed them at Junk's saloon to await an opportunity.

When it was learned that the two pastors had gone to Greenville, Leavitt and three accomplices followed in a hack, but without avail. Upon returning to Junk's saloon they found a large crowd of saloon men eagerly awaiting their expected revenge and discussing it. Arnesdorf was in the saloon, as were James Scollard, Ald. Robert Grady, and Lange, the imprisoned painter. Presently Leavitt, Treiber, Plath, and a German named Henry, the driver of Arnesdorf's brewing wagon, walked out on the sidewalk. Arnesdorf followed. As he appeared the two hired assailants approached and said loud enough for everybody in the neighborhood to hear: "The buggy has come back." Then the party moved down the street toward the stable. Lange, whose curiosity was aroused by what he overheard, is said to have gone behind.

It was a dark night, rainy and miserable, an ideal night for the crime it has so long concealed. Dr. Haddock, leaving Dr. Turner at home, repaired to the barn. "Anybody looking for me?" he asked the liveryman, with seeming premonition of his fate. Answered in the negative, he buttoned his rubber coat to the neck and strode out into the darkness, pointing diagonally for the intersection of the two streets. A distant electric light threw a faint glow on the fateful spot. Back of him about 150 yards a man sat at a second-story window of the fire station, looking in the direction whence he was going. Ahead of him about the same distance another man was peering into the night from the second-story of a dwelling. In the shadow of a high board fence on the opposite side of Water street was the crowd of conspirators.

As Dr. Haddock reached the middle of the street and a point near the crossing a muffled figure walked out of the gloom and accosted him. From this point the testimony conflicts. The next instant, however, there was a pistol-shot, and the conspirators went scampering in all directions, like rats frightened from their prey. Leavitt says it was Arnesdorf who went out to meet Dr. Haddock, and his description of the ensuing tragedy is that Arnesdorf attempted to satisfy himself of the minister's identity by raising his hand in front of him so as to attract his attention; that the latter pulled something from his pocket quickly and dealt Arnesdorf a staggering blow over the head; that Arnesdorf clutched the minister by the coat-lap and swung him round behind him to evade a repetition of the blow, and that, while in that position, Arnesdorf pulled his pistol and shot Dr. Haddock in the side of the neck. The wound severed the jugular, and Dr. Haddock reeled into the gutter dead. His cane was found on one side, and the slungshot with which he defended himself—an iron gear-wheel depending from a stout rope—on the other. The man in the dwelling house window materially verifies the story of the encounter, and testifies that the man who did the shooting ran off down the street and across the bridge to the Arnesdorf brewery. He couldn't identify the murderer, but described him as "the big brewery man." In contradiction of all this the witness from the fire station was positive he saw a man walk up and shoot Dr. Haddock from behind.

At the inquest not one of the principals of the conspiracy, according to Leavitt's confession, truthfully answered a direct or leading question, and even he himself, according to the shorthand notes, avowed that he didn't know how, or by whom, the crime was committed. Because of this fact he is now accused of perjury, and his confession will have little weight without strong corroborative evidence to sustain it. It is an undisputed truth that the inquest was a farce designed to hide rather than expose the crime, and to-night Leavitt made the startling declaration that not half the witnesses were sworn, and that he was among the exempted.

Lange is altogether a mysterious character in the prosecution. He has little reputation for veracity. Plied with liquor one night, he related to M. Stone, the city editor of the Tribune, precisely the same story that Leavitt subsequently told without knowledge of what Lange had done. When it was printed he repudiated it and professed to know nothing of the affair. Stone and Mr. Kelly, the editor, were dragged before the jury, and in view of Lange's disavowal were constrained under oath to testify that they believed the story groundless. Later on, though, Lange is said to have broken down and confessed to Sheriff MacDonald, in properly attested form, the truthfulness of what he had previously said in confidence. This document is still in the possession of the sheriff. Lange followed the conspirators, and it is said, can identify the man who fired the fatal bullet. Whether he will or not remains to be seen, though Sheriff MacDonald intimated, when closely questioned to-day, that Lange would substantiate Leavitt's testimony.

The most important figure among the conspirators, however, has disappeared. This is Henry, the brewery wagon driver. He is said to have walked out toward Arnesdorf, and Dr. Haddock when the scuffle began to render his employer assistance, and reached the scene just in time to witness the discharge of the pistol. Leavitt says that next day Arnesdorf expressed the intention of sending Henry back to Germany at once. Persons living across the street from the brewery tell a weird story of a blasphemous altercation three nights after the tragedy, in which Henry's voice was recognized, and the appearance of a new driver on the wagon seat next day. This is ornamented with all sorts of horrible surmises in which beer vats and furnaces are indiscriminately mingled. But, however little there may be in these sensational speculations, it is true that Henry is gone, nobody knows whither, and that it is incumbent on Arensdorf, if he purposes to clearly establish his innocence, to produce him.

It is anticipated that Arensdorf will try to prove an alibi, but Ald. Grady will probably tell that Arensdorf started down the street with the crowd not to exceed fifteen minutes before the shot was heard. Leavitt is supposed to be withholding considerable valuable information for the hearing. Wherever Arensdorf is thought to be guilty there is offered in mitigation the belief that he never purposed committing murder. Dr. Haddock, despite his years, was a supple, powerful man. Indeed, it is admitted on all sides that no one man in the conspiracy could have executed the plan to mutilate without killing him. Arensdorf knew the doctor's prowess. If it was Arensdorf who met him, he was doubtless both surprised and alarmed at the blow he received, and then did what the legal mind would set up as an act of self-defense. At least that is the theory.

Arensdorf has been admitted to bail in the sum of $25,000 on a charge of murder and in the sum of $20,000 on a charge of conspiracy.

SIoux CITY AFTER THE MURDER.

Rev. M. A. Gault, agent of the National Reform Association, writes of a recent visit to Sioux City in the Western Crank of College Springs, Iowa. His letter below is of startling interest:

I secured a cabinet photo of Rev. Geo. C. Haddock, who was assassinated here on the night of August 3d. Major Macdonald took me down to the corner of Fourth and Water streets and pointed out the spot where he was shot, and where he fell into the gutter. I plucked a spear of grass which grew where a pool of his blood lay. The Major said with emotion, "I have seen many a man die on the battlefield, but it never made the sad impression it did that night to elbow my way through the crowd and look down upon that pale face as the body lay in the gas-light covered with a rubber blanket."

I spent an evening with Mrs. Haddock, and also talked with the pastors and leading business men. I found things to be in a deplorable condition. John Pierce, a large real estate owner, said to me, "I was once a church member, but I have given it up. I do not like the way they manage. They make far too much noise about this Haddock matter, and it is injuring the city. Real estate has fallen fearfully since that affair, and it has only made the saloons more defiant, for they are now running with both front and back doors open on Sunday. If Haddock had been attending to his own business he would not have been shot. I wish you could hear how we talk business in the lodge. We say to the thug and the gambling element as well as to the prohibition cranks, stand aside and leave the way clear for us to build up this city." Mr. Pierce is a sample of the majority of business men of Sioux City. They seem disposed to sacrifice everything to build up Sioux City, and because they think the saloon element is building it up, they virtually say to them, "Go in, boys, we will stand by you."

I asked Bro. Merrill, one of Bro. Haddock's most intimate friends, if Bro. Haddock was a member of any lodge. He replied, "No, he never belonged to any secret society, neither had he any policy in a life insurance company, and this is why some of our business men say that we are making too much ado over his death." Mrs. Haddock said to me, "You have no idea what we endured for months before he was killed. They had threatened to burn our church, and every night Mr. H. would go out with his cane about twelve o'clock, and go around the building examining every corner, and I was always in terror until he came in. One night he had arisen before I awoke, and when I put my arm over and found him gone, I was badly frightened." Mrs. H. is a well built, strong-minded woman, and bears her awful bereavement with calm, Christian resignation.

Sioux City is the worst place I was ever in. I was entertained at the home of Mr. Merrill, but as his residence was reached by a private street where there was no gas-light, I was told that it was dangerous for a stranger to be out in such places after night, so I put up at the Hubbard House. Bro. Chase, the Congregational pastor, told me he did what he never did before, carried a revolver, and seldom went out after dark. He said, "We are just entering upon the fight here, and it is my impression that others of us must fall before we get through."

PRESS COMMENT.

The third biennial meeting of the Grand Lodge of Odd-fellows was held in this city last week. Mr. James S. Douglas, in his address of welcome, said, among other things, that "the secrets of the order were only its passwords and signs of recognition, and that its principles and objects were open to the world." And yet we do not doubt that if any one were to make objections to the order, Mr. Douglas would say that, not being an Odd-fellow, he knew nothing about them. If they have nothing concealed but their passwords and signs of recognition, and if their principles and objects are open to the world, then it is plain that any intelligent person who tries to inform himself may know all about them except their passwords and signs of recognition. This, however, is just what Odd-fellows have been wont to deny.—Christian Instructor.

But Mr. George must do as his constituents desire, as must every man elected to office. He is the nominee of the Labor Unions and must serve them or be without support; and the man who undertakes to administer the affairs of this city needs strong and steadfast support. The mayor of New York has a large appointing power. What do the unions hope to do through Mr. George? From whom do they expect him to make appointments? But some of the speakers did make, without discrimination, an attack upon the owners of property. Is that what is to be expected if Mr. George is elected? All sensible men must have read the report of the meeting with a feeling of disappointment. No indication was afforded of how the dissension between labor and capital is to be allayed, none of how the condition of the workingman is to be improved.—Christian Intelligencer.

Our politicians are distressed at the immense annual surplus in our treasury. As a nation, we receive $160,000,000 per annum more than we spend. At this rate we can pay all our three per cents off within a year. But the four and four and a half per cents will not be payable for five years to come. What, then, shall be done with our surplus? The high tariff people say, abolish the internal revenue taxes on liquor and tobacco. But the nation will never omit its taxes upon those two hurtful products, until at least one of them, liquor, is stopped being manufactured in the country. The manufacturers protest against lowering the tariff. Indeed, were it reduced, the increased consumption might add to our revenue. So the problem is, in what way shall we get rid of our surplus? The country will not tolerate waste. Why not, then, spend the money in public improvements. We ought to have a foreign commerce, defenses for our seaport cities, then our rivers and harbors might be improved. Why not turn the Erie Canal into a ship canal, and construct the Hennepin Canal, thus connecting the waters of the Mississippi with the lakes and the ocean? A series of artesian wells might be drilled on the western plains, thus making habitable millions of acres of land now sterile. We have a vast country calling for improvement, and there need be no trouble about spending our surplus, if we laid it out for public works.—Demorest's Monthly.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—Rev. John A. Wilson, for years pastor of the First United Presbyterian church in St. Louis, has notified his congregation that he will offer his resignation at next meeting of presbytery with a view of accepting a most hearty and unanimous call from the U. P. congregation of Wooster, Ohio. The latter has been without a settled pastor since the death of Dr. D. A. Wallace.

—The Springfield Republican says that the evangelist, Dwight L. Moody, will probably go west for a time, before long. It adds: "Chicago people have sent an urgent call, but his going depends on the amount of money raised in that city for building a Biblical training-school, which is to be supplementary to the Mt. Hermon Institution. About $175,000 have been raised, but Mr. Moody has put his foot down for $250,000, and it is likely to be forthcoming."

—The report of the United Presbyterian Synod of Iowa in the Instructor says: "On the subject of adherence to our principles the report was favorable, especially in regard to secret associations. Only twenty persons throughout the entire synod are known to belong to any secret association, and only one of these a Mason. There are few or none who are not in principle prohibitionists. On this latter point this is a good and honorable showing for our church in Iowa. On the former it has to be admitted that it is difficult for ministers to ascertain the truth, and it is to be feared that the showing is more favorable than the actual facts."

—Jones, the Georgia Evangelist, commenced revival services in the Mutual street rink, Toronto, October 7th. Over three thousand persons were present. The revivalist was assisted by a choir of about four hundred voices, led by Prof. Maxwell, of Cincinnati. Prof. Excell, of Chicago, also took part in the singing. The services will be continued three weeks.

—At the meeting of the Presbyterian ministers of Chicago last week, Rev. Dr. Herrick Johnson read a paper entitled, "High License Weighed in the Balance and Found Wanting." The speaker granted that high license produced more revenue, but thought that the claim that it decreased the number of saloons was debatable. He also denied emphatically that high license gave a better class of saloons or that it caused less drinking. That it was a step in favor of prohibition Dr. Johnson also denied, and asserted that the proportion of arrests for drunkenness had gradually increased for the past three years. More than this, the high license theory does not grapple with the great moral evil of drunkenness, and is, he thinks, politically and morally unsound.

—The Illinois Free Methodist conference met this year in Sheffield, Ill., Rev. B. T. Roberts, of New York, presiding. Revs. C. B. Ebey, of Aurora, Ill., J. D. Marsh, of Evanston, and J. Hardin, of St. Charles, were the secretaries. A healthy growth was reported from the churches. Rev. C. B. Ebey was appointed chairman of the Fox River and Rock River districts.

—At the quadrennial session of the American Christian conference, held in New Bedford, Mass., the following officers were elected: President, D. A. Long, Ohio; Secretary, J. J. Summerbell, New Jersey. It was voted to move the publishing house from Dayton, Ohio, to Chicago.

—The great island of Hainan, off the southern coast of China, is largely inhabited by aboriginal tribes who are much more impressive by Christian truth than the Chinese. The American Presbyterian Board began work there two years ago, and already twelve persons have been baptized, and there are forty inquirers. The openings for Christian work are said to be most encouraging.

—Recently the Prime Minister of Siam and his sons and some young women visited the Presbyterian chapel at Petchaburi. He sat grave and silent through the service, including a sermon on the divinity of Christ, smoking cigarettes and chewing betel. The women were intensely interested.

—Germany has at the present day no small part in the missionary work of the world. There are twelve German societies laboring in India, China, Africa, the East Indies, Australia, and Palestine. They are represented by 517 missionaries at 342 stations, are employing 2,560 native agents, and have in charge 193,975 native Christians. Of these, 72,000 are communicants, while 40,643 children are taught in their 790 schools. The total contributions of these societies last year were $1,276,800.

—The Rev. J. Macgowan, of the London Missionary Society, writes from China: "It is wonderful to watch the Gospel operating out in this Eastern land, just as it does in England. The Chinese naturally know nothing of sin. The Bible idea of sin does not exist in this land, and it is difficult to get inquirers to understand it. Yet here in a group awaiting baptism are a number of men brought up in heathenism, talking about sin, and confessing themselves guilty of it, just as though they had been familiar with the idea all their lives. The history of one of the men baptized is interesting. He is about forty-eight; is a doctor by profession. For twenty-six years he was an opium-eater. Ten years ago he got a copy of John's Gospel. He at once gave up idolatry, but took no steps to become a Christian. Last year a native Christian induced him in a conversation to become a worshiper of God. He was told he must give up his opium. He had the opium-eaters' belief that death would result from an attempt to give it up. After some hesitation he at length resolved, 'From this instant I will give up my opium and never touch it again.' He suffered terribly. One evening his wife thought he was dying, and bought some opium to save his life. Though racked with agony he would not touch it. After ten days of terrible suffering he was a free man. He continues the practice of his profession and preaches the Gospel wherever he goes."

LODGE NOTES.

Allegany County Reporter of Wells-ville, N. Y., closes a long account of an Eastern Star Masonic performance with the following disgusting paragraph, which is printed here only to show how near the line of immorality female Masonry is regarded by unregenerate men: "The ladies were exceedingly lively. They had to be. They couldn't help it. This came from the fact that the complete initiation into this degree required that each lady should be branded with a red-hot star. Dr. Kahle performed this extremely delicate part of the initiation with a combined skill and modesty that drew forth volumes of praise. In fact the ladies scarcely 'kicked,' and not one of them complained. After the banquet at the ladies couldn't sit still on account of the star), the company indulged in dancing for a couple of hours, when the special train bore away the guests from our neighboring towns, to talk over the happy events of the evening, to feel that the world was indeed making headway at last, and to dream of * * * 11!"

A London correspondent says: "Dissension has broken out between the only two German anarchists' clubs in London, and threatens to lead to violence. One of the clubs has the Freiheit as its organ, and a Belgian named Dave, as its leader. Dave is an intimate friend of Johann Most. The other club, named Autonomic, has the Anarchist as its organ, and an Austrian named Penckert, as leader. Only three weeks ago the two clubs met in Cleveland Hall and expressed sympathy with the Chicago anarchists. Now they have drawn daggers against each other."

In 1876, says a Boston dispatch, a rupture occurred between the American and English grand bodies of Good Templars, caused, as claimed by the English, by the question of the admission of colored people into the order. Since then there have been two international courts, one mainly American, the other mainly English, each having branches. Overtures for a reunion of the two sections resulted in a conference in this city in September between representatives of each section, at which the matter was fully discussed. It was decided that no applicant for membership could be rejected by a lodge on account of race or color, nor could lodges deny visitations on such account. It was then resolved the two Supreme Courts—the R. G. W. lodges—should each hold its next session at Saratoga on the fourth Tuesday of May, 1887, the two bodies to meet separately to complete unfinished business, and then to meet unitedly and become one body.

A side show at the late St. Louis K. T. conclave is reported in the Tribune of this city. "Two thousand members of the Ancient Arabic Order of Knights of the Mystic Shrine, one of the highest orders of Masonry, are in attendance upon the Knights Templar Conclave. The order is of Arabic origin, and, as the Arabic year ended to-night at twelve o'clock, the initiatory services at that hour partake of unusual interest. Two hundred candidates, mostly from this city, were initiated. The ceremonies were conducted under the auspices of Medina Temple of Chicago, assisted by the Imperial Potentate, Samuel Briggs, of Cleveland, Ohio. All of the paraphernalia, costumes, and jewels being in Chicago, those of the local temple were utilized in conferring the order upon the candidates. The elaborate costumes, rich jewels, mystic emblems and rites rendered the services most impressive. Previous to the ceremonies the shriners, as they call themselves, formed in procession at the Southern Hotel, and paraded the principal down-town streets, each temple being accompanied by a band. The costumes and uniforms were of many varieties, the only article worn in common being the red fez. The two temples which attracted the most attention and received the most generous applause, were those of Baltimore and Chicago—the former appearing in full evening dress, the latter in regular Turkish costume, fez, crimson bag trousers, jackets, etc."

SPECIMEN NUMBERS.—For ten cents we will send the Christian Cynosure for five weeks to any address, thus giving them a chance to examine the paper and subscribe if they think best. *To any one who will renew their subscription for two years twenty cents worth of any of our publications will be sent, or forty cents worth for three years, or sixty cents worth for four years, or eighty cents worth for five years. The renewal of your subscription for several years at a time will benefit you some, but the cause more. Try it!

PLEASE BE PROMPT in paying for your papers. It costs the reform and its friends many dollars every year to send notices that subscriptions have expired, that arrears are due. Five cents is not a large sum by itself, but when it is multiplied by hundreds and thousands, the amount lost to the cause is realized to be great. Can you not inaugurate a reform in this matter, and renew a little before your subscription expires, and if in arrears pay up at once? Would it not be a good thing to do?

THE CLERGY, Their Sermons; THE STUDENT, His Lessons; THE BUSINESS MAN, Items of Business. The author of this work was put to the severest public test, a few days ago, by reporters of all the leading Chicago daily papers. The commendatory notices which appeared the following day showed how well he stood the test:

"The author, an old man, claims to have a memory more to be trusted by training under this system than even while he was young.—CHICAGO INTER-OCEAN.

We cordially commend it to all persons of failing memory as the best book obtainable on that subject.

Most ingenious; enables any one, who familiarizes himself with the system, to carry an immense mass of digested information, ready for production on demand. By experiment we have tested the author's mnemonic resources, and been moved by them to wonder.—ADVANCE.

LUCILLE VERNON.

Cloth.....75 cents.

THIS is a pleasant surprise in many ways. The author is Rev. W. T. Meloy, of the United Presbyterian Church of Chicago, and the book is published by the Board of Publication of his denomination. It is a love story, not "fascinating," but with so much of genial interest that the reader is in no danger of laying it down unfinished. * * * The moral purpose of the book is to describe and vindicate Christian character in its more heroic aspects, and it is a success. We congratulate the author and the United Presbyterian Board of Publication on this literary life of the valley.—The Interior.

"LUCILLE VERNON" is evidently not an ideal sketch, but the fictitious names used represent to great extent real men and women of flesh and blood. The characters of many of them are by no means attractive, but are perfect counterparts of querulous, obstinate and parsimonious professors who are thorns in the flesh of many a pastor in all the churches. But as in all the churches, there were also good and true men and women at Lansington, who upheld and encouraged the pastor. * * * In its author will be recognized the worthy pastor of the First United Presbyterian Church of Chicago, and a welcome contributor to these columns.—United Presbyterian.

The heroine, who becomes the bride of the pastor of the church at Lansington, is a wonderful exemplification of how a woman who is a true wife and help-met may throw her life and energies into the great work of saving souls; aiding, by gentle words and sympathy, wise counsel and brave endurance, the husband, having charge of a congregation where the Demon of Misrule held full sway. We follow with interest the history of the wife and husband through their hours of dependency and discouragement to the happy ending, where religion, harmony and peace have gained the ascendancy and the good man and wife had their reward.—Pittsburgh Daily Telegraph.

NATIONAL SUICIDE,
AND
ITS PREVENTION.

BY OSCAR F. LUMRY, PH. D.

Prof. Lumry's book, "National Suicide and its Remedy," will be read with profit even by those who do not accept his doctrine, taking interest for money loaned, one or more per cent, is sin, taking something for nothing. For, as Goldsmith said of his Vicar of Wakefield,

"E'en his fallings lean to virtue's side."

—Cynosure.

Dr. Lumry is a man of ideas and never fails to make his readers understand just what they are. Every sentiment he writes has such an air of honesty that it will in a measure disarm those who read it critically. It is a good book to set people to thinking, whether they believe his theories or not. The book is well worth a careful reading and study.—Inter Ocean.

On all the points named they differ radically from those which prevail in the organization of society. Either they are true or false. It is a curious fact that all of them have been stigmatized as crazy, and yet nearly all of them have been for some years steadily gaining the adherence of men of intellectual ability.—Times.

HOME HINTS.

TO KEEP APPLES IN WINTER.

The following rough but good way to keep apples in winter, where there is plenty of material, is given in the Practical Farmer: Buckwheat chaff is first spread on the barn-floor, and on this chaff the apples are placed, when they are covered with chaff and straw two or three feet in thickness. Here they remain till spring. It is not stated that the interstices are filled with buckwheat chaff, but this care should be important. The covering and bedding in chaff has several important advantages—it excludes cold, prevents air currents, maintains a uniform temperature, absorbs the moisture of decay, and prevents the decay produced by moisture.

HOW TO KEEP YOUR ROOM.

A look into the chamber of a boy or girl will give one an idea of what kind of a man or woman he or she will probably become. A boy who keeps his clothes hung up neatly, or a girl whose room is always neat, will be apt to make a successful man or woman. Order and neatness are essential to our comfort as well as that of others about us. A boy who throws down his cap or book anywhere, will never keep his accounts in shape, will do things in a slovenly, careless way, and not be long wanted in any position. A girl who does not make her bed until after dinner—and she should always do it herself rather than have a servant do it—and throws her dress or bonnet down on a chair, will make a poor wife nine cases out of ten. If the world could see how a girl keeps her dressing-room, many unhappy marriages would be saved.

THINGS A HOUSEKEEPER SHOULD KNOW.

That salt should be eaten with nuts to aid digestion. That milk which stands too long makes bitter butter. That rusty flat irons should be rubbed over with beeswax and lard. That it rests you in sewing to change your position frequently. That a hot, strong lemonade taken at bed-time will break up a bad cold. That tough beef is made tender by lying a few minutes in vinegar-water. That a little soda will relieve sick headache caused by indigestion. That a cup of strong coffee will remove the odor of onions from the breath. That a cup of hot water drunk before meals will prevent nausea and dyspepsia. That well-ventilated bedrooms will prevent morning headaches and lassitude. That one in a faint should be laid on the flat of his back, then loosen his clothes and let him slone. That consumptive night sweats may be arrested by sponging the body nightly in salt water. That a fever patient can be made cool and comfortable by frequent sponging off with soda-water. That to beat eggs quickly, add a pinch of salt. Salt cools, and cold eggs froth rapidly. That the hair may be kept from falling out after illness, by a frequent application to the scalp of sage-tea. That you can take out spots from wash-goods by rubbing them with the yolk of eggs before washing. That white spots upon varnished furniture will disappear if you hold a hot plate over them.—Family Doctor.

ONE HUNDRED AND THIRTEEN MILES OF ORGANS.—In numbering the organs of their manufacture, Mason & Hamlin have reached No. 160,000. Arranged in a line these would reach one hundred and thirteen miles, or would fence the railroad on one side from the Grand Central Station in New York, to within twenty miles of Springfield, Mass. Not only does this show the great popularity of American organs, but it illustrates what was declared by James Parton to be a general fact, that he who makes the best article in his line always has the greatest success.

We understand that the Mason and Hamlin Company's new Upright Piano is now commanding a large sale, and is, in every way, up to the standard of their unrivaled organs. We predict a large success for this piano, which is constructed on a new system, said to be a decided advance over the prevailing wrest-pin system.—Boston Journal.

The Christian's Secret

A Happy Life.

28th THOUSAND.

Baptist Commendation.

"We are delighted with this book. It reaches to the very core of Christian experience, and is eminently practical in its teaching. It meets the doubts and difficulties of conscientious seekers after the bread and water of life, but whose efforts result only in alternate failure and victory. The author, without claiming to be a theologian, sends out the results of a happy and rich experience, and tells us into a happy Christian life."—Baptist Weekly.

Presbyterian Endorsement.

"The book is so truly and reverentially devout in its spirit that it disarms criticism. It contains so much that is sound and practical, so much that, if heeded, will make our lives better, happier and more useful, that the intelligent reader who really wishes to lead a life 'hid with Christ in God' can scarcely fail to derive profit from its perusal."—Presbyterian.

Methodist Word of Praise.

"We have not for years read a book with more depth and profit. It is not a theological book. No effort is made to change the theological views of any one. The author has a rich experience, and tells it in a plain and delightful manner."—Christian Advocate.

United Brethren's Approval.

"We have seldom met with a more interesting volume, abounding throughout with apt illustrations; we have failed to find a dry line from title-page to finish."—Religious Telescope.

Congregational Comment.

"It contains much clear, plain, reasoning and interesting instruction. It is a practical and experimental lesson taught out of God's word, and is worthy of universal circulation."—Church Union.

Mr. Willey gives the best history of the times just before the present generation, which is precisely the history least to be known. He gives us the surface of the sea under the billows which swept off three million pair of fetters from our national decks. His book shows more accurate insight into the causes which produced the rebellion, and gives more clearly the working of those causes, than any other writer. He shows more clearly the moral force of the ballot and necessity of a new party to carry a fundamental reform than any one who has treated of it. We advise every young man and every reader of the Cynosure to obtain and read that history.—Pres. J. Blanchard.

BETWEEN TWO OPINIONS.

BY E. E. FLAGG.

Author of "Holden with Cords," "A Sunny Life," "Little People," etc.

The Best Story of the Reform.
Price, only $1.00.

Published by THE NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

This latest and best of Miss Flagg's works is now ready in handsome print, neatly bound. The story begins in a quiet New England home, and paints its homely joys with a delicacy and truthfulness worthy the hand of Harriet Beecher Stowe. The scene then changes to a thriving, growing, palpitating young Western city, and with great power and startling accuracy the writer leads us behind the scenes that we may see the machinery that works the liquor traffic and labor troubles. The story of the strike, the mob, the attempted assassination, the saloon-keeper's wives, the curse of his trade, the power of the Christian faith to change him to a messenger of mercy, the criminal and the hidden power that shields him from justice, the land robbers tricks, the dark and secret conspiracies of the lodge—these and all the incidents of the book are portrayed with rare tact and great power of description. It is emphatically a book for the hour. And what is better and yet more striking, the incidents are facts, and every one a powerful and convincing argument against the lodge and the saloon.

Every temperance man and woman should read this book. No temperance story like it was ever planned, much less ably executed. A wonderful light is thrown upon the difficulties in the way of prohibition. Learn how they may be avoided.

Every one who loves to read a good story, chaste and elegant in expression, in thought, true in incident, deeply interesting in its narrative, should read this

READ THESE NOTICES FROM THE PRESS:

The Free Methodist, Chicago.

"Between Two Opinions" is a story, its incidents vouched for as facts, which presents a powerful argument on these questions and must attract thousands of readers among our thinking and observant people. The plot of the story is neither startling nor novel, but it depicts a wonderful strength in following the experiences of people in the common, everyday walks of life.

Free Press, Birmingham, Iowa.

It differs from the popular story, "The Bread-winners" of a year ago. It greatly differs from that book in that it is written from the Christian standpoint, and its beautiful and touching descriptions of home life and home duties and heroic self-denials will awaken a responsive echo in every heart, that has not by disipation lost the taste for the pure joys of home.

The Religious Telescope, Dayton.

The author, Miss Flagg, is a brilliant writer. The stirring questions in American politics are undoubtedly prohibition and the labor movement as championed by the secret unions of working men, which direct the strikes that with more and more frequency occur in our cities. "Between Two Opinions" is a story, its incidents vouched for as facts, which presents a powerful argument on these questions, and must attract thousands of readers among our thinking people.

The Christian Conservator, Dayton.

This is a charming book, written in an attractive manner. It is so full of sunshine and so radiant with light that one is enlightened, warmed, and, before they are conscious of it, set against the lodge. The style gleams, glows and sparkles. It is dignified and simple. It is the right book to place in the hands of your wife or daughter to superinduce co-operation with you in anti-secrecy work. Every minister's wife should read it, and then, if her husband is not an Anti-mason, he should take his turn next and become one.

The American, Washington.

We are reading, in spare moments, Miss Flagg's new book, "Between Two Opinions." And the estimate we have thus far put upon it is that it is masterly both in style and argument. One is insensibly made to feel that he is reading facts and not fiction; that the book is not a play upon the imagination but an unravelling of mysterious circumstances which have important bearing upon current events.

Law and Order, Boston.

The book takes high ground for prohibition of the liquor cure, for woman's ballot for home protection, and for a better and more honest brotherhood than is forced by their obligations upon the members of secret orders. It is, therefore, a valuable book for several large classes of American readers.

Christian Instructor, Philadelphia.

There are important questions pressing upon American politics to-day; two of them are prohibition and the labor question, as connected with the secret unions of workmen. This work is an expose of the twin evils, secret societies and the saloons. The truths are given in the form of a story; not startling, but thrilling experiences of home life that are vouched for as facts. The evidences presented of the impossibility of reaching the saloon keeper so long as he and the officers of the law are sworn brothers in the den of some secret society, are conclusive enough to awaken the most careless and obtuse member of society. It is a valuable book for the masses to read.

Evangelist, Berea, Kentucky.

The object of the volume is to illustrate the practical workings of Secret Societies, and especially to show how the Lodge upholds the saloon, and this very important design is wrought out with much skill, clearness and power. By reading it temperance people may learn how about the difficulties in the way of prohibition.

The Standard, Chicago.

It is written in the interests of reform, more especially temperance and Anti-masonry. The title of the story suggests the special aim of it, which is to protest against all "halting between two opinions;" in other words, is a plea for radicalism. The story is vigorously written, and will interest even readers who do not altogether believe in its doctrine.

The Pacific, San Francisco.

It is a story intended to do service against the saloons, and in favor of Woman's Christian Temperance work, and especially against the secret orders—Freemasonry, Odd-fellows, the Knights of Labor, etc. No reflecting man can doubt that any combination of picked classes and individuals is liable to great abuse. It is obvious, also, that secret orders are specially capable of being used in a selfish and unprincipled way.

IN BRIEF.

A convention of stamp collectors met yesterday in New York.

There are 16,000 saloons in sight of Trinity spire, New York City.

The raisin crop tributary to Riverside, Cal., will aggregate 2,000,000 boxes, valued at $400,000, or $400 an acre.

The profits of prunes and peaches and apricots in San Jose (Cal.) valley have been three times as great this season as those which have been realized from the orange and lemon groves of the South.

The wealthiest colored man in the United States is said to be Tony Lufon, a French quadroon at New Orleans, whose fortune is estimated at $1,100,000. An organ of the colored people in the South says that the colored people in the South pay taxes on $90,000,000.

It costs a little more than twenty cents a mile to run a locomotive, on an average. Nearly eight cents of this is for fuel, seven and a quarter cents for pay of engineer and fireman, and a half cent for oil and waste, and more than four and one-half cents for repairs. A ton of coal will run a locomotive twenty-four miles, a pint of oil will run eleven miles, a pound of waste 123 miles. The locomotives of a railway like the Northwestern run 500,000 miles a month.

On its present peace footing, the German army consists of 427,274 men and 18,118 officers. On a war footing, for which the estimates are always made, the army proper would consist of 1,456,677 men and 35,998 officers, served also by 312,731 horses, and 2,808 guns. In addition to this great force there is the landsturm, or militia reserves.

Last Monday morning, when the stable of Benjamin Haupt was opened, his horse was found standing in the stall with his mouth wide open. It seemed curious, but what was more curious was that a horseshoe was in the mouth standing crosswise. The animal was taken to J. B. Zimmerman's blacksmith shop, where its mouth was pried open with iron bars sufficiently to let the shoe be taken out. An examination showed that the shoe had been on the horse's foot the evening before. The animal evidently got its foot in its mouth, and, in trying to get it out, the shoe was torn from the hoof.—Shamokin (Pa.) Times.

There is a woman in Los Angeles, Cal., who is selling small fruits and vegetables to educate herself in music. She has been, she says, "starved for music all her life," but now, at forty years of age, in spite of poverty and discouragement, she is cultivating her voice, which is really a fine one. An odd and pitiful sight was this woman, with her broad sun hat and linen duster, at the piano the other day, playing and singing for a wealthy lady invalid while her vegetable wagon stood waiting at the door.

Scientific men have been perplexed for many years over the phenomenon of a certain well at Yakutsk, Siberia. A Russian merchant in 1828 began to dig the well, but gave up the task three years later when he had dug down thirty feet and was still in solid frozen soil. Then the Russian Academy of Sciences dug away at the well for months, but quit when it had reached a depth of three hundred and eighty-two feet, when the ground was still frozen as hard as a rock. In 1844 the academy had the temperature of the excavation carefully taken at various depths, and from these data it was estimated that the ground was frozen to a depth of six hundred and twelve feet. Although the pole of the greatest cold is in this province of Yakutsk, not even the terrible severity of the Siberian winters could freeze the ground to a depth of six hundred feet. Geologists have decided that the frozen valley of the lower Lena is a formation of the glacial period. They believe, in short, that it froze solidly then, and has never since had a chance to thaw out.

Baccalaureate Sermon, is the religious, as the Washington speech was the political, basis of the anti-secret reform. Several hundred, in pamphlet, can be had at two cents [one postage stamp] each, or ten for twenty cents in stamps. Please order soon, for Colleges, Seminaries, and High Schools.

ALL-NIGHT INHALATION!

"A positive revolution in the treatment of Air-Passage Diseases of the Nose, Throat, and Lungs, and, for the purpose designed, as valuable a discovery as vaccination."

THE PILLOW-INHALER.

A Speedy, Positive and Permanent Cure for Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Incipient Consumption.

It is a hair pillow, with reservoirs of evaporating liquid, the fumes or vapor of which is inhaled all night long, whilst sleeping as usual, and without any discomfort. It is used only at night, and is perfectly adapted to the most delicate. There is no stomach-doubling, coughing or sneezing; but, as with a smoky lamp, will leave a deposit on a whitened wall so the Pillow-Inhaler, for use eight hours at a time, spreads a powerful healing halm or save on the inflamed inner coating of the diseased air-surfaces, from the nostrils to the bottom of the lungs, and hence into the blood. Old-fashioned inhalation, through a tube, for a few minutes at a time, sometimes cures. Think of eight hours constant action, on the same principle, but intensified a hundred-fold! There are no pipes or tubes. The medicine is breathed in, not swallowed, and goes straight to the inflamed parts.

CATARRH. BRONCHITIS. CONSUMPTION.

HON. E. L. HENREN, Collector of the Port of New York, says: "I take pleasure in stating that the Pillow-Inhaler has been of the greatest relief, and I believe of permanent benefit, to my wife, who has been a great sufferer from Bronchitis and Catarrh of the Throat, accompanied with dyspnoea and Asthma. I recommend its use to all persons afflicted with such maladies."

M. H. G. TALLE, 50 Bryan Block, Chicago, Ill., says: "I suffered from years from a severe case of Catarrh, coughed incessantly day and night. I bought a Pillow-Inhaler, and placed inside my mouth is gone; my lungs are no longer weak and sore, and I am in better health than I have been for years."

During the six years of its existence the PILLOW-INHALER has wrought cures of Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Consumption, that have been more like miracles than the usual treatment of disease. It is not expensive, and is within the reach of every one. Send for Explanatory Pamphlet and Testimonials, or call.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

COUNTRY.

A hurricane had prevailed for nearly thirty-six hours, early last week, on the Gulf coast. At Galveston heavy damage has resulted, streets being inundated, tracks torn up by the waves, and steamers and other craft injured by being pounded against the wharves. In Lower Louisiana people were driven from their houses, levees were demolished, and the rice and other crops ruined. The water in the town of Pointe a la Hache was several feet deep. In the vicinity of the Mississippi quarantine station the rushing waters left the people destitute, and at points on the Alabama coast severe losses have also been inflicted. Tuesday at Sabine Pass, Texas, the Porter House, which sheltered a number of persons, was wrecked and washed away, and a boat was capized and its occupants drowned. A schooner was driven across the railroad, and landed high and dry upon the prairie. Sixty-five persons are known to have perished. The sea-wall protecting Eads's jetties, at the mouth of the Mississippi, was badly damaged during the recent storm. Concrete blocks weighing several tons were washed away or torn from their foundations.

The latest reports from Sabine Pass, Texas, are that 101 persons perished by the storm. But two houses were left standing, and the greatest distress prevails among the survivors.

The remains of the late Chief Justice Salmon P. Chase were exhumed Monday last at Washington, and placed in a new casket, preparatory to their removal and final interment at Cincinnati. The body is well preserved, the features being recognizable. The ceremonies at Cincinnati were suitable to the character and history of the great jurist.

President Green made his annual report Wednesday, to a meeting of the stockholders of the Western Union Telegraph Company. The year's revenues aggregated $16,298,638; the profits were $3,919,855, and the surplus is $4,309,834.

Fire at Eastport, Me., burned ten houses, destroying ten sardine factories, thirty dwellings, two hotels, the custom house, postoffice, and every place for the sale of goods of any description, excepting two small groceries. The loss is figured at $500,000. Contributions will be necessary to relieve the sufferers. The factories gave employment to at least two thousand persons, and much suffering must ensue unless immediate aid is rendered.

The gale which visited Buffalo Thursday night did a vast amount of damage. For a time the wind reached a velocity of seventy miles an hour. On the lake front, in the vicinity of what is known as the sea wall, forty small houses were totally destroyed by wind and water, and their occupants had to fly for their lives. Several persons are known to have perished.

This gale prevailed generally through the lake region, destroying telegraph communications and injuring property.

The German Orphan Asylum at Indianapolis, Ind., was destroyed by fire early Friday morning, one of the boys perishing in the flames. The boys were removed safely from an upper story, by means of a ladder, by the matron and her attendants.

Last winter, at Milwaukee, Ferdinand Jochim in attempting to cross a "skid" in front of the store of George I. Robinson, fell and broke his thigh. He used for and recovered $10,000 damages, and Tuesday the Wisconsin Supreme Court affirmed the finding. This is a warning to merchants who obstruct sidewalks.

Another shock of earthquake was felt at 4 o'clock Friday morning at Charleston and Summerville. Latest reports are that the action about Ninety six, S. C., has been regularly shaken by underground explosions since January, 1885, and that the noises sometimes resemble thunder or the howling of a severe storm. The rumbling was more continuous Monday night than ever before, and scientists are led to believe that the noises are volcanic.

A dispatch from Mayor Courtney stating that the committee in Charleston has received sufficient funds to meet the wants of meritorious, needy sufferers, will cause a suspension of collections for this object.

At Buck Mountain, ten miles north of Hazleton, Pa., Monday, a drunken mob attacked and killed four Hungarians. A serious conflict is impending between the factions.

While officiating at the altar in a Polish Catholic church at Pittsburgh, Pa., Sunday, an attempt was made to assassinate the Rev. Father Miskewitz, an unknown person firing at him through a window. The bullet passed within six inches of the priest's body, and the affair caused intense excitement among the congregation.

FOREIGN.

A dispatch from Vienna says that at a meeting at Rustchuk to-day M. Stojanow read a dispatch from Prince Alexander declining the money voted to him by the Sobranje, saying that he was prepared to accept the throne of Bulgaria if re-elected.

The elections in Bulgaria for members of the Great Sobranje have resulted in the return of 480 government candidates, of twenty six members of the Zankoff or Russian party, and of fifteen adherents of M. Karaveloff. General Kavlabars, who is at Varna, has exchanged visits with the foreign consuls there. He is awaiting orders as to whether he shall remain in Bulgaria or return to Russia.

The comments of the whole European press upon the Eastern question evince increasing uneasiness. From St. Petersburg little news is received, but a feeling of anxiety prevails there. Roubles have fallen to a lower point than was reached on the announcement of the Plevna disaster. The Italian papers strongly urge an alliance between Italy and England. It is currently rumored at Constantinople that France, Russia, and Turkey are on the eve of coming to an understanding, and that Turkey will send an ultimatum to England demanding the immediate evacuation of Egypt.

There is a rapid growth of the war feeling in France. The Boulanger party have begun the issue of two new journals, to advocate an offensive policy in vindication of the old military prestige of France. M. Lavedon, the military critic, writes to the Figaro that General Boulanger has prepared a well conceived plan in conjunction with a staff officer of high rank for a continental campaign. The strictest taboo of everything German is being observed. M. Lockroy, Minister of Commerce, has ordered the police to prosecute all persons selling boxes of toys imported from Germany and containing a map of France without Alsace.

The Democrats of the Third Illinois district have nominated Mayor Harrison for Congress, where he once displayed his statesman-like qualities of bombast. This district is Republican by several thousand votes, but Harrison's friends are beginning to count up for him thus: The West side horse railways will vote their thousands of employes for him, since D. C. Cregier, superintendent of one, is a friend of the Mayor and sworn to him in thirty-two degrees of Masonry. Mike McDonald, the ex-gambler, who nominated Harrison, and has at least twice made him mayor by leading up the gambling and liquor host, has an interest in the other line; and thus both are safe. The same interests which have thrice put him at the head of our municipal affairs will work for him as their representative in Congress—the lodge, the saloon and the gambling den.

Mr. Tanner, the United States Consul at Chemnitz, Germany, not long since immortalized himself by a report on beer-drinking, explaining that the evil effects of the drink in this country come of our haste. In America the liquor is poured down as if to put out a fire. The philosophical German, on the other hand, sips and sips for an afternoon and is not made drunken. Congress should vote the leather medal to Mr. Tanner. This sage observer is not appreciated by the Saxons. The cotton-stocking weavers of Chemnitz have a large American trade, and have raised a clamor against Mr. Tanner for giving away their secret for beer-guzzling. The reason we must imagine. Is it because if Americans were less beer-drunk they would buy more stockings of woolen and silk and less of cotton?

There is a demand enforced by cogent argument and eminent names for the contraction or entire abolition of our army of foreign ministers, consuls, and agents. Our friendly relations with all men, and the facility with which all foreign business may now be done by telegraph to headquarters direct, together with the comparative uselessness of a great part of our foreign service, give plausibility to the motion. Especially when our representatives make themselves odge missionaries, for establishing in other lands an alien curse, such as came across the sea to us in Freemasonry and Odd-fellowship—then it is time to ask cui bono? Pierpont establishing Masonry in Mexico, to yet more prolong the revolutionary turmoil of that unhappy republic, is an instance; and now we have a John Child over in Siam setting up a rival system to the labors of missionaries by organizing Odd-fellow lodges.

The great religious bodies meeting this fall in Chicago and vicinity must cause serious and unhappy arguments in the breast of a reflective, but unregenerate man. He reads the charter of the churches of Jesus Christ: Go—PREACH. He sees several hundred representatives of the Episcopal church debating for days over a change of name, for other days over the prayer-book, but giving no hour to such a meeting as the disciples held before Pentecost. The Congregationalists were a week together and their discussions were full of interest, yet from what point in it would the Holy Spirit begin a revival in Chicago? One of the leading members went to his home grieving that there had been nothing said to help truth's side in the struggle for life some churches are making with the lodge. The Free Methodist brethren are meeting for two weeks in Coopersville, Michigan. Their paper says a large proportion of the General Conference are ready with amendments for the discipline. The Lutheran brethren may do better. We may not say that these convocations do not have an over-balance of good, perhaps of great good; yet they might do better for the churches and much better for the world "lying in wickedness" without them.

This tendency of the churches to fix up the machinery and neglect the steam; to look after doctrines and not enforce their practice; to discuss names and rules and forms until they are in danger of quenching "the Spirit which giveth life," is full of peril to Christian life and work. Jones, the evangelist, compares it to a steamboat on a little stream in Georgia, which had a very small boiler and a very large whistle. The captain was proud of his whistle and blew it wherever he could get an audience, but every time the whistle blew the engine had to stop. The illustration is worth remembering by brethren who provide for doctrines and "forms of government" while the machinery of religion is at a stand still.

The National Anti-prohibition Convention met in this city last Tuesday and Wednesday in the same hall occupied by the anti-saloon Republicans. The eighteen State delegations were not large except from Illinois and Kentucky. On the whole they were not an ill-looking body; there was no threadbare clothing, and diamonds flashed from more than a single bosom. In fact they were the leading distillers and brewers of the country, men of wealth and business, who have sense enough not to patronize their own manufactories. The meeting was generally harmonious, except some clashing between whisky and beer. The resolutions were adopted in a lump with a single protest from a distiller against a discriminating license in favor of beer, which he claimed had as much drunkenness in a gallon as whisky. A National Protective Association was formed to carry on the fight against every effort to make the drink traffic illegal. The convention was unanimous in favor of license, and—temperance (that is, the temperance of the distillery). In this they would have agreed well with the anti-saloon Republicans. Is it not time good men of that party understood that measures favored by these liquor kings are just such as temperance men do not want?

The Government has decided to send the Apache chief, Geronimo, and his band to join the rest of the tribe in their confinement in Fort Pickens and Fort Marion, Florida, until the yellow fever cuts them off, or they chafe to death with restraint. With all their cruelty, there is another side to this Apache struggle. The Indian has no tongue or pen of eloquence to give the world his view of it. Indian Commissioner Atkins says of this last rebellious chief: "There has not been such a warrior as Geronimo since the days of Rob Roy. He has subsisted on the roots of the desert and the serpents of the mountains for nearly two years. He has been his own commissary and chief of transportation; he has worn out an army, and has kept a vast region of country in terror. Part of the time he has been wounded and sick. His barbarous heroism and endurance are unsurpassed by anything in history."

The strike of the railway switchmen in Minneapolis, having been maintained with some vigor of arm for over a week, has been broken up and all the men who can find places and have not been guilty of destroying property are getting back to work. The business of the city was for a time seriously impeded. The men declare the strike was brought on by three men: one a switchman, one a discharged man, and the third a vampire, that is, a dead beat with no business but to make a living off the working men. These men called a meeting, but could not carry their point. They then went to one yard after another and ordered the men out and were obeyed. They then went about the city for subscriptions to aid the strikers, raising a thousand dollars of which the strikers got $100. Thus do the labor lodges protect labor "as vultures protect lambs, covering and devouring them."

The Eastern situation has changed little during the past week. The result of Russian diplomacy at Constantinople is a new menace to the independent action of Bulgaria. Beset on every side, her patriotic leaders, while anxious to avoid devastation and war (have they not had enough?) yet strive to maintain their rights in the face of Russian threats. While England and Austria seem inclined to favor this independence, Russia demands that a ruler of her choice only be accepted. Turkey is abetting Russia and the influence of France is thrown on that side. The latter power wants to force England to abandon Egypt, and thus a narrow self-interest prevents the greatest European republic from aiding a weak and struggling state to a condition of comparative independence. The German power yet plays the part of arbiter and says little. The desperate condition of the Czar, intimated lately, is confirmed by his shooting Baron Reutern, one of the officers of his household or staff. First reports stated that the Czar, half-crazy with suspicion, interpreted a motion of the young officer into an attack; but the latest account says the act was committed in the heat of passion because the young man resented some harsh remark of his imperious master. If the peace of Europe rests in the bosom of such a madman, God have mercy upon the poor people who may be slaughtered at his whim.

MISTAKEN ADVICE TO THE AFRICAN M. E. CHURCH.

BY REV. H. H. BINMAN.

There lies before me the African Methodist Episcopal Church Review for October, a quarterly, edited by B. T. Tanner, D. D., Philadelphia. It contains 104 large pages, well printed, and rich in all the varied literature we expect to find in the best denominational quarterlies. The able articles, by Hon. Fred. Douglass, on "Recollections of a Tour in Ireland," by Rev. F. J. Grimke, on "The Defects of our Ministry and the Remedy;" and of Hon. John R. Lynch, on "Should Colored Men Join Labor Organizations?" are especially valuable.

But I want to suggest a kind criticism. A dead fly often spoils the sweetest ointment, and to my mind the learned doctor has put into his quarterly an ill-odorous article among his book notices, in which he reviews, with great commendation, "The Negro Mason in Equity." He refers to "the gallant fight our brethren are making for recognition and rights," and says, "We wish to congratulate them upon the fact that evidences are not wanting that victory is nigh. God bless them, we say, and let all say, amen."

Now as to the identity, accuracy and completeness of colored Masonry there is not a doubt, and there can be no sort of sympathy with the ostracism of the white Hiramite over his darker brother. We believe that dram-shops, brothels and Masonic lodges are not the special heritage of any one race or color. But as between two classes of men, each of which is sworn in a selfish anti-republican and profane brotherhood, we have no side to take or sympathy to waste. While in a general way we might deprecate all unfairness, even among thieves, the evil which we would deplore would not be the unfairness but the theft. When a learned doctor of divinity, the editor of a quarterly review and a great Christian journal, can pronounce a benediction on an order that has been abundantly proved to be heathen in its origin, despotic and selfish in its spirit, Christless in its religion and profane in its ritual, he shows a lamentable want of either knowledge or consistency. It is a satisfaction to know that Dr. Tanner writes himself "Masonically a profane." I cheerfully accord to him the merit of sincerity, but am constrained to believe that though he has never been formerly subjected to the halter and the hoodwink he has been terribly deluded by an institution that comes "in all deceivableness of unrighteousness."

ORGANIZATION.

BY ELDER J. L. BARLOW.

An intelligent appeal to all history will show that no effort against long-established abuses was ever successful without organization. Wherever a wrong or wicked pursuit becomes profitable, those engaged in it soon develop a tendency towards organization for the protection of what they are pleased to term their rights and privileges. The pirate seeks a fellow-pirate, and they two combine with others like minded, and lo! an organization results, from which peaceful commerce on the wide seas is made to suffer. Life and property fall before these nihilistic anarchists of the ocean, until society bleeds from many gaping wounds.

One man starts what he fancifully terms a saloon—"a spacious and elegant apartment for the reception of company, or for works of art" (see Webster)—from which he dispenses distilled and other intoxicants, through which he degrades and slays his fellows with impunity; destroys the happiness of families, and disturbs the peace of communities and impoverishes the State. He has his fellows all over the land, and they grow rich on the spoils of their neighbors. If individuals, families or communities, stung to the quick by their aggressive and deadly work, begin to raise a protest, they find the saloon has at its back an organized force, with a billion of dollars at its control as a corruption fund, to buy up legislation in its favor, or to buy guns and ammunition to slay the enemies of their traffic whom they cannot murder by inches with their poisons. This organization now controls our governments, State and national, and the question already stares us in the face and demands settlement—the saloon or our national freedom must die—which?

Another danger to our Republican institutions is looming up into gigantic proportions, and it is with this we have now to deal as a specialty. A system of organized oath-bound secrecy is abroad in the land, usurping control over the bodies as well as the consciences of men; binding them with obligations which their servile initiates are taught to consider more binding and sacred than any they have taken, or may take, from church or state. It requires no argument to prove that any man who intelligently takes, and honestly means to keep, such an obligation, is a pledged traitor to human government as it exists in the state, and to the Divine as existing in the church.

These societies, as seen in Freemasonry and Odd-fellowship, with the minor and modern fraternities, are all close and compact organizations, kept well in hand, and sworn to obey the orders of known or unknown superiors at all hazards. The events of the current year and its astounding developments ought to awaken the American people to the impending horrors ready at any moment to burst upon and whelm in one common destruction all our Christian civilization; and the crying necessity for immediate and determined organization on the part of the friends of Christianity and our Republican government as against these combined encroachments of their enemies. Longer delay from these banded forces, which is constantly and subtly, yet boldly, being made on society, which as yet has in the main submitted supinely and with an indifference, save for the efforts of a few who have so far met at intervals, more so many mass meetings, and talked and resolved, and then gone home to wait for—another mass meeting, to which a few will make a pilgrimage, to talk and resolute, and represent—themselves. It is respectfully submitted to all anti-secrecy workers that it is time to move forward in a more compact form. We have, it is true, a national organization with a national organ, and a national headquarters at Chicago, and much good has been done by our lectures and our literature. We have, at least, on paper, some twenty or twenty-one State organizations professedly auxiliary to the national; but when has the latter body ever met as a delegated one? After eighteen years of costly effort what have we to show for it in the form of an organized force, which either friends or foes are forced to respect. If we have not wisdom and tact enough among us to organize our forces, let us borrow some from the Women's Christian Temperance Union. They have not been in the field so long as we, and yet look at what they have accomplished. Their town and district, with their State Unions, are all over the land. When their State organizations meet, you will see a delegated body of hundreds coming together representing organized bodies in all parts of the country. The writer of this was almost shamed out of his boots the other day while on his way to the meeting of the Illinois State Christian Association, as one of these W. C. T. Union workers threw at him this query:

"WHERE IS YOUR CONSTITUENCY?"

A very dull echo was the only possible answer. Anti-masons, is it not time to change all this? The writer feels that there ought and must be a change; that town, county and district societies should be organized as fast as it can be done; that this should be the main work of our State Agent. Let him go into a county, and go among our friends with ORGANIZATION written all over him. Let it look out of his eyes, speak from his tongue, and stand out in his every action, and be his theme in every lecture. Let this winter be devoted to this work as never before. We want an organizer in every State. Let the National Board of Directors insist upon it that every State agent, supported in part from the National funds, shall make this work a specialty, and push the work with all the manhood and will power there is in him. A few grand men have wrought nobly in this work. But the hardest of the fight is yet before us. The men in the field want to feel a strong constituency at their back in order to do effective work. But more anon. Henceforth be this our watchword, ORGANIZE!!

KAYIN.

In Genesis 4:1 we are informed of the birth of Cain. It is stated that Eve said upon that occasion, "I have gotten a man from the Lord." Bible critics generally have presumed that the word "Cain" signifies possession or acquisition. I think there will be perceived, upon close examination, an error in this conclusion. The word is from Kun not from Kanah. Although in radical letters they resemble each other the definitions are not similar. The transgressors had been promised that the seed of the woman would bruise the serpent's head. That they understood the seed to be offspring is most probable. Upon the first acquisition of offspring they supposed they had the instrument of the serpent's punishment. They called him therefore Kayin, which is properly rendered a "spear" or "lance." In 2 Samuel 21:16 it is said that the Kayin of Ishbi-benob weighed three hundred shekels of brass. In the kindred dialects of Arabic, Chaldee, etc., the root Kun is explained.

In regard to the infant boy the parents were under a misapprehension. They may have invoked the divine blessing. The parents of Napoleon may have done the same. Cain grew up and displayed the Kayin principle. Since his day the history of the world is largely a narrative of violence and bloodshed.

"Outcast of nature, man! the wretched thrall
Of bitter-dropping sweat, of sweety pain,
Of cares that eat away the heart with gall,
And of the vices an inhuman train."

On account of the imperfection and wickedness of man's fallen nature the Kayin principle has been at times authorized or permitted by the Supreme Ruler of nations and of individuals. It was a portion of the polity of the Jewish commonwealth. Abraham, Moses, David, Joshua and numberless others exercised it as an instrumentality under providence. I think there is no record that Jacob ever used it, although his name was permanently changed to Yisrael—"Soldier of El." Esau was no better than Cain. King Saul displayed the principle, and Paul before he was converted was similar. Jesus Christ evidently eschewed the principle, gave laws contrary to it and never encouraged it by example. From the most comprehensive view it would appear contrary to heavenly happiness and glory.

The question may arise, can the Kayin principle be banished from the world so long as any Christian will exercise it? The early Christians took a stand against it. They indulged in no consideration of result, but of duty and obedience. The haven hereafter with the Prince of peace, whose kingdom is not of this world, was their goal.

The secret oath-bound lodges are illustrating the Kayin principle equally with Cain, Esau, Saul and others. They are one in soul with the fallen world, yet promise themselves with lying, hypocritical tongues a "grand lodge" in the regions above. As a poet wrote, "Wearing forevermore the mark of Cain," they seek to cover blood and idol or false worship by assembling like Satan with the sons of God.

Whose example shall we teach the youth to follow? Not Cain's or Esau's, not King Saul's or that of Saul of Tarsus. Teach them to imitate the Jewish dispensation? A prophet said, "every battle of the warrior is with confused noise and garments rolled in blood." Teach them to follow the example of Paul the apostle? His weapons were not carnal nor the regalia military. Teach them to follow the example of Christ? Substitute ploughshares for swords and pruning-hooks for spears? What then would become of Cain's name and honor? Teach them to imitate Christ's example by joining a secret oath-bound lodge? Then the church and clerical function becomes desecrated. You say, if God sanctioned the Kayin principle in Moses, Joshua, David—that religion is good enough for me. So would say the Freemason. If the reptilian epoch had been good enough, it would not have been advanced to the mammal. If the Jewish polity had been in all things good enough Christ had not upset Moses in some things and so saved Robert Ingersoll the self-conceit of so doing.

Are Christian governments divinely authorized to exercise the Kayin principle? The apostle Paul, who submitted to Christ's rule, said: "The civil magistrate bore the sword not in vain." The Jewish government had a delegated authority, yet had to consult the divine oracle upon war occasions. All murder was wrong without a delegated authority. Many things of the reptilian age subsist in the mammal. Many things of the Jewish age prevail in the Christian. If Naaman's sevenfold dipping in Jordan will cure leprosy now, the road to Jericho would be a highway for lepers. If John's dippings are essential in effecting regeneration of souls now, he should have said nothing about a baptism of the Holy Ghost and fire. If James's prescription cures bodily disease now, without the aid of means except anointing with oil, then no need of doctors and surgeons. As I am an investigator and not a teacher, I hope to offend no one. Let some abler hand make plain the truth.

QUAKER BOY.

THE CHURCH, THE MINISTRY AND SECRET SOCIETIES.

BY REV. B. A. IMES.

[Paper read before the Mississippi Congregational Association.]

We know of no other name than that of Christ whereby men can be saved. Whatever affects the spiritual life of the individual members must affect the whole church. Institutions which demand the obedience, the time and unquestioning submission of men must certainly be a power for good or for evil.

According to their own claims Freemasonry and Odd-fellowship are systems whereby men not only promote the temporal welfare of each other, but, by observing their moral precepts and works of charity, men are raised to favor with God and a state of blessedness in the world to come. They are then systems of religion. They bitterly oppose and resent any attempt to examine and discuss their actual nature and principles, and those who make the attempt are regarded as enemies. But we cannot help it. They must stand or fall on their own merits.

As a rule our religious press does not touch the subject. Our ministers are silent—the prophet may have a vision, but let him not tell his vision. The lodge will give to the minister its high-sounding titles, its patronage, etc., in return for his influence and his obligation binding him to their authority.

The "Supreme Being," in whom every Mason and Odd-fellow avows belief, may be the God of the Jew, or of the Mohammedan, or the deist, or the Unitarian, for all these are admitted in common brotherhood, and if any one objects to the name of Jesus Christ being used, that name must be left out of the religious exercises of the lodge. It is constantly claimed that in order to be a "good Mason," or a "good Odd-fellow," one must be a good Christian.

But Christianity saves men upon the merits of the atonement of Christ and the regeneration by the Holy Spirit. These Divine agencies have no place whatever in the religion of secret orders. The whole idea there presented is that of man raising himself by his works, and he becomes a "new creature" by the practice of the moral precepts of the lodge.

Again, Christianity is for all—the blind, the lame, the halt, the poor, etc. These secret orders take only such as are able-bodied and can pay their way. They keep their "benevolence" within the lines of their "financial" members. What asylums, what homes for the poor and friendless outside of their own membership do they build up and maintain?

I find further that there are not a few men who will frankly say: "I will leave the church and stay in the lodge if it comes to a choice between the two."

I find many ministers who deplore the influence of secret orders, as they prove stronger and stronger in secularizing the churches; that is, bringing them more and more on a level with the world, and yet these same ministers are yoked up with ungodly men in the lodge. The saloon-keeper and the profane swearer are called "brother."

It is admitted by many witnesses that in frequent cases men of corrupt and very unworthy character are held up and protected from well-merited exposure and disgrace by the aid of the lodge. Hence it is an advantage to belong to as many secret orders as possible. I know a minister who was accused of drunkenness, and there was abundant evidence as to his guilt, who was shielded by the lodge (Odd-fellows) from trial in the church, and soon after was raised from pastor to presiding elder.

A careful study of the principles and workings of these institutions as given in their own manuals (which any of us may purchase and read), will convince you that scarcely one in a hundred of the membership of secret lodges understands what these institutions really are. Men blindly and innocently, perhaps, of any fault in their aim, go in and bind themselves in these orders. They think that when they have gone through the various performances of initiation and been raised to the succeeding degrees, something very great has been done and the obligations are very serious. A covenant with Christ and his church has less weight with many of them.

The marriage covenant must stand aside, for the man must close heart and lips, as well as the lodge door, against his wife! Has he children, they must not know about the lodge and its most important characteristics. On all other themes they may seek information and form opinions.

Time would fail us to speak of the extra-judicial oath and the death penalty in Masonry. The spirit of malice and revenge with which all opposers are regarded and pursued, and death by stealthy murder, planned by the betrayer of Masonic secrets. But are not those who forsake and expose these secret orders guilty of perjury? Yes, they are, if the oaths they took were lawful, and if the duties imposed were such as a man ought to take upon himself. But the oath to be lawful and binding should be administered by an officer of the law who is authorized by the civil government to administer the oath. Aside from this, any covenant or agreement having the force of an oath, in order to be binding should be taken only with the best possible understanding of the requirements involved, and with the condition that no obligation shall at any time be imposed requiring the submission of the conscience to the will of other men.

Finally, I submit as an incontrovertible proposition, that instead of being founded upon the teachings and great principles of Holy Scripture, these institutions, Freemasonry and Odd-fellowship in particular, are directly contrary to Scripture. The use of Scripture emblems and quotations has simply the effect of giving to the lodge an air of religious authority and character, which is in truth no part of the essential principles of the institution. The innocent, the ignorant and the credulous are deceived by this guise of authority, and by the parade and show and great pretension to a superior benevolence. To a truly Christian mind the pompous titles which these orders give to poor, weak, simple men, must be simply disgusting and absurd. Christ says:

"I am meek and lowly in heart."—Matt. 11: 28.

"Neither be ye called masters, for one is your Master, even Christ."—Matt. 23: 10.

Secondly, the teachings of Christ and his example are directly opposed to secretism:

"And men loved darkness, etc., because their deeds were evil."

"For everyone that doeth evil hateth the light," etc.

"But he that doeth truth cometh to the light that his deeds may be made manifest that they are wrought in God."—John 3: 18, 19, 20.

Where he speaks of secret prayer, alms-giving, etc., the aim is to show the proper way of ordering our private devotions and acts. There is a proper privacy which should belong to every family, every individual. Any organization of men may at times be under necessity of observing certain rules of privacy in particular matters; but on the other hand, no honest man and no institution which has at least the highest well-being of humanity, find it necessary to cover up their principles and actions by an established rule of secrecy. Secrecy is the right arm of the thief, the assassin, the counterfeiter, the cunning savage, who cultivate sly and stealthy habits rather than open and candid and fair principles.

As ministers of Christ we are under solemn obligations to declare the whole counsel of God. How can we turn aside from examining and discussing these institutions in the light of God's Word, and requiring them to stand the same test which the religion of Christ has stood in all ages? That is, open, free investigation and criticism.

And now if any reader of this brief outline of my discussion takes exception to any statement herein, I only ask that he will meet the same, not with personal ill-will or abuse to the writer, but with arguments of truth from any authentic source let him overthrow my statements. I trust that my mind is open to conviction and to receive any light which may come to me from the Spirit of truth, and I only ask that others will read in this same state of mind. A good man may be deluded and deceived by popular error. Many are thus deceived, but let it be the proof of their candor and sincerity that this article shall lead such to honest and prayerful investigation; and finally, may God help them to forsake every master but Christ, and every religion but that of the Gospel of the Son of God.

FIGHTING THE CHURCHES.

[Bro. H. L. Hastings, editor of the Christian, Boston, who writes the article below, will not belong to any of the existing churches because they are sects. His testimony is therefore the more weighty.]

It is useless, he says, to attempt the breaking up of existing churches. With all their imperfections, they exist, and are likely to; and if every denomination on earth were disorganized to-day, the mass of them would probably soon be reorganized under either better or worse conditions than now. Most of the good people in the world are in the churches, and many churches, defective as they are, are doing excellent work for God. Almost any church will do very well if it has a good percentage of Christians in it, but the servants of the devil serve their master in all churches, and would do so in any new church that might be organized. Judas is a devil even when he dips his hand in the dish with the Saviour.

What is needed, then, is not to destroy or make war on the churches, but rather to convert or arouse the people who are in the churches, and quicken them to a new and more vigorous Christian life. When this is done Christians will have more piety, and less sectarianism, and will see for themselves the sin, and shame, and evil of the unchristian separations into which their fathers were led, and will be ready to consider what can be done to remedy or remove the evils.

A large proportion of the professors of Christianity are not qualified to discuss or decide upon these matters. They are carnal. They are taught and led by men. They are but babes in Christ. They are ignorant of God's word and of his righteousness. They are conformed to the world. They are not led by the Spirit of God. They need to be taught the principles of the doctrine of Christ. They need to know him. It is useless to change the faith of such persons, unless their faith will change them. What is needed is not a new church to reform the men, but new men to reform the church.

Many churches have been organized mainly on Scriptural principles, but the material was poor, the ark was built of anything but gopherwood, the new wine was in old bottles, and the new patch spoiled the old garment.

Only those who know the Lord are in a position to see the evils which flow from a division among his saints. Only they who are "spiritual" are able in the spirit of meekness to restore those who are overtaken in faults. These will grieve over the faults of the church, and will sigh and cry for the abominations that are in the land, and will be safe when the storm of judgment shall burst in fury on the ungodly.

The evils which oppress Christendom are not to be cured by perfumes nor by poultices. "By terrible things in righteousness" will God clear away the rubbish and the worldliness that entangle and defile his church. The scourge of small cords may be disregarded, but the "abomination that maketh desolate" cannot be ignored.

Said Dr. Thomas Chalmers, "As far as we can read into the prophecies of the time before us, we feel as if there were to be the arrest of a sudden and unlooked-for visitation laid on the ordinary processes of nature and history, and that the millennium is to be ushered in in the midst of judgments and frightful convulsions which will uproot the present fabric of society and shake the framework of its machinery to pieces. I look for the conclusive establishment of Christianity through a widening passage of desolations and judgements, with the demolition of our civil and ecclesiastical structures."—Lectures on the Evidences. Vol. I. p. 372.

Happy shall they be who, when the hail shall sweep away the refugees of lies, and the waters shall overflow the hiding places, shall be found builded securely upon the eternal rock, having heard Christ's sayings and obeyed them, and so being able to stand secure amid the terrors of the storm. Wherefore "Seek ye the Lord, all ye meek of the earth, which have wrought his judgment; seek righteousness, seek meekness: it may be ye shall be hid in the day of the Lord's anger." Zeph. 2. 3.

THE LODGE IN POLITICS.

In 1880 the Democratic National Committee, on announcing Hancock and English as the candidates chosen by their party, employed language which was intended to notify the initiated that both Gen. Hancock and Mr. English were members of the Masonic order. It was a bid for the Masonic vote, but a bid in veiled language which none but the Freemasons themselves were likely to notice or understand. Nevertheless it was an outrage on the non-secret society supporters of that party, no matter how worthy, personally, both Gen. Hancock and Mr. English might be. No one acquainted with the United States disputes that some of our worthiest non-Catholic fellow-citizens are members of the Masonic society, or sect; for it is both a society and a sect.

There is every reason to believe that a majority of American Freemasons do not perceive the logically anti-Christian tendency of their society, and, therefore, are perfectly sincere in belonging at the same time, as many of them do, to some Protestant denomination.

It was only the other day that the organ in New York of the Federal administration, the Star, made an open appeal for the choice of a candidate for mayor of the city on the express ground, among other things, that the gentleman in question is a Freemason. Here are the Star's words: "[he] has filled with highest commendation a foremost place in the financial world of this great monetary centre, while in a sphere apart from that of governmental office he has been dignified with the most elevated functions of a great benevolent brotherhood." The "great benevolent brotherhood," as every reader of the article understood, is Freemasonry, of which the gentleman is a conspicuous member, having been its Grand Master for this State.—Catholic Review.

The Norwegians are a wonderfully honest people. As we were driving along one day we saw two umbrellas hanging on the branch of a tree. Some people, not caring to be encumbered with them, had left them there till they should pass that way again. Although it was raining, no one thought of touching them. An English lady told us that going for a walk one day she found her fur-lined cloak too heavy and remarked that she wished she had left it at home. "Take it off," said a Norwegian friend, who was with her, "and hang it on this tree." She did so, and when she returned two hours later there it still remained.—Springfield Republican.

It was a Unitarian lawyer, Daniel Appleton White, who turned an objection to missions into an argument for them; for, on the occasion on which an act for incorporating the American Board was in discussion before the Massachusetts Senate, an opponent of the measure urged that we did not have religion enough ourselves to justify us in sending any of it away. "Not so," was Mr. White's rejoinder, "for religion is one of those commodities of which the more you export the more you will have at home."—The Pacific.

The Rev. J. Lewellyn Lloyd, a missionary of the Church of England at Fuh-chow, China, has baptized 1,000 native converts since the year 1876. The number of converts there has grown in that time from 1,600 to nearly 6,000.

THE SECRET EMPIRE.

HEROINES OF JERICO.

BY H. H. HINMAN.

A pamphlet of fifty-two pages, entitled, "Court of the Heroines of Jericho," published at Kansas City, Mo., 1872, represents Adoptive Masonry as practiced by the colored lodges of the South, which is said to be very popular with the colored women who have engaged in it. This order consists of three degrees, the "Master Mason's Daughter", called also "Mary"; the "True Kinsman"; and the "Heroines of Jericho." In the preface the author says: "Having for a number of years" given these ladies' degrees his study he has "hunted through Masonic history and tradition for their origin and manner and mode in which they were first given." He says that he finds "the three degrees as they are given in this little book were brought to perfect order in France as early as A. D. 1220, in the reign of Louis VIII., and were from thence introduced into England, Germany and Scotland. In fact these degrees were known and given when we had nothing but Ancient Craft Masonry, which is almost as old as creation." He claims that they do not belong to the Chapter degrees, since they are older than the Chapter.

Of the degree of Master Mason's Daughter he says, "Soon after the great events of the death, burial and resurrection of the Son of God, the Jews that believed in his prediction that they were to be dispersed among all the nations (and nearly all were Masons) cast about them for some plan whereby their Masonry would benefit their wives, widows, daughters, sisters and mothers. As a result of their consultation they instituted this degree, which they called Mary, in memory of the mother of our Lord. It was adopted by the Ancient Craft, and has come down to us unchanged under the name of 'Master Mason's Daughter.'"

The degree of the "True Kinsman" is founded on the story of Ruth and Naomi while the principal degree—the crowning gift, is derived from the history of the harlot Rahab (who the author tells us was an inn-keeper) and is called the "Heroines of Jericho."

The form of a Court is almost precisely that of a Masonic lodge. The altar becomes "The Ark"; the Worshipful Master is "Most Ancient Matron"; and the Senior Warden is "Most Worthy Joshua." The ceremonies of initiation follow very closely the degrees of the Blue Lodge. The officers are all females, except the Worthy Joshua and the three "Court Directors." The preparation in the first degree is a white gown covering all the clothing, a hoodwink and a palm branch. When the candidate is "brought to light," there is the same clapping of hands as in the Entered Apprentice degree. The oath is like that of the same degree except that these clauses are added:

"I further promise and affirm that I will not give the Grand Hailing Sign of Distress unless I am in danger or real distress or for the benefit of the M. M. D's. when at work. Should I see the sign given I will go to the relief of the person who gives it. I further promise and affirm that I will obey all signs and summonses thrown, handed or sent to me by or from M. M. D's. Further I promise and affirm that I will not speak evil of a brother or sister behind their (his) backs or their (his) face, but give them (him or her) due and timely notice of approaching danger.

"To all of which I do most solemnly swear with a firm determination to keep and perform the same, binding myself under no less a penalty than to have my body struck with leprosy, should I willingly violate this my solemn oath and obligation. So help me God and keep me steady in the performance of the same."

The candidate now kisses the book. She is told that this seals the obligation.

In the second or Kinsman's degree, the robe is blue. The obligation is precisely similar except the penalty which is: "To have my right arm palsied that I may not be able to give the sign or token of a True Kinsman." The following is the lecture on this degree:

Are you a True Kinsman?
I am adopted as one.
From whence came you?
From the land of Noah.
To where did you travel?
To the land of promise.
How gained you admittance?
As a daughter I came to the right gate with my sheaves of grain.
What did you receive?
A part of the inheritance of our Father.
Have they a name?
They have a name of blessed memory.
Will you give them to me?
If you will assist me I will divide them with you.
I will assist you.
My name is A B O Z.

My name is U R H T.

Sister U R H T, I greet you.

Brother A B O Z, may the Lord bless you.

The initiation into the degree of the Heroines of Jericho is in a scarlet robe. The obligation is almost a transcript of the Master Mason's degree. The following points are noticed:

"I further promise and swear that I will not give the Heroines' word except in the manner or form I have received it—right and left hand on each shoulder, mouth to ear and at low breath."

"I further promise and swear that if there was any part of this my obligation omitted at this time, I will hold myself when thereunto informed. To all of which I do most solemnly and sincerely promise and swear, without the least hesitation or mental reservation in me whatever, binding myself under no less penalty than to have my head cut off, and my body thrown to the beasts of the forests, should I wilfully violate or break this my solemn oath and obligation as a Heroine of Jericho. So help me God and keep me in the performance of the same."

The candidate kisses the book three times. The candidate is asked what she most desires. She is told to answer, "I wish to see and receive the promised blessing." The "Most Ancient Matron" responds, "Heroines, stretch forth and assist us in granting this wish." "Most Worthy Joshua" adds, "Our life for yours if ye utter not this our business. Behold!" The shock is given and the candidate is brought to light.

The following is the instruction given:

M. W. J. (to candidate)—"Sister, you are now seated for the first time in a Court of Heroines of Jericho. You see before you the Ark of the Covenant. It reminds you of the Ark of Hope which will guide you to the haven of promise. The blue is an emblem of love; the white an emblem of purity; the scarlet an emblem of zeal. They teach you to love God supremely and every Heroine as thyself. Have charity to all mankind and lead a pure life. Be zealous to maintain a good name and defend a Heroine under all and any circumstances. The three burning lights teach you to have faith in Jehovah's word, truth in your heart, and love to all. They will light your pathway from this Court to the Grand Court of heaven where we will meet our forefathers and part no more."

The lecture on this degree is similar to that on the preceding, only longer, and corresponds closely with the lecture on the Master Mason's degree in the Blue Lodge.

REMARKS.

These degrees were manifestly invented to deceive the ignorant and to defraud the unsuspecting. The assertion that most of the primitive Christians were Freemasons, is equally false and wicked. Freemasonry, as taught by all of its text books, wholly ignores the Lord Jesus Christ. It claims to ante-date him. Is it possible that those who had seen their Lord ascend into heaven and were waiting for him to come again should have united in an order that excluded all mention of his name? John says, "If there come any unto you and bring not this doctrine (of Christ) receive him not into your houses, neither bid him God-speed, for he that biddeth God-speed is partaker of his evil deeds." All well-informed Masons know that the three degrees of the Blue Lodge are not 200 years old. The Grand Lodge of Illinois says that the third or Master's degree "was not invented till about 1721." The androgenous degrees are doubtless of French origin and are a fair representation of Parisian morality in the latter part of the 18th century. It was then that women were not shocked at being made imitators of "Rahab the harlot."

The ceremonies of these degrees are childish; their oaths blasphemous; and their covenants utterly immoral. No sensible woman would willingly be blind-folded, led over obstructions placed to stumble her, and finally to teach her to give her name (the name of a harlot) by spelling Rahab backwards.

The oaths are extra-judicial and expressly forbidden by our Lord Jesus Christ (Matt. 5:34-37; Jas. 5:12). They are blasphemous because they affirm in the name of God, what is false. Not a woman who takes their oaths would under any circumstances be willing to have her body "smitten with leprosy," or "her head cut off and her body thrown to the beasts of the forests." No intelligent woman ever supposed that God would be a party to such oaths. They are immoral, because they bind to an unknown and hence a forbidden obligation. When a woman swears that "if any of this my obligation is omitted I hold myself amenable when thereunto informed," she swears to what she does not know to be true or to be right. The instruction to "defend a Heroine under all circumstances is an immoral and possibly criminal command.

It teaches a false religion. Not only do they pattern after the old sun worship, as do the Masons in retaining the rite of circumambulation and always walking in the way of the sun; but these ceremonies will, it is said, "light your path from this Court to the Grand Court of Heaven, where we will meet our fore-fathers to part no more."

It is a degradation of true womanhood. These degrees were invented by Masons as a sort of side show to which women might be admitted, provided they were near relatives of Masons, and provided the institution was controlled by Masons. It is a skillfully devised scheme to make women believe they are Masons when they are not, and to be contented with a system that denies them the perfect confidence of their husbands and puts the husband into more intimate relations with the vilest men in society than he is with the wife of his bosom and the mother of his children.

REFORM NEWS.

THE GENERAL AGENT ON THE WISCONSIN CONVENTION.

FOND DU LAC, Wis., Oct. 22, 1886.

Arriving at Milwaukee on the 19th inst. I was happily surprised to meet Rev. N. Martin on his way to the convention at Waupun. Bro. Browne met us at the train and we were soon at the hospitable home of Bro. Andrews where were soon Bros. Britten, Ames and Ronayne.

The first meeting was given to prohibition, and the address by Volney B. Cushing was all that the most ardent friends of prohibition and the third party could desire. Mr. Cushing voted for Blaine in '84, and has the zeal of a young convert and spoke with the vigor of one whose party and political sins of complicity with the liquor curse were all forgiven.

On Tuesday convention work proper began. The morning was given to business and a lecture on the Knights of Labor was announced for 2:30 p.m. This drew out a fair day audience and resulted in an animated discussion of labor topics. The effect produced was manifest in a scurrilous circular which was scattered on the streets and posted up in the early twilight. Very grave charges were preferred against Mr. Ronayne and myself by name, and the good people of Waupun were cautioned to lock their hen-roosts, out-buildings, etc., etc., as "sneak thieves" were in town, and ladies were advised not to appear on the streets after dark until the said Ronayne and Stoddard should leave town. Bro. Ronayne arraigned the Masonic fraternity in his evening address with all his old-time vigor. He was repeatedly interrupted by a gang led by a fellow, who like Lucifer of old, seems to have fallen from an honorable to a very low position in morals and manners alike. Once a member of the legislature and a lawyer of some note; then an exhorter and a candidate for ministerial standing in the church and the office of sheriff in the county; and now an autioneer and known inebriate, he appeared to champion the cause he loved and to defend Freemasonry in which his soul delighted. Whether he was a volunteer or was the paid attorney of the order is of course not known to the public; but he was evidently "fired up" for the occasion, and if his services were satisfactory to his employers, there is no occasion for regret, as it was exceedingly helpful to the convention in showing what Freemasonry can and does do for a man who loves it with all his might, mind and strength. Bro. Ronayne completed his speech and the audience retired without molestation.

Thursday witnessed much excitement on the streets, and men talked earnestly of the discussions of the previous day and evening. Nothing of an unusual character transpired during the day, but as evening approached rumors were circulated of a general raid when evil doers could find shelter under the darkness they love. The owner of the hall became somewhat solicitous, and the pastor of one of the churches was himself the bearer of a special message of warning. Precautionary steps were taken, and so far as I can judge an intended serious row averted. Officers were put on guard and what was more fatal to their purposes the ruffians were disarmed by the discovery and destruction of a quantity of spoiled eggs stored at a convenient point for use.

THE MICHIGAN STATE CONVENTION.

The semi-annual gathering of the Michigan Christian Association opposed to secret societies has just closed. A semi-annual meeting was an experiment in our State, but was a decided success. The local interest was most excellent, and lasting good was done. The entire community are pleased with the presence and labors of all who attended from abroad. The complaint about the non-attendance of many a one who might, and ought to have been present must be repeated. Where are the Wesleyans? Where are the Free Methodists? Where are the United Brethren? To be sure there is a coming up on the part of the U. B. church in this respect. Two of their ministers were present, Bro. B. Hamp and Rev. S. E. Lane and wife, who also ministers in holy things in connection with her companion. Bro. Gleason, of the U. B. church, was also present. We were glad to greet the smiling face of Bro. Cheney, pastor of the Wesleyan church in Tompkins, Jackson Co., and Bro. Raymond also from that charge. Beside these there were no Wesleyans present from a distance save the "old standby's," Bro. Swanson and wife, and Rev. D. A. Richards, Bro. Morse and wife from Shiawassee arriving Wednesday afternoon. Twelve delegates were elected at the late Wesleyan conference, none of whom were present, and only two sent letters of regret. Again I ask, where are the Wesleyans?

Brethren of the Wesleyan church, you will lose the fire and zeal and love of God out of your hearts as surely as you do not attend more strictly to the work of opposing the idolatrous systems of the secret lodges of this land. Heed my warning! By and by you will find no place of repentance, though I doubt not, you will seek it carefully with tears. The Free Methodists were not represented, only by Bro. J. Tucker, who came for the purpose of engaging to the Association as colporteur.

Bro. Stoddard came so as to deliver the opening address on Tuesday evening. There was a large audience present, and the speech was bristling with excellent points. The day sessions were well attended and were seasons of great profit. Pres. C. A. Blanchard arrived Wednesday morning. His speech Wednesday evening was listened to by an audience filling every corner of the church, and giving to the words of the speaker the most profound attention. The speech was characteristic of the man who is familiar to readers of the Cynosure. Remarks like this were heard among the audience at the conclusion of the speech, "If he would run for the Presidency I would vote for him," etc.

On Thursday afternoon we were profited and entertained with an other excellent speech upon the subject of Prohibition by Pres. Blanchard. A storm broke over the State on Thursday doing considerable damage in different localities, and keeping away a large portion of the audience. However, a goodly number were present, some Republicans, and I doubt not votes for prohibition will be the result of this afternoon meeting. The storm continuing no meeting was held on Thursday evening.

In all the sessions Bros. Foote and Clark figured prominently, their very faces being an encouragement to our work. Bro. C. sings with his wonted zeal and excellent spirit, although at times the music has a far-away sound as though wafted to the ear from "over the river." Bro. F., just up from a sick bed, present at the earnest protest of his anxious wife, gave every evidence of fulfilling the Scripture which saith, "though our outward man perish, yet the inward man is renewed day by day."

Rev. T. L. Wilkinson was introduced to the convention early in the meeting, having come all the way from Toronto, Canada, to attend and learn from us the methods we were employing in our opposition to this universal curse, to the end that in his own country some measures might be taken to free them from its galling chains. At the close of his remarks and appeal for sympathy and assistance, the agent of the N. C. A. offered the same to work in Canada as is being offered to the several States, by that body, viz., $25.00 per month to the agent employed, in new subscriptions to Cynosure; and there was also elected a committee of two to attend a convention in Canada at such time and place as shall be designated by Canada workers. The committee were Rev. D. A. Richards and Rev. H. A. Day.

A delegation of five were elected to attend the prospective congress of churches in Chicago, viz., Rev. C. C. Foote, Rev. S. E. Lane, Rev. H. D. Cheney, Bro. Geo. Swanson, and Bro. Geo. W. Clark. The committee on resolutions reported on Thursday forenoon, and the adoption of their report consumed a large part of the session. More especial discussion was given to the resolution having reference to the admission of members of secret societies to churches and to the communion service; also relating to anti-secrecy persons attending upon the services of pro-secrecy churches, and contributing to the support of the ministers who are connected, or are in sympathy with such societies.

Some disposition was shown to modify the resolutions as they first appeared, from the extremely radical position taken. Finally the resolutions were committed to the hand of Bro. Blanchard for revision and modification. The following is as it appeared from his hand:

Resolved: That members of secret associations should not be received to membership in Christian churches until they abandon their lodge connection.

Resolved: That in giving the invitation to the Lord's table, care should be taken to instruct the Lord's people that the lodges of our country are idolatrous in character, and that those who in these lodges take the cup of devils, ought not, in our churches, to take the cup of Christ.

Resolved: That Christians who are opposed to secret societies, ought not to encourage by their presence or contributions, churches which are neutral or in favor of secret societies in any case, where it is possible to act with those who declare the truth respecting these idolatrous organizations.

After amending the last resolution so as to strike out the last clause of it, the whole passed. It will be readily seen that a more radical position was never taken in this State. Some were hardly ready for such a position, but the majority favored it as amended, and thus it passed. The resolution as amended closes at the word "case," the remainder being entirely cut off.

On the whole we are convinced that no better convention has been held for years in this State. Michigan may be slow, but when we move we move strong. Among the workers, conservatism is rare.

A word to stockholders in our Association. Many

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U. MEETING.

MINNEAPOLIS, Oct. 23rd, 1886.

The national meeting was opened with enthusiasm, a large number being in attendance. The delegates from the different States came up to the convention full of the work with consecrated hearts ready for the work for which they were sent. The morning was spent in the selection of committees, reports from committees and the annual address of the president. Among the honored visitors who were present on the platform and who were duly presented to the convention were Mrs. Margaret Bright Lucas, daughter of John Bright and president of the World's W. C. T. U., London, England; Mrs. Blakey, Mrs. Perew, Mrs. Parker, Miss Imply and Mrs. Bradley, all sisters from the Queen's dominion; also Mrs. Yoemans and others from Canada, and a Mrs. Kephart, our first representative from the Sandwich Islands. In the afternoon devotional exercises were conducted by Mrs. S. J. Churchill of California. After the usual business had been disposed of Miss Willard said she wanted all the ladies present from Wyoming and Washington Territories to come up on the platform. She wanted all present to see and be introduced to some live women who were voters. One of them had also been a foreman-or forewoman as you may choose to call it—of a jury. Some one in the audience asked Miss Willard, "Do you, who are nearer them, think they look different, or less sweet and womanly than those who never voted?" "The only difference I see is that they look more sweet and womanly than the rest," was the reply.

The evening session was given (after devotional exercises) to addresses of welcome by Gen. Nettleton, who spoke for the citizens in place of Gov. Hubbard, who, though ill, sent a letter full of commendation and regret for his inability to attend. Mrs. Prof. Winchell spoke in behalf of the Minneapolis W. C. T. U., Mrs. Dr. Hobart in behalf of the State W. C. T. U., and Rev. Dr. Chase in behalf of the ministers. Responses were made by Miss Narcissa White of Pennsylvania and Mrs. Sallie Chapin of South Carolina. Mrs. Chapin, among other good things, said that a few years ago we at the North conquered in the South, but failed to conquer their hearts. "But now by your love, manifested towards us in many ways, our hearts are conquered and we are yours to work with and to work for." Would that I could give on paper not only the words here uttered but the inspiration that is in their actions and which shines out in their faces.

An interesting part of the evening was taken by the children who marched around the room singing a temperance song. Gen. Nettleton requested ten minutes time in which to represent the Anti-Saloon Republican views, which was granted him. Dr. T. P. Stevenson of the Christian Statesman presented the work of the National Reform Association. Would that the N. C. A. might have had their representative to present their special line of work.

In speaking to Miss Willard on the way to Minneapolis, she said, "I do not like secret societies and have no use for them." There can be no doubt that, did these consecrated women, who stand so firmly for the right in this great work, understand, or become enlightened on the secret society question, they would just as firmly stand for the right on this question of secretism. Some of our workers are here. Mrs. Ames of Menominee, Wisconsin, tells me that Captain Wilson and daughters are also here and I shall hope to meet them.

ANNA E. STODDARD.

MORE VICTORIES FOR CHRIST IN MEMPHIS.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Oct. 19, 1886.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Many things have transpired here since I last wrote you. The most important was the Baptist Foreign Mission Convention of the U. S. A., which met at the Tabernacle Baptist church the 22d ult.; and ere all the messengers could get away Bro. Hinman came, and it was cheering to hear him and Elder Cole, a returned missionary, talk of Africa. Bro. Hinman talked for us one night at prayer meeting and preached for us one Sunday from the text: "Awake, awake, put on thy strength, O Zion; put on thy beautiful garments, O Jerusalem, the holy city: for henceforth there shall no more come into thee the uncircumcised and the unclean." Isa. 52: 1. He gave us an excellent discourse, and did much good for the cause. But we also had a splendid expression in the Convention on the lodge question. Elder Braxton, in his sermon, which was reported to you by Bro. Hinman, made a strong appeal to the ministers to show themselves, and numbers of them spoke out, prominent among whom were Bros. A. S. Jackson of New Orleans and T. L. Jordan of Columbus, Miss., each of whom spoke in no measured terms concerning the wickedness of the lodge. They were quite a help to the church.

We have four persons who were excluded with the lodge company, but attend services regularly. These ministers from Louisiana, Mississippi and Maryland, bearing testimony to the truth I had so long contended for, caused two of the four to be now knocking at the door for admittance, having left the lodge. To the testimony of these brethren was added the sermon of Elder Hinman, and we rejoice in the Lord omnipotent, for all power is in his hands.

Several of the Baptist ministers of Memphis assayed to prejudice the minds of the messengers against holding the sessions of the convention in our church, and published a series of resolutions, saying that many of you are members of secret societies, and Countee has abused us because we are members, and our women, and has also excluded all persons from his church who would not leave their society; and the Convention, for this and other causes stated by them (which were basely false), ought, in their estimation, to be held elsewhere; but they reckoned with their host, and so went to the wall.

Our congregation is steadily increasing, though I have not been able to do much preaching. Malarial fever has kept myself and entire family down nearly all summer, and I am now only able to creep about. Constant anxiety and continual annoyance from the lodge has no little effect upon my mind, and there seems to be no cessation on their part; but by the grace of God I will not hold my peace. I can not, I dare not. I read in the Western Crank (thank God for its manly tone!) of a Congregational minister in Sioux City, I think, (where that Methodist minister was shot for his prohibition sentiments) carrying a revolver as a means of self-protection. I wanted to write him, but the paper got destroyed.

I remember on the 18th of October last, when I was shot in the street because of my opposition to secret societies, one of the men in the crowd accompanying me had a navy six-shooter, and he snapped it four times at the man who sprang from ambush, but it refused to fire. He came on to the house, and in testing it the next day it went off at once. You don't know how glad I was that that pistol would not fire. I just rejoiced. I always told my folks not to carry arms. God will fight our battles.

I do hope that minister will leave his pistol at home, for if he is attacked in the street his revolver will not shoot. Let that dear brother put his revolver down and trust God, and him alone.

Another incident that I deem worthy of note. Several young ladies here have become very much interested in Masonry, and one of them having a brother living in Marion, Ark., eighteen miles from Memphis, was there paying him a visit. While there the young man of the place gave them a social. This young lady got several of her companions and trained them all day, and at evening treated the party to a novel entertainment. She donned a masculine hat and opened a lodge of Master Masons in due form, to the consternation of the young men who had paid $25 to be initiated in the fooleries of the lodge. Two young men, who were candidates for the next meeting, declared themselves out, and said it was not what they thought it was; and so the good work goes on.

I have been part of three days writing this letter I am very feeble, but I am yet contending for the truth. I sincerely hope the readers of the Cynosure will pray for us.

"CLOSE UP THE RANKS."

GALT, Ont.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—My remarks, in the corner designated "Pith and Point," were noted by a sister in Herkimer county, N. Y., in your issue of the 9th, Sept., 1886. That calls to mind sixty years ago when Captain Morgan thought he could do something to close up the ranks and give Masonry its deadly blow, which he did and slew it in the free States. But "the deadly wound was healed." The monster lived elsewhere, and when men slept the enemy came in from foreign parts.

What losses have since been sustained by the noble army of soldiers for Christ, who then confessed their sins and so washed their characters in society's sight and "made them white in the blood of the Lamb!" No harm came to those who renounced their sin. But they were pledged to each other. What of the hundred thousand Freemasons who have renounced the lodge? Why not organize in an open manner to beat the foe that they despise and abhor? Can they afford no comfort to those, who, like me, are robbed of their property and no one will lend a helping hand to save? They worship where the demon worshiper of the lodge, their minister, denies Christ there and will not degrade himself by mentioning the name of the Nazarene; yet, because he can have a three thousand dollar salary for retailing "stale gospel truths to please old wives; does so on Sabbath! How he must laugh in the lodge with the drunken tavern-keeper, about the Sabbath-day work! "Well brother, if I poison their minds with old wives' fables on Sabbath, how is it with you? Don't you poison the wretches with bad whisky, and such like, and make as good a thing of it as I do? Let us both agree to live as others do, on the fool's pace."

So in business. Here is a prospectus of a Canada Loan and Banking company, springing into existence in 1878, with a proposed capital stock of one million dollars; shares $50.00 each. A barrister, ex-mayor and ex-M. P. for the city and county is president. The stock is worthless, till you give it value. A wolf in sheep's clothing advises you to take a hundred shares. You can take your time to pay them. You do so. Pay up ten per cent on the whole. In six years only seventy thousand or seven per cent of the "proposed capital" is taken up by the public. D. B. Chisholm, the president, steals 315 paid-up shares and with his steal takes sudden departure to parts unknown. This "perfect Christian" at the head of every reform, is reported as in Australia. He may be only across the lines doing a good business till the five years of statute limitation are up; then, with head as high as Lucifer, he can return to be a greater man in Hamilton than ever. Meanwhile his partner carries on the swindle; and five hundred of capitalized stock is seized to pay for debt on accumulating stock, taken to be paid up as the holder might be able. But the holder is an Anti-mason and minister of the Gospel. His co-presbyters, who are deists and demon-worshippers, join with secretists in driving him from his charge. No means of supporting himself or family exist. Those at ease in Zion laugh at his calamity and mock now when his fear cometh. Two years ago he was listening to the blasphemy of a Dr. Burns on the Sabbath day, haranguing the Masonic fraternity on the surpassing merits of the order above all others of divine or human origin, when one of them asked him what he thought of the orator? He told his friend the truth. "Does it pay you to speak that way of Masonry?" "Not in this life, but I hope it will in the next." Such is Masonry in Canada.

Now if you had a wise Anti-mason who has gone through such experience and knew how to advise in such a case in the columns of the Cynosure, it might do great good. The evil is that five hundred dollars are demanded for $4483 of unpaid stock which is not worth one cent, never was and never could be. There is no power in law as here administered that can punish such swindlers. In ordinary business transactions the offence sends the guilty one to penitentiary; why not the two liquidators who dare to serve many in this way where they can with impunity?

The sister in Herkimer county, N. Y., speaks of a widowed acquaintance in precisely similar circumstances, through a wily Mason that crept into her house to advise her, only to devour her substance. A young man, a druggist, who subscribed for the Cynosure and advocated the views there expressed, was discharged, is now destitute. If Anti-masons were organized into benefit societies for mutual instruction, aid, protection and comfort, how much good could be accomplished?

Besides "union is strength." That power may be used in many ways for good. We need books of song (introduced by brother Clark) in a thousand social, Anti-masonic circles in our cities, towns, villages and country districts. Social entertainments might be given. Speeches, addresses, dialogues, debates on Masonry and kindred reforms would all be in order. Six million of earnest, willing workers might be formed. Instead of those having the mark of the beast in the hand and in their forehead hanging out their flag everywhere to monopolize, the time may be very near when this abomination shall be made to disappear. This must require great caution to guard against sinful mystery on the one hand and that imprudent, unguarded openness of manner and meetings, that would lay your plans all before the enemy that he may know and defeat them.

Our excellent secretary, Mr. Stoddard, and the members of the N. C. A. should lose no time in having such rules written and put in circulation. The chief organ of our movement on this continent against Masonry, the Cynosure, would increase its circulation a hundred fold by such organization.

Into this grand army of reformers we need the youth of both sexes enlisted. As soon as they are able to take a place in a "beneficiary degree," they should be taught to be prudent, economical, industrious, enterprising and excellent. They could learn to manage their own business affairs, and being animated by a healthy Christian influence, would put down labor strikes. Masters and servants, employers and employes might meet in the same social gathering and the best results follow to all the members.

Are there not now capitalists, who have invested largely in manufactures, so guarded at every point by Freemasonry, that they can make nothing? Those from whom they buy, to whom they sell, as well as those who manufacture, all secretists, and what then can they do? Where are the working Anti-masons? Give us more practical Anti-masonry.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE WRITINGS OF JOHN.

LESSON VI.—November 7, 1886.—Thomas Convinced.—John 20: 19-31.

GOLDEN TEXT.—And Thomas answered and said unto him, My Lord, and my God.—John 20: 28.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The Doubting Disciple. vs. 19-25. Human nature is disposed to oscillate between the extremes of skepticism and credulity. The age which imprisoned Galilee for announcing a great truth of nature, that the earth moved around the sun, was a firm believer in astrology, and everywhere the greatest charlatans reaped fortunes. In our own day we see a similar phenomenon. Men and women will crowd to a seance, and swallow all the shallow trickeries and vapid nonsense of spirit mediums while they reject the miracles of Scripture as too much for human credulity! Thomas, however, represents another, and far more respectable class of doubters. Nothing in the account seems to show that he was very different from average human kind. He was, indeed, as we are all of us, too apt to be the bondsman of the outward and the material. What he could see and touch, and that only he would credit, forgetting that there are a thousand things outside the realm of sight and touch that are just as much facts as anything that can be proved by the testimony of the senses. One very important truth we learn from this account: It is our duty to receive the testimony of honest and competent witnesses. Why should Thomas distrust the evidence of all his fellow disciples? They were neither superstitious nor visionary. They had gone back to their humble occupation of fishing, bitterly disappointed men, their dream shattered as it seemed forever, and any thought of the possibility of Christ's resurrection as far as possible from their minds. Yet to-day we can find men who will doubt what Bernard and Finney and Colver, and other good and sainted Christian ministers tell us from their own experience about Freemasonry! There are also many doubting Thomases who refuse the testimony of credible witnesses that there is such a thing as being healed by the prayer of faith; or, if they do not doubt it as regards others, they doubt its possibility for themselves. There are Thomases who are always doubting their own acceptance with Christ, or their ability to do any work for him. Such are never active, joyful Christians. What they need is exactly what Thomas needed,—a personal view of Christ so clear and full as to take away all doubt forever.

2. The Doubter Convinced. vs. 26-31. Tennyson has sung the praises of "honest doubt," but it is no enviable condition of mind. A great work was never accomplished by a doubter, honest or otherwise. Faith is always a condition of the highest success. Had Columbus doubted the existence of a New World, he would never have been its discoverer. Honest believers are much more common than honest skeptics. It was not through his doubt, but through his faith triumphing over his doubt that Thomas made a nobler confession than even the beloved John or the restored Peter. Doubt is like mist and fog, heavy, depressing, disheartening; faith is like the sunshine, spreading warmth and inspiration of itself. That is a false philosophy which glorifies doubt. But though Thomas was rebuked because he required sight before he would believe, a groundless faith is worth nothing; is in fact, the mere credulity of ignorance. The witness of the Apostles, the evidence of the ages, the testimony of the Spirit—with all these upon which to ground his belief, the doubting Thomas of to-day sins against a blaze of light unknown to even his Gospel prototype.

LIGHT FROM THE WORD.

Why ought we to believe in a living Christ? Deut. 10: 15, 1. c. John 3: 11. What is the rule of all progress in spiritual life? Phil. 3: 16; Rom. 1: 17.

From Peloubet's Notes.

"When the doors were shut . . . for fear of the Jews." The doors were probably not only shut, but locked, as a protection; the fear of the Jews was natural, for it was reasonable to expect that the crucifixion of the Master would be followed by an attempt to pursue and punish the disciples; and this natural expectation was increased by the prophecies of persecution which formed a part of Christ's final instructions.—Abbott.

"Came Jesus and stood in their midst." Most likely by quietly opening the doors, passing in, and closing them after him, as the angel by night opened the prison-doors for the apostles to go out (Acts 5: 19), and as afterwards an angel similarly opened the prison-door for Peter to pass out (Acts 12: 7-9). This required superhuman power.—G. W. Clark. The fact that Jesus entered through the closed door does not indicate that the body was other than the natural body which had been laid in the grave; and Christ's language at this very time, as reported by Luke, "A spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye see me have," appears to be conclusive that his resurrection body was his physical body. It is as futile to ask how, with a natural body, he could enter through the closed door, as to ask how he could walk upon the water. Miracles defy explanation. It is to be observed, however, that the Evangelist does not state that Jesus entered through the closed door. He simply states the two facts which came within his own observation: the doors were closed, and while so closed, suddenly Jesus was seen standing in the midst of the disciples, within the room.—Abbott.

"As my father hath sent me, even so send I you." They are to be ambassadors of Christ, to carry on his work, to proclaim his salvation,—forgiveness, peace, new hearts and new lives, God a friend and Father, heaven the home of all who will come and believe. Their commission according to Mark was, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature."

THE MISSION OF THE CHURCH. (1) The evangelization of the whole world is the mission of the whole church. Not one person is to rest till the light of the Gospel shines in every nook and corner of the world, and the knowledge of the Lord covers the earth as the waters cover the sea. (2) Jesus, by coming into the world with the good news, and making atonement on the cross, has prepared the way and furnished the motives. (3) He has sent his Holy Spirit to endue his disciples with power to convict the world of sin, and to implant new lives. (4) He has promised always to be present, and that wonderful signs shall follow the preaching of the Gospel. History is full of the trophies of the Gospel.

"Whose soever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them." The word remit signifies primarily and properly to dismiss, put away, get rid of. As applied to sin in the New Testament, it indicates not a mere release from the threatened penalty of transgression, but redemption from the power of the sin itself. In the first clause of this verse, therefore, there is no hint of any power in apostle or apostolic successor to forgive sins, or to declare with authority sins forgiven. There is simply the declaration that when the disciple of Christ, acting under his Master's commission and with the power given by the in-breathed gift of the Holy Ghost, does in fact put away, dismiss, get rid of sin, in the individual or the community, the work shall not be in vain in the Lord; the devil so cast out shall not return to find the house swept and garnished, and take possession of it again (Matt. 12: 44, 45). The work shall abide. Thus the first clause of this verse embodies a promise like that of Isaiah 55: 11, and is interpreted by its fulfillment in Paul's experience, as in 1 Thess. 1: 4-7.—Abbott.

"Was not with them when Jesus came." (1) He lost the assurance of them; (2) he lost the inbreathing of the Holy Ghost; (3) he lost the gladness which came to the other disciples; (4) he lost the precious words of Jesus.

"Thomas answered and said unto him, My Lord and my God." He passes at once from the depth of his despondency and hesitation to the most exalted faith. The words are certainly addressed to Jesus. They are a triumphant confession of his faith, not simply in the resurrection, but in him whom he sees before him in all the divinity both of his person and of his work.

—The English government has acknowledged that it would have been almost impossible to cope with the dacoits or marauders in Burmah without the employment of a large army, had it not been for the heroism and fidelity of the Karen Christians.

SECRET SOCIETIES CONDEMNED.

BY GREAT MEN IN THE STATE.

George Washington, in a letter written a year before his death: "I preside over no lodge, nor have I been in one more than once or twice during the last thirty years."

Charles Francis Adams: "A more perfect agent for the devising and execution of conspiracies against church and state could scarcely have been conceived."

Thaddeus Stevens: "By Freemasonry, trial by jury is transformed into an engine of despotism and Masonic fraud."

President Millard Fillmore, J. O. Spencer and others: "The Masonic fraternity tramples upon our rights, defeats the administration of justice, and bids defiance to every government which it cannot control."

Chief Justice John Marshall: "The institution of Masonry ought to be abandoned as one capable of much evil and incapable of producing any good which might not be effected by safe and open means."

William Wirt: "I view it as at war with the fundamental principles of the social compact, and a wicked conspiracy against the laws of God and man, that ought to be put down."

John Quincy Adams: "I am prepared to complete the demonstration before God and man, that the Masonic oaths, obligations and penalties cannot by any possibility be reconciled to the laws of morality, of Christianity, or of the land."

Charles Francis Adams: "Every man who takes a Masonic oath forbids himself from divulging any criminal act, unless it might be murder or treason, that may be communicated to him under the seal of fraternal bond, even though such concealment were to prove a burden upon his conscience and a violation of his bounden duty to society and to his God."

Charles Sumner: "I find two powers here in Washington in harmony, and both are antagonistic to our free institutions, and tend to centralization and anarchy—Freemasonry and Slavery; and they must both be destroyed if our country is to be the home of the free, as our ancestors designed it."

Thurlow Weed: "I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the Anti-Masonic excitement by a sincere desire, first to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of secret societies."

William H. Ewald: "Before I would place my hand between the hands of other men in a secret lodge, order, class, or council, and, bending on my knee before them, enter into combination with them for any object, personal or political, good or bad, I would pray to God that that hand and that knee might be paralyzed, and that I might become an object of pity and even the mockery of my fellow-men."

Wendell Phillips: "I wish you success most heartily in your efforts to arouse the community to the danger of secret societies. They are a great evil; entirely out of place in a republic, and no patriot should join or uphold them. Considering the great forces which threaten the welfare of the nation in the next thirty years, and how readily and efficiently they can use any secret organizations, such should not be allowed to exist."

George Washington's Farewell Address: "The very idea of the power and the right of the people to establish government presupposes the duty of every individual to obey the established government. All obstructions to the execution of the laws, all combinations and associations, under whatever plausible character, with the real design to direct, control, counteract, or awe the regular deliberation and action of the constituted authorities, are destructive of this fundamental principle, and of fatal tendency."

Daniel Webster: "All secret associations the members of which take upon themselves extraordinary obligations to one another, and are bound together by secret oaths, are naturally sources of jealousy and just alarm to others; are especially unfavorable to harmony and mutual confidence among men living together under popular institutions, and are dangerous to the general cause of civil liberty and just government. Under the influence of this conviction it is my opinion that the future administration of all such oaths and the formation of all such obligations should be prohibited by law."

Edward Everett: "A secret society so widely diffused and connected as this puts a vast power, capable of the most dangerous abuse, into hands irresponsible to the public."

George Washington (to Gov. Trumbull): "Masonry is a benevolent institution, which may be employed for the best or worst purposes."

Richard Rush: Hooker, personifying law, eloquently exclaims, "her seat is the bosom of God, her voice the harmony of the world; everything on earth does her homage, the highest is not beyond her control, the least as claiming her protection." Masonry has overset this primordial system. She has dethroned this image of God upon earth. To reinstate it over so insolent a victor, we must have a political organization. There is no other way of assailing, there is no other hope of vanquishing, there need be no other dream of humbling such a foe. It fights with desperation.

Wendell Phillips: "History shows them perverting justice, stopping at no crime to protect and conceal their mummeries; controlling politics for selfish and personal ends, and interfering with great danger in national emergencies. Every good citizen should make war on all secret societies, and give himself no rest until they are forbidden by law and rooted out of existence."

John Hancock: "I am opposed to all secret associations."

James Madison: "From the number and character of those who now support the charges against Masonry, I cannot doubt that it is at least susceptible of abuse, outweighing any disadvantages promised by its patrons."

The establishment of a College for the education of colored children and the white children of the mountaineers in a slave State at a time when the whole country was shaken by the discussion of abolition, was a sublime act of faith in God who "hath made of one blood all nations of men."

J. BLANCHARD.

HENRY L. KELLOGG.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, OCTOBER 28 1886

The Congregational Council which met in Chicago last week contained, perhaps, as great a proportion of sound Christian men as any clerical body which ever met. And when they see that the lodge-worship is demon-worship; that the lodge system is disintegrating the churches, and its secret oaths are sinking our court-houses into popular contempt, the pulpit, press and platform will open on the lodge, and its fall will be greater than that of slavery, and do more to hasten the coming of Christ. Ecclesiasticism can mingle and thrive with Masonry; Congregationalism can not. And the lodge, as much as slavery, helped to keep Congregationalism out of the South till slavery fell. The fall of the lodge will stop its decline and restore Congregationalism to its pristine power, as it did in the Finney revivals.

Dr. R. H. McDonald, the millionaire Prohibitionist and philanthropist, on the Pacific coast, at first, as thousands of good men have done, joined and undertook to work Masonry for Christ. But like most of those thousands, he is now represented as changing his mind. Demon-worship can not be made to serve Christ. All Satan asked of Christ was worship, and Masonry is that worship.

Paul looked at "unseen things." The invisible are everywhere more than the visible. Looking back, we now see that Satan started Jesuitism to head off Luther's Bible issued in 1534, "the Society of Jesus" (Jesuitism) was endorsed by the Pope six years later, when the Bible and "Salvation by Faith" had got fairly under way; and it stopped the Reformation in Europe, so that some principalities have actually gone back to popery. Let us beware lest Satan use the Council in a like way: buying Christians with trifles and stopping religion.

Of the early Abolitionists, Garrison, H. C. Wright, Elizur Wright, Gerrit Smith, C. C. Burleigh, Codding, McKim, W. T. Allen, and others, with several women, became unsound, and some of them open infidels. This deterred the leading clergy of New England, except Drs. Hawes and Ide, and Dr. Beman of Troy, from espousing the Abolition cause, till it became unpopular to stand aloof from it. There is no such reason for shunning to oppose the lodge. A single successful congress for discussion will start an avalanche which will sweep demon-worship out of the churches.

HON. HALLECK FLOYD, at the Columbus, O., Convention, stated the object of such a congress clearly: "To develop latent opposition to the lodge, and unify that already developed." This can, must, and will be done.

It is not generally known that Masonry and popery are one: that the Chapter degrees were invented and worked in France by a Scotch apostate to popery, Chevalier Ramsay, who was aided by popish priests. Chapter means a dean and his clergy. The priests were Jesuits. Loyola's Society of Jesus was a lodge. The initiation at first was fearfully savage; taking twenty-eight days to put a candidate through it. He then became sold to the order, body and soul. Powderly's initiation and sworn obedience are nothing to it. This savage initiation was afterward cut down from twenty-eight to fourteen days. In the Revelation, Chap. 13: 14, the image of the beast, which is Masonry, was made by order of the lamb-dragon beast, which is popery; by "them that dwell on the earth," i. e., the people.

Mr. E. A. Cook sent 300 copies of his lately issued Knights of Labor pamphlet, donated to the Council, with a notice to be read. The member requested, said curtly, "I don't propose to read such things." The notice was given by vice-chairman Innes of Memphis. The faculties of both Seminaries in Chicago, Congregational and Presbyterian, were glad of the book. Perhaps a hundred members of the Council received it. All needed it, and if the first brother requested had read the notice, all but two or three would have been glad of it. Pity!

Profs. Fisk, Boardman, Curtis, and Wilcox of the Congregational, and Dr. Marquis and Herrick Johnson of the Presbyterian Seminary, signed a strong endorsement for a Congress to discuss the lodge system. Thirty or forty members of the Council signed the same, and hundreds would have signed it if asked. One, a graduate of Wheaton College, got the book, but refused to sign the paper favoring discussion of the lodge! Of the 300 members, perhaps half a dozen were Masons.

When Abolitionism began to make some headway, a society was formed in Boston "For the elevation of the colored race." Good men joined it. But it was plainly intended by Satan as a back fire to quench Abolitionism; to keep Christians from joining Abolition societies, by giving an excellent appearance of doing something for the blacks, while the very name slaves was not mentioned. Like that Boston convention, the last week's Council was thoroughly non-committal on the Prohibition party and the anti-secret movement, though the members were opposed to both saloon and lodge. The Boston society sent its secretary to the West Indies to examine West India emancipation, and then died. So will this Council die unless it ceases to sham.

THE NATIONAL CONGREGATIONAL COUNCIL.

This comparatively new body met for its sixth convention in Union Park church (Dr. Noble's) in this city, Oct 13th, 1886. Eight or ten more than 300 members were reported present, the largest council held yet. Though the youngest national body among the sects, this is yet most interesting to the readers of the Cynosure because our reform has more to fear or hope from it than from any other national representative religious body. In our national agony, while the fight wavered like the scale of a balance, Jefferson Davis, at Montgomery, proposed the reunion of the contending States "with New England left out," and an Episcopal minister proposed the same reconstruction in a Milwaukee paper, "with the Puritan element left out!" This Congregational Council represents the Puritan element which the slave-power so dreaded. The other denominations, whose noble testimony and co-operation against the lodges makes Satan's secret strongholds shudder, like Charleston in an earthquake, are more ecclesiastical than the Congregationalists, and so are less national. We therefore give large space in this present number to this Chicago Council and send copies to the members, and we believe our readers will thank us for it.

THE COUNCIL'S ORIGIN.

This was fifteen years ago in Oberlin. The Cynosure was then three years old. President Finney's life had been threatened; the publisher of the Cynosure had been threatened with fire; nineteen denominations had been represented in our National Christian Association; a U. S. Senator had addressed us in Farwell Hall; and a lodge master in Yates City, Ill., had said to a member of that lodge, "Things are getting hotter than hell up there at Chicago; and we shall have to come out and meet them or let Masonry go by the board."

Three years after the N. C. A. was formed at Pittsburgh, this National Council was started by Dr. Quint, as chief promoter, at Oberlin. Dr. Quint had voted with the slavery party down to Buchanan; was Grand Chaplain of the Massachusetts Masonic lodges, and said of his Masonry in a public speech, "If any body don't like it, he may help himself." C. C. Dame, who was said never to enter a church where Christ was worshiped in his town of Newburyport, was Mr. Quint's Grand Master; St. John of Worcester, Mass., a cunning and controversial Universalist, was Deputy District Grand Master, was swearing into the lodges of Massachusetts the Congregational ministers and members; and Manning, Knight, Fisher, Stratton, Currier and a dozen more pastors had followed Quint through the degradation and blasphemies of initiation; and this same propagandist of idolatry in Christian New England was made secretary and sole manager of this National Council to represent Puritan Congregationalism to the world, though Masonry is priestism, deism, despotism, and every thing else which Puritans abhorred and fled to America to escape!

President Finney was old and stricken in years. He finally went into the Oberlin Council, and the entire body reverently rose up at his entrance. And but for his book and bold stand against the lodge, his name would have been put among the Congregational saints (he is now in heaven) whose names adorned the gallery front last week in Dr. Noble's church. Stars of far less magnitude shone in that galaxy; one, particularly, who, for $14,000 salary paid in gold, when gold was at a high premium ordered every car on the Union Pacific road, freight and passenger, to run regularly on the Sabbath day. But Pres. Finney, whose great prestige and the church where he ministered sheltered the birth of this Council, was dropped from the Council's firmament last week.

But Dr. Quint is to be honored for one thing, viz: consistency. Unlike the Presbyterian Bateman of Knox College, and others who blow hot and cold, for the lodge and against it, Dr. Quint stands firm for the lodge. In his speech last week he proclaimed his adherence to the college secret lodges, which J. Q. Adams and Edward Everett routed; which Secretary Evarts condemned in a commencement speech at Yale; and which the great and good Dr. McCosh at Princeton, a few weeks since said to the writer, should be "chased out of the colleges." This accused system, which nine leading college presidents declared, in letters to the now sainted Hitchcock of Amherst, to be hostile to the learning and religion of colleges; this hateful system which robs the parents of college pupils to build windowless buildings in which to worship demons and carouse at night; this system Dr. Quint last week proclaimed himself a member of for the edification and delight of the Sixth National Congregational Council!

Such is the origin of this Council, of which Leonard Bacon said, in a letter to the writer, "My position from the first has been adherence under protest; and the more I see of its working, the less I like it."

WHY THE CYNOSURE OPPOSED IT.

The Cynosure opposed, not indeed the Council but its Masonic head; and it was the most costly opposition which the Cynosure ever made. At length Dr. Quint became unpopular. At Concord, N. H., 1883, he had but two votes for secretary, and Henry A. Hazen, who never joined a secret lodge, was put in his place. The reason assigned by Western members was, that Dr. Quint had left the pulpit for New Hampshire Legislature, and was so engrossed with politics and Masonry that he was unfitted for the office. This change rejoiced us. We hoped the Congregational people had returned to the abhorrence of lodge worship, felt and uttered by Moses Stuart, and the old Andover Faculty; by Dr. Storrs of Braintree and Dr. Hopkins of Newport, who held that the lodge belonged to "the kingdom of Satan," and that "a Freemason was hand in hand with the devil."

What is our surprise to see Dr. Quint "committee on our ministerial force," "chairman on Publishing Committee," chairman of "special committee on union with the Free Baptists," opening the Council with prayer, administering the holy supper with hands which had held while he drank wine from a human skull; and, with Dr. Dexter on committee on pastorate and ministerial standing, while his standing is that of skinning the churches by occasional supply. His friend, Dr. Z. Eddy, not even a member of this Council, administering its communion, appearing several times in the reports by the newspapers, published for Sabbath sermon in the principal church, and this after being Dr. Quint's appointee Council preacher at Detroit.

Now, though there were learned and godly men, members of the Council, who might have shared these services with Dr. Eddy, we should not have taken any note of him but for the fact that in exalting him the Council exalts a man known to the secretists in the crowd to be a Royal Arch Mason, sworn to befriend a "companion" of that degree, "be he right or wrong," and a sworn secret "brother" to every blackleg who may belong to the lodge. Dr. Eddy is reported to have begun life without a liberal education as a Cumberland Presbyterian; joined the Congregationalists as pastor of the noble Seth M. Gates, who was his leading deacon, and who renounced Masonry, with a hundred others, at Leroy, N. Y., 1823. And yet, at Warsaw, New York, with such a godly deacon, who was a member of Congress, and who had revealed all the Blue Lodge contained, who denounced the lodge till his death—while the pastor of such a man, Dr. Eddy was stripped and sworn into the first three degrees. He went thence and became pastor of that noble man of God, J. P. Williston, Esq., and while thus engaged was willing we should consider him a withdrawn Mason, absenting himself from a funeral held in his own church on the Sabbath day by three or four lodges, over a Unitarian non-professor, a Unitarian and Methodist preacher officiating. Mr. Williston knew all this and forgave all, as did also the writer. Dr. Eddy went from Northampton to a Dutch Presbyterian church, thence back to a Congregational church in Chelsea, Mass., and while there took four more degrees in Masonry to the "Holy Royal Arch" degree invented by an apostate, Chevalier Ramsay, and used to overthrow free government and restore popery and the Stuarts to the English throne, for which service Charles II. gave Masonry the name of "The Royal Art." This horrible record (see Rebald's History, p. 55), well known by Dr. Quint, is the presumptive explanation of Dr. Eddy's promotion in the Council, and his own; and these and like hateful facts are the reasons for objections of the Cynosure.

CAUSES OF CONGREGATIONAL DECLINE.

The Cynosure insists that the steady decline of Congregationalism; its sinking from the first to the sixth or seventh American denomination; its running behind the increase of our whole population, as shown by the Year Book and Secretary Haez—this funeral march of the Congregational body, is explained by the lodge. This decline is not for the want of money, few people pay like Congregationalists; nor for the want of mind, look at its colleges and theological seminaries and the splendid men who man them. Nor is the steady decline of Congregationalism caused by the starched neckties and stiff manners, somewhat coarsely ridiculed by Dr. Pentecost. Dr. Pentecost's manners and methods would not be popular in Richard S. Storrs's magnificent congregation; nor would the decline be stopped by a ministerial rush to the Jerry McAuley mission, or the Five Points. Congregationalism has caught the consumption by abandoning its ground principle, stated in Bradshaw's Apology, and restated by Bancroft, to-wit: "That no ceremony should be tolerated unless warranted by the Word of God." And the Mason lodges profess to be nothing but human inventions and commandments of men, which Christ says make God's law void and his worship vain.

Why then do Episcopalians and Methodists flourish with their swarms of bishops, clergy, and members who are Masons? The answer is, because they know no better, as Abraham and Jacob flourished by reason of their ignorance when both would be put in the penitentiary if here now. Congregationalism did not fail to go South by reason of its weakness, but because of its strength. It required the white and black brother to commune and vote together, which slavery would not allow. Now Congregationalism goes South; and the whole lodge system, requiring abject obedience to unknown superiors, is just as anti-Congregational as slavery. Hence a Congregational church manual is an Anti-masonic document, and the reason why Dr. Quint's and Dr. Eddy's Masonry does not conflict with the Congregationalism, is that their Masonry is secret. If they practiced it in open church it would conflict. But God sees it in the dark lodge at night, and the Holy Ghost is grieved, and Congregationalism declines. Other churches which habituate their members to obey, these again can coalesce with the lodge; and a free church or a free state cannot; and when the lodge, which is despotism and deism, gets into a free church or a free state its court-houses and communion-tables begin to sink into popular contempt.

This is not all. Congregationalists have nearly dropped discipline by dropping Scriptural eldership, which the Presbyterians retain; and though their Supreme Court of six hundred members, sitting two or three weeks to try all appealed cases, is little better than a solemn farce, and makes all the trouble for that great and good denomination, their local churches are better and more Scriptural than Congregational churches; and the clergy of the Presbyterian church South are cleaner of the lodge than the Congregationalists of Massachusetts.

Then Congregationalism is declining because two-thirds or three-fourths of its members are women and children. These go to the churches and the men to the lodges. Intelligent colored pastors, South, now see and say that the lodges are disintegrating their churches; and the poison is none the less sure because it is slow.

FAULTS OF THE LATE COUNCIL.

They err who think the Bible disallows all councils but pro re nata councils like that at Jerusalem about circumcision. Christ requires us to "judge of our own selves what is right." The United States of Judea were kept alive for centuries by regularly recurring councils called "Festivals;" and the reasons are strong for such councils in a wide country like ours. But our councils must not be shams, reversing Christ's command to "Seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness" and all needful things will be added, and turning it into: Seek money first and last, from the beginning of council to end, hoping that all righteousness will come without any seeking.

A report was adopted on temperance which said: "We are not here as third party, or fourth party, or Republican anti-saloon, or Republican saloon party," and the brother sat down without telling us what he would have us do.

Then there was a terrible dearth of Scripture in the Council. To look over the full newspaper reports of speeches and proceedings one is struck with the almost total absence of the Word of God. The Saviour says, "If any man will serve me let him follow me;" do as I did, not follow usage, tradition and by-laws. Every member of that Council knew that our young men are being tempted and drawn by thousands, and their money by millions, into lodges which are organized deism, and sworn to life-long concealment from their families. The churches have paid twenty-four thousand, nine hundred and thirty-seven dollars and sixty-four cents ($24,937.64) for this Council to advise them what to do. Every boy in a mechanic shop is pressed to join a "union" or the "Knights," and the Quints and Eddys are joining the Masons, and Rev. Frank Woodbury is a Knight Templars' orator. Even Oberlin is a theological professor whose example has drawn scores in Massachusetts into the lodge, and this great Council has come and feasted and gone without doing what they are paid to do, as Council men here and as pastors at home; viz., tell the people what these hosts on hosts of secret orders mean; whether to join or refrain, oppose or not oppose them. These secret orders almost all teach salvation by ceremonies, and promise salvation without Christ. Then they are human substitutes for the atonement; wolves seeking to destroy God's sheep; and "The hireling seeth the wolf coming and fleeth because he is an hireling." This is a fearful word, and true as fearful.

Now let us repent of the woeful failures of this Council. Let us not criminate and re-criminate. Let us love as brethren—not hate our brother in our heart, nor "suffer sin upon him." Let us start from Pentecost, as those disciples did, and sweep clean as we go. When 1,500 lodges fell fifty-two years ago, fifteen thousand persons were converted in the city of Rochester alone. The night is far spent, the day is at hand. God looketh on the earth and it trembleth. He toucheth our hills and turns them to volcanoes. His judgments are abroad in the earth; learn righteousness. There will be no difficulty in reaching the masses when we show them their sins, and no difficulty in uniting churches when we all follow Christ.

—Rev. C. C. Foote of Detroit lately showed his faith in the efforts made against secretism by paying $25 for the Michigan State work; $10 for the Kentucky mission stations under Mr. Fee, and $10 to send the Cynosure to colored ministers. This last fund needs greatly the help of friends everywhere.

—Our correspondence crowds upon our columns this week, and we regret the necessity of laying by letters from Secretary Stoddard and Bros. Hinman and J. F. Browne till another week. But there is also an agreeable side. The interest in a reform may be in a degree measured by the correspondence of its supporters.

ANTI-MASONS, WRITE FOR YOUR PAPER and help thus to carry forward the cause.

—During the National Congregational Council Rev. S. P. Smith of Knoxville, Tennessee, a co-delegate with Bro. Innes from the Central South Association, went into a restaurant at No. 464 West Madison street, and was asked to leave by R. J. Mossop, the proprietor, on account of his color. Dr. Williams of this city suitably denounced the outrage on Mr. Smith, who has been encouraged to enter suit in the Superior Court. Let this man be taught that such folly is not tolerated in Chicago.

—Rev. Robert West, editor of the Advance of this city, died suddenly in Sycamore, Ill., Monday morning at 4 o'clock. Mr. West has been in poor health for about a year, some of the time quite sick. He preached at Sycamore twice on the Sabbath, against the advice of friends. The exact cause of his death is not explained, but his sudden end was not unexpected by intimate acquaintances. Mr. West was opposed to the lodge, and has written ably for truth and righteousness against the secret system, but rather as a correspondent than an editor. His loss will be deeply felt among the Congregational churches of the West.

—"Some of the Masonic papers," says the Voice of Masonry, "have published the assertion that the late Judge David Davis was a Freemason and received Masonic burial honors. Such was not the fact. He never was a member of the fraternity." This assurance of Judge Davis's position is equivalent to saying that this eminent jurist was, like Chase and Henry Wilson, at heart opposed to the lodge.

—"The 'high-caste' members of the Knights of Pythias lodges belonging to the 'Uniform Rank' have not only a complete military organization, with generals, colonels, brigades, regiments, captains, etc., but have picked out one Sabbath day of the fifty-two, to deprecate it with an annual church parade. This took place on the 17th inst. The lodges in all their brave trumpery marched up and down Michigan Avenue in this city to Trinity Episcopal church where Rev. Dean Whitmarsh and Rev. Lewis Osborn assisted the lodge in their performance and desecration.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

As the autumnal frosts tint the park and street foliage of Washington with brighter hues, the entire city begins to assume a livelier and gayer appearance. The President and his official family returned from their vacations. The desks in the departments filled, the reappearance of stylish equipages and the familiar crowd on the avenues, and a general increase of interest in business affairs—all these are signs that the season of social entertainments and receptions, of Congressional eloquence and negligence, and of renewed labor in clerical and business circles is close at hand.

The city is full of strangers. The approaching session of Congress is already shown by the presence of the usual advance guard of lobbyists and office-seekers. There are also a number of politicians here, who have come to make complaints or give advice to the President. The departments and all other places of interest fairly swarm with sight-seers from the time the doors are opened in the morning until the hour for closing.

The Treasury is probably more interesting than any other of the Executive Departments. The State, War, and Navy Departments occupy one building, which is the most ornate structure in Washington. The Patent Office has for curiosities the model rooms, where an idea may be obtained of the wonderful inventive skill of the American people. The Post Office Department has many bureaus worthy of interest, particularly the Dead Letter Office, where there is a unique and varied collection taken from the mails in transit, and where everything unmailable, from an Indian tomahawk to a snake in alcohol, may be found.

The Agricultural Department, too, is well worth a visit. It may be interesting to those who receive packages from this Department containing the seeds so nicely packed, to know how this is accomplished. Nearly all the work is done by women. The paper pockets are cut by machinery, then they are folded and pasted by hand, then counted and labeled. About 30,000 are made every day; each folder is required to make at least 1,000. Since the first of June not far from three million pockets have been printed at the Department. Afterwards the pockets are filled by dexterous hands with astonishing rapidity, then closed, assorted, tied in bundles, and are ready for agriculturists all over the land.

But the Treasury Department contains more objects of interest than any of the above mentioned. The structure itself is one of the oldest in this comparatively new city, and has not the fresh look of the other Government edifices here. Within, there may be seen the Rogues' Gallery; a collection of photographs of counterfeiters; a curious display of counterfeit money; the beautiful Cash Room, inlaid with colored marbles; the great silver vaults of the United States, Uncle Sam's strong box; the gallery containing the pictures of all the Secretaries of the Treasury; the display of letters relating to the Conscience Fund, etc. Of late another interesting collection may be seen there. It consists of a number of articles of jewelry, silverware, watches, portraits, etc., that were captured by the U. S. army during the war, and deposited in the Treasury. There are many valuable and costly ornaments. Some of the gold is of the best quality. There is one set of exquisitely eutameous, surrounded by pearls. One box is filled with rings, brooches, buckles, pins and locketts, all of pure native gold. Some of the jewelry is broken, and gives evident signs of having been collected in great haste. One of the most curious things in the collection is an old-fashioned English bull's eye gold watch, with its crystal a quarter of an inch thick. There are also some seals, graven with heraldic devices; and a number of precious stones, diamonds, pearls, topazes, and others. The articles are waiting for some one to claim them and prove their ownership.

The decision of Secretary Lamar reversing the rule of Land Commissioner Sparks will be welcomed among the homesteads of the West. Sparks had decided that, while a man may marry without invalidating his land claim, with a woman the case is different, and her title is not good, after marriage, to a homestead entered before. How such a stupid decision should ever have been allowed at first is strange.

The Grand Council of Albert Pike's 33-degree Masons met last week. Ex-Governor Sherman of Iowa is attending, and also Senator Teller of Colorado. A Lieutenant Brown of the U. S. Navy has been elected "Treasurer General" of the body. Pike, from his citadel on Massachusetts Avenue and Third St., keeps watch of every motion of Government as Powderly proposed the Knights of Labor should do.

THE HOME.

A SUMMER LESSON.

The brook that threads the forest glade
Whispers, beneath the shade,
His dream of love to listening flowers,
Through the long summer hours;
While myriad insects, in their festive round,
Tune all the air to one rich harmony of sound.

The leaves, which rustle in the breeze,
Made music as they please,
And the soft zephyrs pass along
Echoing the mystic song,
Till the whole woodland like a chantry rings,
With antiphonal hymns, praising the King of kings.

Here let us rest awhile, and dream
Upon sweet Nature's theme—
The love of God in great and small,
And mercy over all—
So fair a nursery garden still is ours,
Fragrant with memories dropped from Eden's long-lost bowers.

If love can bear so long with sin,
The heart of man to win,
If heaven its beauty thus can spend,
Yet hardly reach its end,
How shall we dare to weary or complain,
Though all our toil and work should seem to be in vain?

The palest flower that hides unseen
Beneath its leafy screen,
The smallest bird that sings on high
Its gladness to the sky,
The faintest whisper of the summer wind,
Each has its special work in God's eternal mind.

A life of sacrificed desire,
A heart consumed with fire,
Eyes that can read in every face
Some lines of heavenly grace,
Lips that dare only speak kind words and true,
How shall they ever fall so near heavenly work to do!

Rise with the sunshine of the brook,
Brightening in every look,
Fill thy hands full of God's dear flowers,
Born of the springtide showers,
Learn of sweet Nature how to work his praise,
And take his summer world to gladden winter days.

—Good Words.

THE SUNDAY EVENING SERVICE.

Mr. Moody emphasizes the value of Sunday evening for religious work. He says: "It is worth more for this than any other three nights in the week. Sunday morning is used to instruct and build up Christians, but Sunday evening is the time to reach non-church goers, and an entire change of service is needed in many churches. Talk off-hand; forget your manuscript. The people don't want anything formal. They will not be reached by discussions of the labor question and riots. A Scotch woman who couldn't keep awake, and whose minister advised her to take a little more snuff for that purpose, advised him to put a little more snuff into his sermons. The seats must be absolutely free at this Sunday night service, and the people must have a cordial welcome. Encourage the mothers to come and bring their babies. Don't feel cross because they get into your pew. If the babies are too noisy, have a room in your chapel where some of the good women can take care of them, and let the mothers go into the meeting. Circulate flyers giving notice of it. This Sunday night service never should be given up, not for a missionary concert nor a temperance meeting, unless they could be made a Gospel service. Every church ought to have a pool of Bethesda every Sunday evening. If we aimed at conversions we should get them."

Rev. Addison P. Foster, now of Boston Highlands, gives a very interesting account of his nine years' experience in Jersey City. When he first went there, though the church edifice would seat 1,200, he had an audience of perhaps 300 in the morning, and 100 in the evening. At first he preached his best written sermons in the evening. Then he tried to popularize the service, and preached on current topics, advertising them in the newspapers. The audience increased, but not from the non-church goers, and he called this, also, a failure. Next they arranged for a service of song and a people's Gospel service, and the people not in the habit of going to church began to come. The praise service, the first part of the evening, was very important. The singing was congregational, but led by a trained choir, and it was found necessary to have more or less classical music. Pews were free, and pains were taken to give people a cordial welcome. The sermon was a plain, earnest presentation of the Gospel, unwritten, and from twenty-five to thirty minutes long. This was followed by an after meeting, and the congregations began to grow immediately, until there was an average attendance of 700. Young couples came to church instead of walking on the streets, and many came from boarding-houses; and finally, in 1884, there was a great revival.—Intelligence.

MOODY ON CHURCH MUSIC.

In a great many churches you don't know for the life of you what they are singing about. I have been in churches where if you tried to follow the choir in your hymn-book, you couldn't find the place. They might as well have sung in Greek or in Latin. The music covered up the words. The mass of the people want words. They don't care about the music—it's the words. What we want is singing that will bring out the Gospel, in shape that the people won't forget it. Dr. Gordon spoke this morning on our being sons of God, and then that hymn, "Beloved, now are we the sons of God," came right in to clinch the sermon. I hope this question of singing will be looked into. A great many of you are representatives of churches. Do you get good music? Get the young people, and in that way you will waken up a fresh interest. I believe it is easier for a man to preach after you have good, live singing. I have been in churches where the choir would sing something in an unknown tongue, and then I would be too upset to preach. I would have the programme all laid out before me, but after that singing I would say to myself, "I am not fit to preach." The choir put me all out of sorts. Then I would give out "Rock of Ages," or something like that, so that everybody could sing, but the choir would find music to cover even that up. What we want is a revolution in our churches in this matter of singing. "Get words and music that the people can understand."

A UNION CHURCH.

The recent life of John Bunyan brings out the fact that under Cromwell there was for a little time an established church in England which had no denominational character. There was no Act of Uniformity. No articles of faith were prescribed, no subscription was enforced, there were no church courts, church assemblies, church laws, or church ordinances. Nothing was said about rites and ceremonies, nothing even about the sacraments; and the mode of administering the Lord's Supper and baptism was left an open question, to be determined by each congregation for itself; only the Roman Catholic allegiance to the Pope was disallowed. The church with which John Bunyan was connected seems to have been organized and carried on upon this broad basis. We quote from an ancient record cited in the volume:

"Now, the principle upon which they thus entered into fellowship one with another, and upon which they did afterwards receive those that were added to their body and fellowship, was faith in Christ and holiness of life, without respect to this or that circumstance or opinion in outward and circumstantial things. By which means grace and faith were encouraged, love and amity maintained, disputings and occasions to janglings and unprofitable questions avoided, and many that were weak in the faith confirmed in the blessing of eternal life."

Its pastor, who died two years after John Bunyan united with the church, left a letter written from his death-bed, which breathes a spirit of Christian charity to which few in our own time attain. This letter is still read once a year at the meetings of the Bedford church. In it the dying pastor urges his people to walk together in love, and in the ordinances of Jesus Christ their Lord, remembering that they are joined, not to their minister but to Christ and the church; that they refrain from divisions about minor things, such as baptism, laying on of hands, anointing with oil, psalms, or any externals. He exhorts them to let no respect of persons be in their coming together. "Tis not a good practice to be offering places or seats when those who are rich come in." We judge that the church at Bedford still retains the simplicity of its original organization. If so, it is worthy of being noted as one Christian union church which has had an existence for more than 230 years, and as an illustration of the truth that the impracticability of a Christian union church is due only to the narrowness and intolerance of Christian men.—Christian Union.

The irreverence and levity that have become so painfully prevalent of late, and which have sickened the heart of the devout, and encouraged the contempt of the proud and skeptical, is due in large measure to these carnal and taking projects and entertainments, constantly being proposed by unspiritual school workers. Never was the admonition, "beware of evil workers," more needed and less heeded than now. "The temple of God" is being "destroyed" by the very projects that these evil workers introduce to promote the pleasure and supposed welfare thereof. The mourners in Zion are easily disposed of to make way for the gay and plumed youths who assume to "run the Sunday-school department," leaving for the serious and godly the benefit of the class and prayer meetings.—Banner of Holiness.

LIVES OF CELEBRATED MEN.

JOHN FREDERIC OBERLIN.

One day, in an old book which I count among my treasures, I read the story of a wonderful life. Some things in regard to it may interest our "Little Heads," so I will write them out for their benefit.

The man, whose name stands at the head of this article, was a minister of the Gospel. He began to serve the Lord when he was a little boy, and he never grew tired of serving him even when old, gray-headed and feeble.

He was born in Strasbourg, on the Rhine, in the year 1740, and carefully educated in that city. When quite a lad, thinking that he would like to be a soldier, he got permission from some military officers to practice under their direction. His father preferred, however, that he should give his time to study, in order that he might enter a profession. No doubt his father's decision was wise, yet the boy laid in a good store of bodily strength as he went through the exercises of the military drill.

When twenty years of age he wrote out a solemn and formal agreement to obey the Lord, and from that time on he proved himself a good soldier of Jesus Christ.

In looking at the map of Europe, one can see between the river Rhine and the Vosges Mountains a spot of territory over which there has been much dispute. It is called by the French, Alsace, by the Germans, Elsass, and has belonged at different times to both nations. In the last century it belonged to France.

In this province is a mountainous canton called the Ban de la Roche. When Oberlin was born it contained five villages, in which were living less than a hundred families, simple and ignorant peasants. So very ignorant were they, indeed, that when their pastor, Monsieur Stouber, attempted to have the children taught to spell and read, the parents were frightened by the strange-looking syllables in the spelling-books, and thought that these must have some connection with evil spirits. When they found however, that, after learning how to spell, the children were able to read what they pleased, the grown people, too, became students of the spelling-book.

These simple folks lived in small huts on the mountain side, and ate wild apples and pears, together with inferior potatoes. During their long winter, lasting from September to May or June, they were entirely shut in from the outer world, not having any way of reaching the larger villages or the cities.

When Oberlin, at the age of twenty-six, became their pastor, it was known that he would attempt to improve their condition. Accordingly, some of these half-savages formed a plan to waylay and beat him. When the day came for carrying out their design, Oberlin who had been informed of their intention, preached a sermon on the text: "I say unto you that ye resist not evil." Afterward, he went to the house where he knew that the conspirators were talking together, and presenting himself to them, said: "Here I am, my friends. Your design upon me I am acquainted with. You have wished to deal with me in a practical manner, and to chastise me because you deem me culpable. If I have in fact violated the rules which I have laid down for you, punish me for it. It is better that I should deliver myself up to you and save you the meanness of an ambush."

The peasants were so impressed by their pastor's courage and nobility of spirit that they were ever afterwards willing to be guided by him.

One of the first improvements that Oberlin made was to build a road by which the natives of the Ban de la Roche could hold communication with the outside world. He could induce them to work upon it only by himself taking a pick-axe and setting the example; but after the road was built and they were able to carry their produce to market, they were sufficiently proud of their work.

Another thing that the good pastor did was to get seed potatoes from other places, so that the quality of these vegetables might be better than it had been. Then he taught the people to build cellars deep enough to protect the potatoes from frost. He taught them, also, how to cultivate their ground; had young men trained to be masons, wheelwrights, smiths, carpenters, and glaziers; and in course of time gave instructions, either personally or through others, in weaving, spinning, knitting, straw-plaiting and dyeing. He also collected money from his friends in Strasbourg for the erection of a school-house, and afterward succeeded in getting one in each of the five villages. He also started an infant school, in which the very little children were taught while their parents were at work.

So it came to pass that in time Oberlin's parish grew to be a very happy and prosperous one. The people were no longer either idle or ignorant, but were so industrious and contented that they became quite famous on account of their changed condition. Besides learning to take care of themselves they had learned the lesson of Christian charity. They took care of the sick and of orphans, helped the poor who went to live among them, and raised money to send Bibles and missionaries to other places.

No wonder that they had come to love the friend through whose efforts all these wonders had been wrought. They called him "the good papa," and took great delight in listening to him as he talked to them of what he loved to talk of best—the truths of the Holy Bible. Sometimes, when they were gathered around him, the women working while they listened, he would say: "Well, my children, are you not tired? Have you not had enough?" They would generally answer, "No, papa, go on. We would like to hear a little more." Yet when tired they would say so and thank him, and then the teacher would stop.

When he grew to be a very old man, and no longer able to walk from one village to another in order to preach, the people would take turns in sending horses for him to ride. Sometimes as he passed through Waldbach, the village in which he lived, he would shake hands with every child he met, saying: "Jesus loved children; it was to those who resemble them that he promised the kingdom of heaven."

No sadder day ever came to the mountain canton than that on which the good pastor died. In his eighty-sixth year he bid adieu to those among whom he had so long lived and labored, and went to receive his reward. A whole parish trained in useful arts and in Christian virtue was the monument of John Frederic Oberlin.—Intelligencer.

One day, a gentleman in India, went into his library and took down a book from the shelves. As he did so, he felt a slight pain in his finger like the prick of a pin. He thought that a pin had been stuck by some careless person in the cover of the book. But soon his finger began to swell, then his arm, and then his whole body, and in a few days he died. It was not a pin among the books, but a small and deadly serpent.

There are many serpents among the books nowadays; they nestle in the foliage of some of our most fascinating literature; they coil around the flowers whose perfume intoxicates your senses. People read and are charmed by the plot of the story, by the skill with which the characters are sculptured or grouped, by the gorgeousness of the word painting, and hardly feel the pin-prick of the evil that is insinuated. But it stings and poisons. When the record of ruined souls is made up, on what multitudes will be inscribed "Poisoned by serpents among the books!"

Let us watch against the serpents, and read only that which is instructive and profitable.—Ex.

TEMPERANCE.

HERRICK JOHNSON ON HIGH LICENSE.

At the Monday meeting of the Presbyterian pastors of Chicago, Oct. 11th, a very interesting paper in favor of prohibition as against the high-license law was read by the Rev. Dr. Johnson of the Presbyterian Theological Seminary.

The article began by stating that the high license was undoubtedly having some very respectable and efficient advocacy. Men of unimpeachable temperance record and of high Christian character who believe in the principle of prohibition had favored and supported high license as the only measure now attainable. Dr. Johnson held this position to be wholly indefensible.

"More revenue is the first item claimed in favor of the high license side," he said. That claim could not be denied. One was almost astonished at the figures. In Chicago the revenue from the saloon business for the past year showed an increase over the previous one of $200,000 to $1,500,000.

Another was that there are less saloons. The third argument in favor of high license was that there were a better class of saloons, and that crime and debauchery had been lessened by the elevation of the tone and character of these institutions, and the fifth claim was that there is less drinking. To these claims the lecturer replied in a long and forcible argument, in which many proofs and figures were given in refutation of what he termed the fallacies of the supporters of the system of high license. He held that, in view of the increase of revenue by the system, towns and corporations which had previously voted solidly for prohibition, now voted for high license, only showing the system to be a bar rather than a help to the cause of prohibition.

As to the assertion that there were less saloons, he declared it was a disputed point. Out of forty-nine men selected at random from different parts of the State of Illinois, without any knowledge of their political sentiments, and asked the question if saloons had decreased, twenty-five had answered, "Yes," and twenty-four, "No." At most, he argued, the decrease was proportionately very small. In 1882, when the saloon license was only $52 per annum, there were 3,849 licensed saloons, while in 1886, when the tax was $500, the number of licenses was 3,390. He claimed that the saloons thus closed were the most orderly and least objectionable, being commonly attachments to groceries for the convenience of customers, which were dispensed with by the proprietors when the tax became too expensive. As to the claim that the saloons were of a better class since the increase, he pointed to the recent utterance on the subject by the grand jury of Cook county:

"Vices of the lowest order defy the city ordinances, people keeping open from dawn to midnight, and from midnight to dawn, while the lowest kind of dives, the habitual resorts of thieves and disreputable women, line the main streets and thoroughfares of the city."

Assuming that the saloons were of a better class, he argued that they were but the more enticing snares for innocence and youth, which naturally revolted at first from the disgustingly low and vile. Vice gilded is simply a smoother road to hell. In refutation of the claim that there was less drinking, he quoted the words of W. H. Harper when advocating the increase of the license:

"There will always be enough dram-shops to supply the public appetite, and there is no danger of any citizen suffering from thirst so long as he has a nickel to pay for his drink."

In 1881 the total receipts for fines in the public courts were $31,713, of which $16,146 were for drunkenness and disorder. In 1885 the figures were: Total receipts, $40,998, of which $25,407 were for drunkenness. If high license increased the revenue, the sale of liquor, to which it gave a sanction, increased crime, the detection and punishment of which ate it up. By its means vice and crime were simply made their own successors. Many statesmen claimed that the system of high license was a restriction of the liquor traffic. The lecturer claimed that no quibbling of words or distortion of facts could make it any better than a sanction of it. In the 3,000 licenses issued in the city of Chicago, sanction—direct sanction—was given to the unholy traffic. It was a sanction to the manufacture of crime.

The old maxim might be quoted against him to wit: "Of two evils choose the less." But he said: "Nay. Rather of two evils choose neither if both involve the sacrifice of principle." Wrong can never be made right by being made the alternative of a greater wrong. Between a greater and a lesser wrong neither God nor conscience can allow a choice.

Dr. Johnson having replied at some length to the arguments of Senator Blair in favor of high license at the recent Republican anti-saloon convention, concluded by deploring the fact that a pastor of one of their churches advocates the licensing of the liquor traffic and voted for it. A prominent officer of the same church is a member of the legislature that passed the law, and another member of the same church is the Mayor of Chicago, who gives under his own hand license to deal in this nefarious traffic.

He concluded by expressing a hope for the ultimate triumph of the prohibition cause. Most of the clergymen present concurred with Dr. Johnson's views.

THE REPUBLICAN PARTY AND THE ANTI-SALOONISTS.

The political event of the past fortnight, which has probably attracted the largest share of public attention, and certainly the attention of our trade, has been the assembling at Chicago, that city of conventions, of a body of cranks and fanatics calling themselves Republicans, and being in fact conspirators against that party in having attempted to devise ways and means of committing it to a policy which would drive out of its ranks every friend of personal liberty in the land. We refer, of course, to the so-called National Convention of Anti-Saloon Republicans.

Perhaps there is no better guide for gauging the significance and influence of any public gathering than that of considering the character and personal peculiarities of its leading spirits. And what an array of personal ciphers we have in this instance, what a conglomeration of impractical reformers, political hacks, and broken-down and besmirched of vice hunters, while the whole list of delegates does not embrace the name of a single member of the National Republican organization of prominence or influence in that party! Indeed, we may congratulate that party upon the conspicuous absence from this convention of its brains, its statesmanship and its political cunning.

We have only to look at the two chairmen to sample and judge the whole lot. Here we have Granny Blair, of New Hampshire, the old lady-impracticable of the United States Senate, as temporary presiding officer, followed by that illustriously-soured and stamped fraud, Windom, of Minnesota, who has better occasion, perhaps, to hate the whisky trade than any man in the country.

To dwell seriously upon what such a crowd did, or proposes to do, would be a waste of time. Perhaps, the most significant utterance of the occasion was that of Granny Blair, who proclaimed, amid interrupting cheers, that, "as between free rum and license, we are for license; as between low license and high license we are for high license, and, as between high license and prohibition, we are for prohibition." All of which suggests to us the office hunter who was willing to take from old Andy Jackson anything from a foreign mission down to an old pair of pantaloons.

The Chicago gathering is neither important nor significant in itself, though it may be in simply what it suggests. If we wait until the national Republican party "takes its cue" from the Windoms and Blairs in its ranks we shall probably wait a long time. They are not of the right timber to build a great national movement. They are too knotty and cross-grained. It will be observed that they, as well as their co-laborers, are, with hardly an exception, from strongly Republican States, and they are merely political excrescences resulting from the overgrowth of their party in these sections. And now, what we may expect to hear of next, is a national anti-saloon convention of Democrats, made up of Democratic cranks and fanatics from the South, where the same kind of political excrescence appears though under another party growth.—Wine and Spirit Review.

THE FRIENDS' APPEAL FOR PROHIBITION.

To all those who are lovers of good order and sobriety in the community:

In view of the enormity of the traffic in intoxicating drinks and the alarming proportions which the whole liquor interest now assumes, more especially that phase of it which is exhibited in the large increase in number of drinking-saloons in our cities and larger towns, many of which present attractions calculated to entice the unwary and the youth from sobriety and virtue, we feel something of a duty incumbent upon us to endeavor to call the attention of all who are interested in the moral and religious welfare of the community to the individual responsibility resting upon every person holding the right of elective franchise, and the importance of his vote in the coming elections; and we make the appeal to these, that in no case may you give encouragement to, or cast your vote for, any candidate for official position—more especially for a place in any legislative assembly—who is not known to be in favor of legislation for the suppression of this great evil, and who will not use, conscientiously, all proper means to have it eradicated.

We are impressed with the thought that there is need now in our legislative halls of sterling men—men of pure motives—those who in their daily lives are examples of integrity and virtue, and who are known to be free from any participation in, or any complicity with, the liquor interest.

Our mothers, wives, sisters, and friends may be very influential with sons, husbands, brothers, and friends, and in our solicitude for the general good we ask you for your influence and your efforts to aid in the removal of this social evil, which in its magnitude now threatens the prosperity, the happiness, and even the safety of society.

Let us see that our individual duty is performed in this important issue.

On behalf of the Executive Committee of the Temperance Association of Friends, JABEZ WOOD, Chairman.

ANNA WOOLMAN, Secretary.

are back in their payments, and these payments should now be made. Let us keep our treasury supplied to meet demands which we expect will now be made for the advancement of the work all along the line. Above all, let us pray. H. A. DAY.

NOTES OF THE OHIO WORK.

LECTURES, FUNDS AND STATE CONVENTION.

COLUMBUS, O., Oct. 21, 1886.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Since my last report I have had several interesting and I think profitable meetings. One week ago last Saturday I went to Athens, Athens county, and after a little walk of eight and a half miles arrived at the home of Dr. Witham, who received me very cordially, and together with his estimable wife, did all in their power to make my visit pleasant. We proceeded at once to call on leading members of the Christian church who assured us that I could have their church, to present the anti-Christian character of the lodge on Sabbath evening if I would preach for them (they have no pastor) in the afternoon.

A little before the afternoon service a gentleman belonging to the church came to inform us that some of the members of his church were afraid that if I spoke on the anti-Christian character of the lodge in the church it might stir up some feeling, and therefore it would not be best to use the church. I assured him if I spoke in his church that I should try and stir up some feeling, and if I could not do this it would be a pretty good indication that the church was dead. Live people always have feeling.

I went to the afternoon service. The Lord blessed me in presenting his truth. At the conclusion I told the people how some were afraid of getting up a feeling, and announced that I would speak somewhere in town that evening. If no where else, I would get a dry goods box and speak on the corner. The Academy was engaged, and half an hour before services every seat was taken; chairs and benches were brought in to accommodate those coming later. Although quite an effort was made to keep us out of the Academy, I spoke to a full house for some two hours on Monday evening. Mr. Ronayne's work in this section has left an impression which will not soon be forgotten. There are two or three "Sons of Veterans" (?) here who, together with some of the other boys, evidently thought they would distinguish themselves. Accordingly they undertook to keep me awake; a nail was suspended opposite my bedroom window which was rattled against the glass; apples and stones were thrown into Dr. Witham's yard and against the house. I got up and took down the nail and gave it to the Dr. as a relic of the warfare of these brave "Sons of Veterans," who wear little brass badges and do their fighting with nails and apples after dark. Several subscribed for the Cynosure and assisted in our work. I hope to return later and give this county a thorough canvass.

The next meeting of special interest was held in the Opera House at Logan. One Mason lost his jewel, and exposed himself and his order much to the amusement of all present except the "fraters."

On Thursday evening I spoke to a full house in Zion's U. B. church, five miles from Logan. An aged sinner, who announced himself as a Royal Arch Mason, assisted me here by not keeping the "jewel of a silent tongue." Friendship U. B. church, in which I had expected to have spoken Friday evening, was closed through the influence of a Mason member, by the name of Lemon. The friends there do not like this, and will probably make it interesting for him.

On my return to this city I stopped over one train at Junction City and over night at West Rushville. At both places I found friends who will arrange for lectures at some future date if all goes well. As I had taken a severe cold and was somewhat worn by constant talk and travel I came to this city sooner than I had expected. There is a good field for our work in Fairfield, Hocking, Morgan, Athens, and Meigs counties. Had we five times the strength and means for carrying on our work we could use it to good advantage now. I trust however that good seed has been sown that in future years may yield a bountiful harvest to the glory of God. Rev. Mr. Wade, of Logan, told me of a man at Mountville, Morgan Co., who has recently thrown off the yoke of the lodge and is bearing his testimony against the unfruitful works of darkness. May the Lord bless him!

Since returning to this city I have met several who subscribed with me for the Cynosure one year ago. In most cases I found no difficulty in getting their renewals. Some spoke of their desire to renew before I asked them. Rev. J. Beck and Rev. C. H. Rohe, both pastors of large churches here, assured me of their hearty co-operation in my work. They hope to attend the State meeting.

State Secretary S. A. George, Mansfield, has just sent me a list of those who have sent in contributions or pledges for State work. I am glad to see so many names, but there are not near as many as I should see. Remember, friends if you send in your contributions or pledges without my calling to see you, I will have so much more time for work in new fields. If every one in the State interested would try and give something, a fund could be raised which would keep the work going on without intermission. [Bro. George reports elsewhere in this number of the Cynosure.—Ed.] Can you not send him your pledge immediately, if you have not done so? We are beginning to arrange for the State meeting. You will hear on this line later. I hope every one who can will make up your mind to attend this year. Those who were not present last year do not know how much they missed.

I expect to go to Hope to spend Sabbath; take the train south on Monday or Tuesday; stop on my way at Cederville, Xenia and Dayton. May God speed on the day when our nation shall be delivered from the bondage of the lodge, liquor power, and every evil which degrades and debases mankind. Any mail sent to my address, 214 W. Second Ave., in my absence will be cared for the same as if I were here. I have engaged Mr. W. S. Orvis as office secretary. W. B. STODDARD.

BRO. ARNOLD'S WORK IN BUREAU COUNTY, ILLINOIS.

WYANET, ILL.

We have been greatly entertained by I. R. B. Arnold with illustrated Gospel lectures of the highest type. At each meeting were shown about sixty magnificent Bible scenes over ten feet in diameter, showing the sunlight, haze and shadow, the flowers, ferns and mosses of the landscapes, and even the disposition of persons appeared when their pictures were shown. Many heathen gods, heathen temples and modern lodge-room scenes were shown; also such scenes as Daniel in the lions' den, Israel at the Red sea, and Christ on the waves. Storms and other causes hindered the audiences for two nights, but on the last, long before time, the audience room and parlor were crowded with Wyanet's very best people, and for nearly two hours arguments against infidelity were impressed upon their minds through the double avenue of sight and hearing, making impressions more than doubly strong. So thrilling were the illustrated songs that with deep gratitude many joined in singing Rock of Ages, and many were startled to find that they were so soon dismissed, though they had been sitting over an hour and three quarters.

Announcements were made for country lectures at West Bureau and Hickory Grove, and some of the town folk attended at both places, and the country people became so deeply interested that they in turn came to town to review what they had learned in the country. After returning, the lecturer, Bro. Arnold delivered an Anti-masonic lecture, proving positively that Freemasonry is the Baal-worship of to-day in our own beloved country, that Masons are to the Christian faith what Baal-worshippers were to Jewish faith, and to our nation what Baal-worshippers were to the Jewish nation. This was done in such a way as to carry conviction, and it did.

The last night was a conclusion of what was already commenced, and the hall was crowded. Two members of the town council, C. L. Hartman and A. D. Perrin, with Marshall Lathrop, kept order, for which they deserve much credit. Just as before, there was complaint of the brevity, after an hour and a half's talk. One gentleman said he could have enjoyed listening and looking all night, there was so much to learn.

An opportunity being given, John Bradley, a reliable old gentleman, testified that a certain book was a true revelation of the secrets of Odd-fellowship, which ship he left when he took the old ship of Zion and was made free in Christ Jesus. A sample of those opposing the lectures, in fact a leader, is found in one man whose intelligence and worth may be imagined when it is known that he denies the murder of William Morgan by the Masons. Many times did I hear those not in sympathy with his work say that Mr. Arnold was a perfect gentleman. One Mason said he would give any one his money back who claimed after attending that he was cheated. Men told me they had attended six, seven and even as high as eight times; and knowing their intelligence I am reminded that the wisest are the most willing to learn.

At every lecture petitions were sent in asking for selections seen and heard on previous evenings. While singing "Land of Beulah" a beautiful sunset scene vanishes at every singing of the chorus, and a saint is seen borne on angel's wings farther and farther and still farther, until lost in the sweet, pure radiance. But for the repetitions of such selections we might have seen more pictures. Some were repeated eight or ten times. This feature of illustrated sacred songs is of great interest.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—In the fourteenth day's session of the House of Deputies in the Protestant Episcopal Convention there was presented to that body a communication from the late Congregational Council asking co-operation in an investigation into the true status of Mormonism, and another inviting co-operation in the interests of the family, and for remedial legislation affecting divorce laws. By a non-concurrence of the clerical and lay orders, a proposition to drop the name "Protestant Episcopal" from the title page of the prayer-book was defeated.

—The General Council of the Evangelical Lutheran church of North America commenced its nineteenth annual session Thursday morning in Trinity Lutheran church in this city. This body of Lutherans represents some 250,000 members, nearly one-half of whom are of the Swedish Augustana Synod. From the latter body pastors Carlson, Ranse, Ewald, Lindahl, and Profs. Haselquist and Esbjorn are present. On Friday the Council heard and discussed the reports of the committees on foreign and home missions, and took measures toward adopting the American Board of Missions plan of raising funds for and carrying on missionary work.

—The great Bible publishing establishment founded at Halle early in the last century by Baron von Canstein is about to issue the thousandth edition of its octavo Bible, of which 2,112,790 copies have now been published. This, however, is the most recent of the editions published by this establishment, for the first impression dates from 1785, when 8,000 copies were printed to begin with.

—Mr. D. L. Moody lately held services at Woodstock, Vt. Many conversions are reported. He has also been holding services at Nyack, and Auburn, N. Y.

—The Methodist million for missions seems to be all pledged except about $50,000, and Chaplain McCabe, from his sick-bed, asks if 50,000 Sunday-school teachers will not each raise another dollar for the fund, to make it complete before November 1.

—The second annual conference of the missionaries of the American Sunday-School Union in the Northwestern District, under the direction of F. G. Ensign, superintendent, will be held at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, November 4-7. An extensive programme has been outlined, and is proposed to discuss all phases of work, and help one another by the comparison of experiences to do still better work the coming year.

—The quadrennial convention of the body known as the Christians has just been held in New Bedford, Mass. It represents about ninety conferences of over 1,500 churches, and about 140,000 communicants. Letters were read from several bodies which wish to unite with this religious body. The sect has no positive creed, and its leading idea is the dissolving of sectarian lines. All having faith in Christ and professing to make the Bible their rule of life are welcomed as members. No distinction is made against Unitarians or Trinitarians. Mostly in the East they hold to Baptist ideas, the origin of this sect in this part of the country having been in an offshoot from the Baptists.

A "Campaign Edition" of a paper which is not in politics is a novelty, but this is the way the Christian Statesman of Philadelphia seeks to improve the occasion for the discussion of the Christian principles of civil government in their application to the pending political situation and to other great issues before the American people. Three months on trial, including the campaign numbers, 25 cents.

Among the illustrations for "The Life of Lincoln," in The Century for November, will be a fine portrait of Sarah Bush Lincoln (stepmother of Abraham Lincoln) at the age of seventy-six. This portrait explains the most important influence in the President's early life. It will be remembered that Mrs. Lincoln said of Abraham: "I can say—what scarcely one mother or looker can say—Abraham never gave me a cross word or look, and never refused in fact or appearance to do anything I asked him. His mind and mine—what little I had—seemed to run together. * * * I had a son John who was raised with Abe. Both were good boys, but I must say, both now being dead, that Abe was the best boy I ever saw or expect to see."

LODGE NOTES.

—One of the Knights of Pythias who went to attend the national convocation of his order, died there from excessive drinking. Such lodge gatherings as the G. A. R. meeting in San Francisco, the Knights of Pythias in Toronto, the Odd-fellows in Boston, and the Knights Templar and Freemasons in St. Louis are generally occasions of great drunkenness and revelry. It is hard to imagine that any Christian man could consent to be a part of such convocations.—Christian Conservator.

—Arendorf, the brewer of Sioux City, Iowa, believed to be the murderer of Haddock, is a member of the Knights of Pythias.

—The order of the Sons of America proposes some astonishing changes in our nation, through the interposition of its all-powerful influence. A prominent member says: "We have been asked time and again what we expected to gain by our strict American principles and aggressiveness, and to all such we have repeatedly said: Read carefully and study our platform of principles. They make good food for sober second thought, and should not be judged hastily. Patriotism and love of country is born in every true American heart, and why should not such hearts be banded together in the holy cause of protecting American liberty, American government, American free schools, an American press, and American ballots? We challenge the right of any foreigner to question our proceedings or interfere in our organizations. It will only be a few short years before all Americans will be enrolled under our banner, and then, instead of being dictated to by office holding aliens, we hope to see Americans holding such offices of trust. All members of the order will be glad at any time to give such information as may be desired."

—"The Masonic Advocate," says the Voice of Masonry, "has administered to the Freemason, of Detroit, a just rebuke, for admitting to its pages contributions by the champion kicker and general scold, J. Norton, who, it is now said, never has been a subscribing member of any lodge, but as soon as he received the degrees was sent adrift, and has remained in that condition ever since." Jacob Norton is a Jew Mason who has written volun- tinuously and ably, but with a hatred for every thing that is related to Christ. Therefore the Masonic stuff about John the Baptist and John the disciple, and other traditions he has handled severely. The Hiramites do not thank him for showing up their falsehoods.

—The Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers met in New York last week. Their proceedings were kept almost entirely secret.

—A new Masonic temple at Paxton, Ill., erected by Mount Olivet Commandery, was dedicated Thursday, the Grand Master and Grand Commander of the State and other Masonic dignitaries being present.

—The Military Order of the Loyal Legion met last week in Philadelphia, ex-President Hayes presiding. On Thursday, General P. H. Sheridan was installed as Commander-in-chief of the order.

Odd fellowship was recently introduced in the Island of Siam by U. S. Minister Jacob Child.

Proceedings are pending in the Kentucky Courts to recover the $30,000 balance due from ex-Supreme Treasurer Breckenridge of the K. of H.

The Odd fellow's Herald says: The Grand Lodge of Ohio has amended its constitution, making frequenting of saloons an offense against Odd fellowship.

Great indignation is manifested by several of the A. O. U. W. papers over the fact that a lodge of that order in New York City has recently initiated John L. Sullivan, the noted "slugger." But is not John as good a workman for his profession as thousands of other lodge men?

The order of the Sons of St. George number some 25,000. The society is composed of Englishmen, their sons and grandsons, and is called the only English society of importance in America.

A number of local assemblies, Knights of Labor, at Lawrence, Mass. threaten to withdraw from the order, and Mr. Powderly has gone thither to, if possible, keep the men in line.

BUSINESS.

SOLITARY SUBSCRIBERS.

We send thirteen hundred papers to different post-offices where we have only one subscriber. Can it be possible that there are no other persons in those places who would be interested in reading such a paper as this? We can hardly believe this, and we can but think that if our solitary subscribers would put forth earnest and judicious efforts they might persuade some of their friends or neighbors to subscribe for the Cynosure.

Doubtless many of these solitary subscribers lend their papers, which is a kind act on their part; but Christians should not live by borrowing if they can possibly avoid it; and those who have for a time read papers that others have paid for, should at length consider whether they ought not to allow those subscribers to lend their papers in other directions, and whether it would not be well for them to subscribe for the Cynosure themselves, and in their turn become helpers in the work of spreading good literature to others who otherwise might not obtain it.

SUBSCRIPTION LETTERS.

The following have made remittances of money to the Cynosure from Oct. 18 to Oct. 23 inclusive:

J Stratton, J W Margrave, Mrs. H Rumery, Mrs. A Lewis, W Atkinson, S R Mitchell, R Smith, P H Parker, J Lovelless, E Littlewood, J N Norris, S Hawthorne, W Wing, W J Feemster, B L Read, I Mettler, H Stevens, I K Morris, O M Shipley, P B Shaw, S Y Orr, E Branch, S Bedford, M Fitch, W T Wilson, W N Wilson.

SOUTHERN MINISTERS' FUND.

This is the fund from which the colored ministers of the South have received the Cynosure. It seems very desirable to continue this fund, and hence the special appeal in the Cynosure of Aug. 12th.

The following named persons have contributed to this fund this year, 1886, and such names will be added from week to week as donate to it in the future:

Jno Dorcas, J F Icke, Mrs A E Tyler, H Holbrook, Wm Mathews, O Hansen, Mrs S B Skeel, Mrs A F Rider, F W Capwell, A Hamilton, Mrs C H Richardson, N Martin, R Johnson, J Aylsworth, Mrs T S Couch, I Bancroft, S A Pratt, J Rutley, A Hamilton, H A Fischer, Mrs N E Kellogg, Mrs A B Kellogg, T King-smarth, M Phillips, Susannah G Reed, Samuel Lester, W O Percival, Prof E Whipple, A G Laird, Prof H A Fischer, L Woodruff, L M Sampson, H Wykhuy-sen, P Bacon, H Preston, Rev J P Rogers, J Brandt, J A Austin, Mrs S H Nutting, D Hyde, Mrs M W Bingham, L E Lincoln, Rev. Mental Gymnastics; OR Memory Culture.

BY ADAM MILLER, M. D.

A practical and easy system by which any person, old or young, can train themselves to memorize any thing they choose to learn.

THE CLERGY, Their Sermons; THE STUDENT, His Lessons; THE BUSINESS MAN, His Affairs of Business.

The author of this work was put to the severest public test, a few days ago, by reporters of all the leading Chicago daily papers. The commendatory notices which appeared the following day showed how well he stood the test.

The author, an old man, claims to have a memory more to be trusted by training under this system than even while he was young.—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

We cordially commend it to all persons of falling memory as the best book obtainable on that subject.

Most ingenious; enables any one, who familiarizes himself with the system, to carry an immense mass of digested information, ready for production on demand. By experiment we have tested the author's mnemonic resources, and been won over by them to wonder.—ADVANCE.

This work, with written instructions by the author, will be sent postpaid to any address on receipt of price, $1.00. Address, 221 W. Madison St., Chicago.

HOME HINTS.

HEALTH PRINCIPLES.

A man had a finger-nail torn off, causing very great pain; brown sugar was thrown on a pan of burning coals, and the finger held over the smoke for twenty minutes. The pain was removed, and in due time a cure was effected. In Health at Home it is narrated that a horse seemed to be dying of a festered wound. Some old shoes were cut up in a hog-trot and set on fire under the horse, so that the smoke would reach the wound. In a few hours the swelling began to subside, the wound discharged, and the horse got well.

An old lady was knitting a stocking. A member of the family came in with a painful wound. She unravelled the stocking, put the yarn on a shovel of burning coals, caused the smoke to ascend against the wound, giving immediate relief.

The first thought of ordinary readers is that of wondering that such "simple" thing should have such beneficial effects.

Instead of burdening the mind with the remembrance of old leather, and brown sugar, and yarn stockings, it is better to ascertain the general principles; for one may have the most agonizing sore, and be a thousand miles from an old shoe, or spoonful of brown sugar, or a yarn of stocking. What then? In all cases there was smoke; out of smoke creosote is made, and carbolic acid is of the same essential nature; hence the application of these useful substances to all varieties of wounds, burns and sores. Their essential nature is two fold—they arrest decay, and purify.—Halls Journal of Health.

SPURIOUS SUGAR.

The Herald of Health gives the following account of a spurious sugar which is much made now:

"It has long been known to chemists that a variety of sugar could be manufactured from common starch, sawdust, cotton, or woody fiber of any kind, by treating it with sulphuric acid. The sugar thus produced is called grape sugar, and two and a half pounds of it are required to equal one of the cane sugar in sweetness.

"For some years this kind of sugar has been used in the manufacture of candy and of alcoholic liquors. It is also manufactured in Germany for commercial purposes, and more recently a number of manufactories have been established in this country for the purpose of imitating and adulterating the various forms of cane sugar. Several such establishments are located in New York and New Orleans, and one in Madison, Indiana. The greatest fraud seems to be in the article known as golden drip syrup. This syrup is very superior in appearance, but often contains not the slightest trace of cane-sugar, being made entirely from sawdust, paper, rags, starch, and other similar trash, treated with sulphuric acid. This syrup can always be distinguished from the genuine by its reaction with an infusion of tannin. As tea-leaves contain a large amount of tannin a very convenient test is to put a small quantity of it into a little tea. If this syrup is of the kind described, the liquid will become black upon being stirred."

LIE DOWN AND REST

Dr. Hall says the best medicine in the world, more efficient than all the potatoes of the materia medica, are warmth, rest, cleanliness and pure air. Some persons make it a virtue to brave disease, "to keep up" as long as they can move a foot or wiggle a finger, and it sometimes succeeds; but in others the powers of life are thereby so completely exhausted that the system has lost all ability to recuperate, and slow and typhoid fever sets in and carries the patient to a premature grave.

Whenever walking or work is an effort, a warm bed and a cold room are the very first indispensables to a sure and speedy recovery. Instinct leads all beasts and birds to quietude and rest the very moment disease or wounds assail them.

A Happy Life.

28th THOUSAND.

Baptist Commendation.

"We are delighted with this book. It reaches to the very core of Christian experience, and is eminently experimental in its teachings. It meets the doubts and difficulties of conscientious seekers after the bread and water of life, but whose efforts result only in alternate failure and victory. The author, without claiming to be a theologian, sends out the results of a happy and rich experience to help others into a happy Christian life."—Baptist Weekly.

Presbyterian Endorsement.

"The book is so truly and reverentially devout in its spirit that it demands criticism. It contains so much that is sound and practical, so much that, if heeded, will make our lives better, happier and more useful, that the student reader who really wishes to lead a life 'hid with Christ in God' can scarcely fail to derive profit from its perusal."—Interior.

Methodist Word of Praise.

"We have not for years read a book so full of more delight and profit. It is not a theological book. No effort is made to change the theological views of any one. The author has a rich experience, and fills it in a plain and delightful manner."—Christian Advocate.

United Brethren's Approval.

"We have seldom met with a more interesting volume, abounding throughout with apt illustrations; we have failed to find a dry line from title-page to finish."—Religious Telescope.

Congregational Comment.

"It contains much clear, pungent reasoning and interesting incident. It is a practical and experimental lesson taught out of God's word, and is worthy of universal attention."—Churchman.

THE HISTORY OF ANTI-SLAVERY
IN THE
State and Nation.

BY REV. AUSTIN WILLEY.

514 pp., 12 mo. With NINETEEN PORTRAITS.

Price, Postpaid, $2.00.

Mr. Willey gives the best history of the times just before the present generation, which is precisely the history least apt to be known. He gives us the surface of the sea under the billows which swept off three million pair of fetters from our national decks. His book shows more accurate insight into the causes which produced the rebellion, and gives more clearly the working of those causes than any other writer. He shows more clearly the moral force of the ballot and necessity of a new party to carry a fundamental reform than any one who has treated of it. We advise every young man and every reader of the Cynosure to obtain and read that history.—Pres. J. Blanchard.

BETWEEN TWO OPINIONS.

BY E. E. FLAGG.

Author of "Holden with Cords," "A Sunny Life," "Little People," etc.

The Best Story of the Reform.

Price, only $1.00.

Published by THE NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

This latest and best of Miss Flagg's works is now ready in handsome print, neatly bound. The story begins in a quiet New England home, and paints its homey joys with a delicacy and truthfulness worthy the hand of Harriet Beecher Stowe. The scene then changes to a thriving, growing, palpitating young Western city, and with great power and startling accuracy the writer leads us behind the scenes that we may see the machinery that works the liquor traffic and labor troubles. The story of the strike, the mob, the attempted assassination, the saloon-keeper's wives, the curse of his trade, the power of the Christian faith to change him to a messenger of mercy, the criminal and the hidden power that shields him from justice, the land robbers' tricks, the dark and secret conspiracies of the lodge—these and all the incidents of the book are portrayed with rare tact and great power of description. It is emphatically a book for the hour. And what is better and yet more striking, the incidents are facts, and every one a powerful and convincing argument against the lodge and the saloon.

Every temperance man and woman should read this book. No temperance story like it was ever planned, much less ably executed. A wonderful light is thrown upon the difficulties in the way of prohibition. Learn how they may be avoided.

Every one who loves to read a good story, chaste and elegant in expression, in thought, true in incident, deeply interesting in its narrative, should read this

READ THESE NOTICES FROM THE PRESS:

The Free Methodist, Chicago.

"Between Two Opinions" is a story, its incidents vouched for as facts, which presents a powerful argument on the question of saloons and must attract thousands of readers among our thinking and observant people. The plot of the story is neither startling nor novel, but it develops a wonderful strength in following the experiences of people in the common, everyday walks of life.

Free Press, Birmingham, Iowa.

It differs from the popular story, "The Bread-winners" of a year ago. It greatly differs from that book in that it is written from the Christian standpoint, and its beautiful and touching descriptions of home life and home duties and heroic self-denials will awaken a responsive echo in every heart, that has not by dissipation lost the taste for the pure joys of home.

The Religious Telescope, Dayton.

The author, Miss Flagg, is a brilliant writer. The stirring questions in American politics are undoubtedly prohibition and the labor movement as championed by the secret unions of working men, which direct the strikes that with more and more frequency occur in our cities. "Between Two Opinions" is a story, its incidents vouched for as facts, which presents a powerful argument on these questions, and must attract thousands of readers among our thinking people.

The Christian Conservator, Dayton.

This is a charming book written in an attractive manner. It is so full of sunshine and so radiant with light that one is enlightened, warmed, and, before they are conscious of it, set against the lodge. The style gleams, glows and sparkles. It is dignified and simple. It is the right book to place in the hands of your wife or daughter to superinduce co-operation with you in anti-secrecy work. Every minister's wife should read it, and then, if her husband is not an Anti-saloon, he should take his turn next and become one.

The American, Washington.

We are reading, in spare moments, Miss Flagg's new book, "Between Two Opinions," and the estimate we have thus far put upon it is that it is masterly both in style and argument. One is insensibly made to feel that he is reading facts and not fiction; that the book is not a play upon the imagination but an unravelling of mysterious circumstances which have an important bearing upon current events.

THE BROKEN SEAL;

Or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan.
By Samuel D. Greene.

One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper cover, 45 cents; per dozen, $4.50.

This deeply interesting narrative shows what Masonry has done and is capable of doing in the Courts, and how bad men control the good men in the lodge and try to force their own members when guilty of great crimes. For sale at 221 W. Madison St., Chicago, by THE NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

Price, 25 cents; $2.00 per dozen. For sale by the National Christian Association, at head-quarters, or at the nearest office. Literature, 221 W. Madison St., Chic. 30c.

Law and Order, Boston.

The book takes high ground for prohibition of the liquor curse, for woman's ballot for home protection, and for a better and more honest brotherhood than is forced by their obligations upon the members of secret orders. It is, therefore, a valuable book for several large classes of American readers.

Christian Instructor, Philadelphia.

There are important questions pressing upon American politics to-day; two of them are prohibition and the labor question as connected with the secret unions of workmen. This work is an expose of the twin evils, secret societies and the saloons. The truths are given in the form of a story; not startling, but thrilling experiences of home life that are vouched for as facts. The evidences presented of the impossibility of reaching the saloon keeper so long as he and the officers of the law are sworn brothers in the den of some secret society, are conclusive enough to awaken the most careless and obtuse members of society. It is a valuable book for the masses to read.

Evangelist, Berea, Kentucky.

The object of the volume is to illustrate the practical workings of Secret Societies, and especially to show how the lodge is upheld in the saloon, and this very important design is wrought out with much skill, clearness and power. By reading it temperance people may learn much about the difficulties in the way of prohibition.

The Standard, Chicago.

It is written in the interests of reform, more especially temperance and Anti-masonry. The title of the story suggests the special aim of it, which is to protest against all "failing between two opinions"; in other words, is a plea for radicalism. The story is vigorously written, and will interest even readers who do not altogether believe in its doctrine.

The Pacific, San Francisco.

It is a story intended to do service against the saloons, and in favor of Woman's Christian Temperance work, and especially against the secret orders—Freemasons, Odd-fellows, the Knights of Labor, etc. No reflecting man can doubt that any combination of picked classes and individuals is liable to great abuse. It is obvious, also, that secret orders are especially capable of being used in a selfish and unprincipled way.

REVISED ODD-FELLOWSHIP

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

The revelations concerning the plots to release Confederate prisoners in Northern prisons, as shown in the paper of the late Jacob Thompson, of Kentucky, are exciting much interest.

The General Land Office is trying to take 36,000,000 acres of land from the Northern Pacific road, which it is claimed that corporation has unlawfully selected as indemnity lands.

Secretary of the Interior has declined to recommend the removal of Major J. H. Waggoner, recently appointed United States Pension Agent at Knoxville, Tenn., upon the request of leading Democrats. The request was made because the Major had voted, after the war, to disfranchise Confederates. The Secretary says that to recommend this removal would not be the best way to heal the issues of the war.

COUNTRY.

Sharp shocks of earthquake were experienced Friday at Charleston, Summerville, Columbia, Savannah, Wilmington, N. C., Raleigh, Augusta, Atlanta, Chattanooga, Louisville, and other Southern points. Washington also felt the quake. Rumbling sounds accompanied the vibrations, which were very severe. Four shocks were felt at Charleston, while two or more disturbed the other cities mentioned, but no great damage is reported.

The earthquakes of last month made three large cracks in Flat Top Mountain, Tazewell county, Virginia. One of the chasms, which crosses a wagon road, had to be filled with large trees and bowlders to permit the passage of teams.

The Gloucester (Mass.) fishing schooner, George L. Smith, has been given up for lost. She carried a crew of fourteen men. This makes 116 Gloucester fishermen lost so far this year.

While a mortar was being tested Thursday at Sandy Hook, N. J., a shell exploded, blowing a soldier named Joseph King to pieces, killing First Lieutenant William M. Medcalf, and slightly injuring several others.

The Hon. Joseph B. Clark, a prominent citizen, hanged himself in his barn, at Manchester, N. H., Friday. His failure to receive a nomination for Congress, coupled with grave business cares, is supposed to have led to the tragedy.

Hogs in Benton county, Indiana, are dying by scores of a throat disease resembling diptheria among children.

A tank filled with japan in the American Varnish Works in this city, exploded Thursday afternoon. The inflammable fluid was scattered about the works and over the clothing of three employees, who were terribly burned, two of them fatally. The works were damaged to the extent of $25,000, and the flames spread to lumber piles doing $10,000 or $12,000 more damage.

The Soldiers and Sailors' Home at Quincy, Ill., was dedicated Wednesday, 50,000 visitors witnessing the ceremonies. Speeches were made by Governor Oglesby, Senators Logan and Cullom, and others.

Twenty Gloucester (Mass.) fishing vessels, valued at $164,000 and insured for $118,460, have been lost since September, 1886; 104 men perished, leaving twenty-two widows and fifty orphans.

In the Vermont Legislature Tuesday, the Senate gave George F. Edmunds 29 votes for United States Senator and W. H. Bingham 1. The vote of the House stood: Edmunds, 190; Bingham, 27, and W. G. Veasy, 8.

The National Association for the Advancement of Woman began its session in Louisville, Ky., last Wednesday, with a good attendance. Mrs. Julia Ward Howe presided. The morning session was devoted to the reading of the annual reports of the officers, and in the afternoon Mrs. Howe delivered her annual address. Addresses were also delivered by Mrs. Emma Haddock, of Iowa, on "Women as Land-Owners in the West," Miss Ellen Folsom, of Massachusetts, on "The Association of Collegiate Alumni."

The business section of Oakland, Coles county, Ill., was destroyed by a fire which broke out Monday night of last week. The explosion of 300 pounds of powder added to the terror of the occasion, but fortunately no person was injured. The loss is placed at $150,000, with at least one-third insurance.

The great strike of the packing-house employees, which has involved fully 20,000 for the past ten days, came to an end Monday afternoon, the strikers agreeing to return to work on the ten hour basis without exacting any conditions. The fact that the wages paid were unusually large, and the fact also that new men were coming in in great numbers caused the old men to hesitate, and the motion to return to work came from the men themselves, ignoring the delegates and committeemen, who have been seeking to act for them. Tuesday the new men all quit work, apprehending trouble when the old union men returned. Several hundred of them were being escorted on a train by a Pinkerton guard, when the latter fired upon the crowd who were stoning the train. One man was killed.

Fire at Farmington, Me., destroyed nineteen stores' the Chronicle office, and other buildings. The loss is about $200,000.

A construction train on the Burlington and Missouri road ran over a bull Tuesday afternoon, and was thrown down a twenty-five-foot embankment, nine miles southwest of Fairfield, Neb. Five men were killed instantly. Pres. John Fitzgerald, of the Irish National League, was slightly injured.

Two hundred cases of wines and liquors, gloves, fans, and other dutiable goods have been seized from the United States war ships Saratoga and Portsmouth, just returned from a cruise and lying at Newport, R. I. It is estimated that some of the officers engaged in the wine trade in a wholesale manner.

FOREIGN.

Severe and prolonged shocks of earthquake occurred in Serinagar, Cashmere, Oct. 20. There were brilliant meteoric showers during the night, lasting until sunrise. The shocks created a panic among the people.

A sad colliery explosion occurred at the Alottoff pit, near Wakefield, England, by which twenty-one men and fifty-three horses have perished. The pecuniary loss is great.

During the present civic year, ending Nov. 9th, no less than £120,000 has been voluntarily subscribed and distributed in aid of the poor and sick in London alone. This is irrespective of donations to established charitable institutions and to foreign charities.

The cholera in Japan continues to rage with a terrible percentage of mortality. Between Sept. 16 and 26 there were 9,500 new cases and 6,200 deaths, an average mortality of 60 per cent. In Tokyo alone there were 560 new cases and 506 deaths.

Regarding the alleged secret treaty between Russia and Corea, which it was said would place the latter under the protection of the former, the Japan Gazette says: "Advices from Tientsin assert that the Chinese government have definitely determined not to allow any power to annex any portion of Corea, and they are prepared to make any sacrifice in order to maintain the integrity of Corea." The Gazette further says: "If this is true there are reasons to expect trouble between Russia and China in the future should Russia make an attempt to assume a protectorate over Corea."

NATIONAL SUICIDE, AND ITS PREVENTION.

BY OSCAR F. LUMRY, PH. D.

Prof. Lumry's book, "National Suicide and Its Remedy," will be read with profit even by those who do not accept its doctrine, that taking interest for money loaned, one or more per cent, is sin, taking something for nothing. For, as Goldsmith said of his Vicar of Wakefield,

Even his fallings lean to virtue's side.

—Cynosure.

Dr. Lumry is a man of ideas and never fails to make his readers understand just what they are. Every sentiment he writes has such an air of honesty that it will in a measure disarm those who read to criticize. It is a good book to set people to thinking, whether they believe his theories or not. The book is well worth a careful reading and study. —Inter Ocean.

On all the points named they differ radically from those which prevail in the organization of society. Either they are true or false. It is a curious fact that all of them have been stigmatized as crazy, and yet nearly all of them have been for some years steadily gaining the adherence of men of intellectual ability. —Times.

While to "depart and be with Christ is far better" for the child of God, yet the church will rejoice if the latest report from Australia shall be confirmed that brings word of George Muller, the man of faith, that he yet tarries in the flesh, and was in Brisbane, an eastern port of Queensland, in July and August, speaking in the churches and confirming the faith of believers. His personal testimony against the lodge we must never forget; and it would be as emphatic in public, doubtless, did the occasion demand it.

The Birmingham, Iowa, Free Press has received the compliments of a Detroit swindler, named Crowe, who has got out an attachment on the "Star of Bethlehem" and in imitation of Phoebeus and the sun, has straddled it as an "Eminent Grand Commander, with a secret order for a saddle. He sends out circulars, apparently with little discrimination, offering to any one who will turn drummer for his Star of Bethlehem lodge, a bonus of $20 out of every $30 he is to charge for organizing lodges and getting charters. Crowe offers to any one, who will sign the obligation of secrecy and send twenty-five cents, the whole secret work of his grand new order. Such a transparent trick to pick up quarters will catch a few suckers who bite at anything; but, in all reason, there is hardly any comparing this swindle with that of Freemasonry, which would defraud a man of his money not only, but of time, home and, at last, of eternal life.

Theodore Thomas, the eminent musician, can give us an opinion on the secret trade unions. The performers of his celebrated orchestra belong to one of these which will not allow them to play in company with unsworn men, nor will it allow a foreigner to join until he has passed a matriculation of six months' residence in this country. Thomas engaged a foreign oboe-player, a performer whose loss he could not make good. Not being a member of the union its members would neither play with him, nor would they disallow their six months' rule. The harmony of the orchestra was rudely broken, and discord, "dire sister," ruled where once was "concord of sweet sounds." Mr. Thomas determined to ask the courts to put his players in tune, and was readily granted an injunction that will effectually check their absurdities and prevent the union from interfering with his orchestra. The court decided that the laws of the union are in restraint of trade and against public policy, and are therefore void. What now will members of the union do, obey the court or hold to their lodge obligation?

A few days since the chairman of the Chemung County, (N. Y.) Prohibition committee and one of the candidates of the party, went to Pine Valley in that county to hold a meeting in the hall of the Good Templar's lodge. They were met by a trustee of the lodge, who is also a "Past Grand Counselor of the Independent Order of Good Templars," and Chief County Templar, with a prohibition speech. That is, he denied them the use of the hall in the name of his order. He, however, spoke too late, and the meeting was held. The incident emphasizes the reasonable demand, that the Good Templars are no longer needed, even in the name of temperance; and all men who wish the liquor traffic abolished, will approve every step taken toward entire open work by this, and every other secret order.

Reports from Sioux City, Iowa, make us apprehensive that another attempt will be made to throttle the prosecution of the Haddock case, as in the coroner's jury. Of the Grand Jury which is to investigate the case of Arensdorf, three are believed to be opposed to prohibition and the other nine are Democrats. It is not pleasant to believe that any political bias should interfere with a just investigation, but it generally does so. The whisky party or the other hand are represented as badly demoralized. Several of the dealers have lately gone out of business and others are purposing to follow, while injunctions are being put upon all the saloons of the city. The anger of the saloon men is being heaped upon their lawyer, Treadway, whom they accuse of playing them false; and at the same time a petition is being pressed that he be disbarred for being accessory before the fact of the murder of Haddock.

President Cleveland has issued his Thanksgiving proclamation for 1886, appointing the 25th inst. as a day of "thanksgiving and prayer." It has no striking phrases, but modestly follows the ordinary language of such documents; nevertheless it will bear much study by ordinary people. Why, let all ask, is this a day for prayer as well as thanksgiving? And why are "all our people" desired to forego "accustomed employments and assemble in their usual places of worship"? The very fact that such questions as these may be asked without exciting remark, is undoubted evidence that the American people are forgetting Him "from whom all blessings flow." In our haste for wealth we forget that there is One only who has power to give us that wealth. Let all who may read this note reflect carefully upon the Godward side of the approaching festival, and use their best persuasion to secure for it such a holy and devout celebration as they have never yet known. Unless American Christians look to this, the annual proclamations from the President will become hollow sounding mockery; and the celebration, so full of holy memories, become a dead formality, which had better be buried and forgotten lest it be an offense and contamination.

Who then living can forget the thrill of holy exaltation and patriotism which swept the nation in 1863, when Abraham Lincoln, just after the Emancipation edict, issued the first National Thanksgiving proclamation? The late announcement from the capital of Spain, that the Queen Regent had signed the decree emancipating all the slaves of Cuba from the remainder of their term of servitude recalls that epoch day of our nation. The plan of gradual emancipation adopted in 1870 has already set free 924,000 Cuban slaves, but under its provisions slavery would not have become extinct until the year 1930. The new decree, therefore, cuts off forty-four years of bondage. But how will this boon be received in Cuba? Will churches be thronged with worshipers adoring the God of truth and salvation, whose Christ breaks every yoke of men and devils? The superstitious multitudes will have their season of rejoicing, but it will be a brief emotion and come far short of that devout gratitude which finds the object of its devotion only in the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Last Wednesday was Liberty's own day in New York. Flags, banners and streamers; colors of France and America; shriek of life, blare of trumpet, rattle of drum; marching thousands, grand pageantry, eloquent panegyrics and the rolling thunder of the salute from batteries of great cannon ashore and aloft—with such imposing ceremonies Bartholdi's great statue of Liberty was dedicated. A quick fancy imagines the family of great statues paying their regards to the latest and greatest of them all. The image of Nebuchadnezzar, the Sphinx of Egypt, the Colossus of Rhodes, the statue of Athens, of Charles Borromeo on lake Maggiore, may render obisance. We can almost forget the Masonic farce at the foundation of the pedestal as we contemplate the ideal of American, of Christian liberty, of which this is the greatest monument,—the noblest it can never be while the myriad of long, low green mounds roll on their psalm of victory over oppression bought by death. Statues may crumble and all but their name perish, but such sentiments as were penned by Whittier for that day are immortal. He wrote thus for the Independent:

The land that, from the rule of kings,
In freeing us itself made free—
Our old-world sister—to us brings
Her sculptured dream of Liberty.

Unlike the shapes on Egypt's sands,
Uplifted by the toll-worn slave,
On freedom's soil with freemen's hands
We rear the symbol free hands gave.

O France, the beautiful, to thee,
Once more, a debt of love we owe.
In peace beneath thy Fleur-de-lis
We hail a later Rochambeau.

Rise, stately symbol, holding forth
Thy light and hope to all who sit
In chains of darkness! Belt the earth
With watch-fires from thy torch, uplift!

Reveal the primal mandate still,
Which chaos heard and ceased to be;
Trace on mid-air the eternal will,
In signs of fire: "Let man be free."

Shine far, shine free, a guiding light!
To Reason's ways and Virtue's aim—
A lightning flash the wretch to smite
Who shields his license with thy name!

AN IMPRESSIVE SCENE.

BY REV. M. A. GAULT.

No church or public hall in Sioux City, Iowa, could hold the people who desired to be present at the funeral services of the Rev. Geo. C. Haddock, Aug. 5th. The large M. E. church of which he had been pastor was densely crowded, and an overflow meeting filled the Presbyterian church across the street. Many friends and ministers came from neighboring places to add their testimony of respect for the brave man so cruelly stricken down in the line of duty. The services were not as those over the body of one dead, but more as those of a hail and welcome to a victor. Rev. Wilmot Whitfield, presiding elder of the district, directed the services.

The interior of the church was heavily draped in black bunting. More conspicuous than all the rest was the broad band of black behind the pulpit, on which appeared, in letters of pure white, the words of the apostle, John 15: 13, "Greater love hath no man than this, that he lay down his life for his friends." Among the floral tributes surrounding the casket, which were many and beautiful, was a large crimson crown of rich red roses, the tribute of the deceased pastor's former congregation at Fort Dodge. At the close of a touching memorial address by Elder Whitfield, he stepped down from the pulpit and taking the crimson crown in his hands, he held it over the head of the lifeless form, while he uttered these words: "In the name of 25,000 Methodist ministers, I crown Rev. Geo. C. Haddock our martyred brother, and in the day which comes by and by, he will wear a crown of light and glory at God's right hand, and then I trust that you and I and all of us, may join that everlasting throng, and side by side with our brother, march up the holy way, singing the song of Moses and the Lamb." During this impressive scene there were few eyes in that large congregation not suffused with tears. Many a resolution then arose in majesty beside the coffin of the dead, that law and order and God should have a more loyal service than hitherto.

The martyred Haddock was a member of no secret society, and had expressed his opposition to them. If he had been a member, he doubtless would have been living to-day. The city is a stronghold of the lodge more than any city in the State, and the saloons are entrenched in the lodge. Some of the prominent citizens declared that too much ado had been made over Bro. Haddock's death, seeing he was a member of no secret order.

"Make room, oh, ye martyrs who hallowed the sod,
With your blood in those ages of yore;
For Haddock was slain for the word of our God,
And the witness he faithfully bore."

WEEK-DAY SERMON.

BY E. E. FLAGG.

"I wonder if you ever got as much comfort out of Mary's words to the servants at Cana that I have:—'Whatsoever he saith unto you do it.'"

So writes a dear home missionary sister; one who has learned in poverty and trial and persecution, meekly endured for Christ's sake, St. Paul's wonderful secret: "As poor, yet making many rich; as having nothing, and yet possessing all things."

I had never before given the text any especial thought. There are so many jewels of Scripture that we pass over carelessly, never thinking that they are jewels, till touched by some accidental gleam of light their glorious meaning flashes out. So with this. As I pondered over it the miracle grew into a parable.

The Gospel has two whatsoevers; both needed to make our lives a delightful harmony of spiritual accord. One for the closet when all earth's noises are shut out, and we are alone with the Master and our heart's deepest longings: "Whatsoever ye ask in my name that will I do," the other for the world, for the struggle and the conflict, when the days seem too short, and our strength too little for all the labors that press upon us; when the jars stand empty and there is nothing to fill them: "Whatsoever he saith unto you do it."

There are those who never lack the wine of active Christian service with which to fill their life vessels. They accomplish a vast amount of good. They fill a large place in the world's needs. They are missionaries, preachers, writers; they have time and money to freely expend in benevolent labors, and it is very natural to look upon such with envy, and ask why they are so favored while we, lacking especial gifts or training, or cramped by small opportunities, have only common-place, every-day services to offer the Master. But if it is only water with which we can fill up the vessel of our life, let us look to it that the water is pure, clear, cool, sparkling; no selfish motive, no murmuring thought, no impatience with the task we are set to do. And furthermore, let us be careful to fill them, fill them up to the brim, letting no opportunity slip because it is small, considering no service of little account, no task too homely, no duty too slight if it is only a Whatsoever.

It is comforting because so straight and plain and simple. There is not even the possibility of a stile by which to cross over into By-Path Meadow. "Whatsoever He saith unto you, do it." For the whatsoever means all of us given to Jesus just as that other whatsoever means all of Jesus given to us. It means just what Paul meant when he said, "I am crucified with Christ."

Blessed gift of water! Springs welling out of the living rock, rippling brooks that like the ground sparrow have but one song; deep, quiet, embayed pools; crystal raindrops which like the Creator's word never returns to him void! And blessed the lives filled with simple, every-day service; which like you are content to ripple and make music and fall in grateful showers on fever-stricken souls! Blessed, whirled, blessed, the feet quick to hasten to the Master's Whatsoevers.

For when earth and time are over for such, they will pour into their wondering joy that the water they poured into their life-vessels has undergone a wondrous change. It is no longer water, but the rarest fruit of the Vine; the good wine kept until now, meet to fill the goblets at the marriage supper of the Lamb, meet even for the Bridegroom's lips.

NO FELLOWSHIP WITH SECRET SOCIETIES.

BY REV. WM. K. RANDALL.

[Read before the Woodstock Baptist Ministerial Conference, N. H., and published by their request.]

In this free country a citizen may tell his neighbor what is his opinion upon any matter of public interest without offence, provided he does it in a kindly way. Much more, a member of the church of Christ may speak freely to his brethren, if he speaks kindly. The proper attitude of the church as a body and of its individual members towards secret societies is surely a matter of general interest.

I hold, and will give my reasons for it, that the church and Christians individually ought not to sanction secret societies, even though engaged in promoting useful and important reforms. At the same time, I hold, every church ought to accord to its members the largest freedom of opinion consistent with vital unity, and therefore ought not to make agreement with the majority upon this subject of secret societies a condition of membership, unless the case is one very plainly inconsistent with the Christian profession.

Arguments in favor of secret societies are mainly drawn from special cases rather than general principles; as, that there is "no harm" in joining such or such orders, or, examples of good done by them, or, advantage gained by connection with them, or, Christian people who are in them. It is conceded freely that, if only certain members of certain secret organizations were in question, little would be said, unless it were, "yet show I unto you a more excellent way," and this very gently spoken.

But it is not right to separate the best examples, such as the Sons of Temperance, or some college society of high character, from the rest, because in adopting so much of secrecy as they do they have given their support to the whole class. They pave the way to the others; they are naturally reckoned all together. This will appear a serious or a trivial thing, according to the different estimates which men form of the actual mischiefs and possible dangers arising from secret societies. Here are the reasons for my view of them:

1. It is not true that secrecy itself is "no harm." Doubtless the enjoyment of it may attract many; but in this world, with human nature sinful as it is, secrecy tends to evil; and the influence of Christianity in the world and the leading of the Holy Spirit upon the individual heart is in the opposite direction, toward light.

2. The language used by some secret orders, as though they guard some treasures of knowledge withheld from the public, and in the case of Masonry particularly the romancing or allegorizing about antiquity, all has a serious effect upon truthfulness, and confuses many persons as to the real character of the ceremonies and obligations which they accept.

3. The ceremonies in many secret societies, and particularly in Masonry, are partly unmanly, and, to say the least, unbecoming; partly a composite of details from various ages and countries, many of which are of heathen origin and meaning; and partly are positively sacrilegious, except upon the assumption of a sacred character in the order, which is itself false and mischievous. These ceremonies are thought by some to be still unknown to the outside world; but when a large number of citizens of known integrity, such Christian men as President Finney of Oberlin among them, take the ground that it is a sin to keep such oaths or to give to such ceremonies the cover of secrecy, and accordingly expose them and endorse the exposure of them, it is safe to say the whole matter is open to the public.

4. The tendency of these rites and claims is to shape a substitute for the Gospel. Other associations or pursuits may engross the mind, and so hinder faith and service toward our Lord Jesus Christ—these add, to whatever else they may possess, the strong bonds of secrecy and pretended sanctity, making, for very many, what amounts to an alien religion, what Paul would call "another gospel." If, it may be, some have found in Masonic rites no hindrance to their Christian zeal, many others have been led to accept them as a "good enough religion."

5. The manner in which Masonry and other orders use the Word of God renders it impossible for a Christian to stand in the same rank with them. For, Christianity is not deism. The very core of the Old Testament is made of promises and types of Christ; the New Testament is nothing but the revealing of him; and for any Christian to recognize anything resembling worship as right because "true as far as it goes," while the name of Christ is purposely left out, or, above all, if the Bible is introduced and that name is skipped over in the passages used—it is no less than taking part in dishonor to his Lord and Saviour.

6. The oaths in many cases are wholly hateful to a Christian mind, are excused by those who tolerate them only by denying their actual sense, are in parts not merely offensive but wicked (and these clauses in the oaths are not to be excused by other expressions, quite different, used elsewhere); are given in ways repugnant to Christian liberty and responsibility; and they exert more or less of their mischievous force over those who take them.

7. No Christian, and much less a church, has a right to accept such intimate relations with the ungodly as are sworn with members of secret societies. It is the opposite to that command, "Come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord."

8. No secret society that I know of is an economical, charitable, or humane agency. The waste in running expenses far exceeds the cost of our missionary organizations or business enterprises; yet it is borne with for various reasons of pride, amusement, and so forth. The members get something for their money, but the profession of charity as a total is deceptive, and the balance is spent mainly to waste, or worse.

9. Selfishness finds here almost its boldest utterance in the world to-day. Most who unite with the principal secret orders do so for the sake of advantage; some to secure political support, some to get business, some to find friends in travel or in war, all for personal reasons various as themselves. And men boldly say, "Where is the harm?"—and Christians are confused by the question! "If we may form partnerships for our personal advantage," men say, "why not join the Masons as well?" Partnerships and corporations have their Christian limitations, and may become harmful; but they are specific in their objects, and restricted in numbers, and therefore the state safely permits them. But these secret orders tend to create each its army within the state, for general purposes of offense or defence for its own members. Their principle is one that invites and incurs abuse. We know, of course, that these secret orders profess worthy aims, and contain many excellent members. Let it be so—still, there is only one society that can live in this world and maintain its purity in such sworn fellowship, and that one, though not secret, is continually imperilled by those whose motive is selfish advantage. Only the patience of its divine Head saves it from itself. But, in fact, the obligations taken in Masonry, the greatest secret order, and in others also, are dangerous to the state. It is impossible but that the will of the people should be thwarted sometimes through combinations made by the aid of them; and that justice should be defeated in many cases through the influence of secret oaths and ties. There is abundant evidence that it is so. History gives us reason to apprehend that the limited extent of such mischiefs in our land hitherto may not warrant equal confidence for the future. In any event, the Christian church and its members ought to "have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather even reprove them."

SECOND TO NONE.

It has been stated that the Knights of Labor have been prohibited to members of the Catholic church by the Pope. This may not be so, or only partially so. But the fact that it might be so is significant. It shows that the instinct of the church is to be wary of all great organizations that are secret, and so evasive of the ecclesiastical control. We Protestants point to such a fact as attesting the despotic character of the Roman curia. As if it had any right to dictate to freeman what societies they might or might not join! We resent it, and, no doubt, rightly.

But there is another side to it. We are interested to see how surely the Roman authority divines the danger that lies in orders and societies which are likely to dispute with it the allegiance of the masses of its own membership. But that is a danger which menaces the churches of Christ of whatever name. The modern life is running wild with all sorts of orders and unions and leagues. There are more Knights, of some sort, than there were in the days of chivalry. Every little village is overrun with them. In some places citizens feel under some social or business compulsion to belong to a half-dozen of these different organizations at the same time. That makes these citizens bleed pretty freely. It takes their evenings from home and family. Too often it fritters away time and money in a sort of routine which cannot be regarded as the feast of reason, whatever may be claimed for the flow of soul.

But, admitting as no doubt we should in many cases, that these clubs and lodges and posts have valuable ends to subserv, still there is reason why the church should feel some alarm; for there is a limit to every man's time and means. If a man belongs to the kingdom of Christ, that is a kingdom which is in its very nature exacting. Its aims are very comprehensive. The pressure on its treasury is always severe. Its work of instruction and training and charity calls for much study and painstaking. A church member who is really alive, and seized with devotion, in one of these churches will be a pretty busy man. Will not his wife say of him, "Why, he is at some church meeting or business nearly all the time?" And yet, hardly one of our laymen feels that he is doing a tithe of what might be usefully done in making his church effective in the community. How is this man going to belong to a half-score of other unions, and give to them anything like the attention which many of them, by their constitution, require? In all ordinary cases, the moment a Christian gets deeply interested in some one, to say nothing of several, of these organizations, he ceases to be the effective layman he used to be.

It may be said this is not a necessary result. Perhaps not. But it is so frequently the result that the church cannot very well help being somewhat anxious. Its anxiety is not merely for itself, by any means. It is solicitous for the Christian character, and highest usefulness of its members; for, to use the great words of St. Paul, "the Church is the house of God, the pillar and ground of the truth;" no other organization can compare with it in sacredness or serviceableness. It must have the first place in the esteem and enthusiasm of all its membership. The moment one should give it the second place, he would commit treason to the King. As Protestants, we do not use some great central authority to prescribe what or how many societies a Christian may join. But, as members of the church, which is Christ's living and sensitive body, we feel that there is an evil here, of which every Christian man in our day ought to beware.—Pacific.

REINSTATEMENT OF THE JESUITS.

A cablegram recently received brings the astonishing intelligence of the restoration of this dark and dangerous society by the published decree of Pope Leo XIII., which again gives it all the privileges granted by his predecessors since its establishment by the Bull of Paul III., September 27, 1540. Since then it has been suppressed successively by all the several States of Europe. It has been disbanded at different dates and its members banished by thirty-nine governments, because its by-laws and practices were found inimical to the peace of nations and the interests of civilized society.

The disciples of Loyola were expelled from Spain in 1555; from the Low Countries and Portugal in 1578; from France in 1594; Venice in 1606; kingdom of Naples, 1622. These were Catholic countries. They were driven from France on account of the assassination of Henry III. by Clement, and the attempted assassination of Henry IV. by Chatel, both having been proven to be pupils in their schools. In 1603 they were reinstated; but on the death of Henry IV. by the dagger of Ravallae a greater outcry than ever was raised against them. On the 6th of August, 1762, their order was again condemned by the Parliament of Paris as contrary to the laws of the State and the welfare of the kingdom. In 1792 they were again forbidden to enter France, and the sentence of reprobation was repeated in 1845. By these different decrees the society was dissolved and its effects confiscated.

They were expelled from England in 1604, and again from Portugal in the beginning of the year 1759, with every brand of infamy, upon the charge of conspiring for the assassination of King Joseph I. Malagrida and other implicated fathers of the Jesuits were found guilty of the crime and condemned to the stake.

In order to discover the depth of their treachery and to counteract their sinister designs, Duke Pomal became a member of the mysterious brotherhood. Adopting for the purpose a dissimulation that discounted that of the Jesuits themselves, he acquired a perfect knowledge of their pernicious plottings, their secrets, political intrigues and dangerous designs. He found them to be the secret source of the troubled affairs of his country. After having intimately acquainted himself with the operations of the order, he disclosed the dangerous principle of its constitution, the fearful oaths which bound its members, their horrid and disgraceful deeds, their duplicity and unparalleled profligacy. He was enabled to make a complete exposure. They had attained some of the most important positions in the kingdom, such as confessors to the king and instructors of youth in the universities. Upon this exposure the Jesuits were officially declared to be a political organization under the mask of religion, and were expelled from Portugal as enemies of the public peace and traitors to the government.

The original purpose of the order was to extend and confirm the power of the papacy. Says Macaulay: "With what vehemence, with what policy, with what exact discipline, with what dauntless courage, with what self-denial, with what unscrupulous laxity and versatility in the choice of means, the Jesuits fought the battles of their church, is written in every page of the annals of Europe for several generations. In the order of Jesus was concentrated the quintessence of the Catholic spirit; and the history of the order of Jesus in the history of the great Catholic reaction. This order possessed itself at once of all the strongholds which command the public mind—of the pulpit, of the press, of the confessional, of the academies. Nor was it less their office to plot against the thrones and lives of apostate kings, to spread evil rumors, to raise tumults, to inflame civil wars to arm the hand of the assassin." Of course the popes were their protectors to the extent of their power.

But there was one remarkable exception. Ganganelli, who became Pope Clement XIV. in 1769, was a good, generous, and liberal minded young man. He was rather lax in religious belief, and there is little doubt that he was really a freethinker and discredited the doctrine of the soul's immortality. France, Spain, Portugal, and Naples, united upon him as successor to Clement XIII., on his giving them good grounds to expect that he would effectually abolish the order of Jesuits if elected. Immediately upon his accession he commenced a searching investigation into the character and career of the infamous society. He spent four years studying its secret history and searching the archives of the Propaganda for documents relating to the doings of its agents, and became convinced that civilization called for its suppression; and on July 21, 1773, he signed a decree to that effect. But he fully realized the consequences to himself. As he gave the instrument his signature he sighed and said: "I have signed my own death-warrant; but I do not repent of it, having only resolved on it after examining and weighing everything." His forebodings for himself were fulfilled the following September. The initial letters of a pasquinade were posted up on St. Peter's church, which were interpreted, "The Holy See will be vacant in September." Clement suddenly sickened and died the 22d day of that month under circumstances that leave little room to doubt that he was poisoned by Jesuits.

The decree of suppression sealed the doom of Clement, but the society survived. For forty years it maintained a masked existence. It was then publicly restored to pontifical favor by Pius VII., and again resumed its unchanging course of craft and crime.

Its career of crime is to well known to require recapitulation. It includes every atrocity of secret assassination and wholesale slaughter. The butchery of the gentle Albigenses, the flight of hunted heretics from their homes to the friendly shelter of Germany and Switzerland, the wails of woe from despoiled provinces, were the first fruits of the terrible teachings of Loyola. It was they who conducted the brutal soldiery of Simon de Montfort into the beautiful Provençal villages, and furnished the most fearful examples of fanatic ferocity. They rained ruin through the pleasant passes of the Piedmontese and the sweet valleys of the Vaudois. As politicians they destroyed the tranquility of Europe, and involved kingdoms in wasting wars and widespread disasters. Strife and spoliation and famine followed their footsteps. They devastated Germany, destroyed the forerunners of reform in France, made Italy infamous, made Spain the scoff of nations, involved Ireland in revolt, projected the persecutions of Alva in the Netherlands, disturbed the repose of Russia, endangered England, assailed Abyssinia, terrified far distant China, and filled Christendom with intrigue and intolerance.

No association of men that ever existed have been so universally execrated as that of the Jesuits. And not by Protestants alone—not for reasons of religion. Everywhere treacherous, intriguing, and hostile to the established government; everywhere the inveterate foes of freedom; everywhere the exemplars of duplicity, moral degradation and a dark and desperate policy; everywhere manifesting the same fierce and intolerant zeal and scorn for the claims for humanity and love—the Jesuits have been everywhere hated and held in abhorrence. At different times in their career, they have been condemned by every Catholic country and driven out as dangerous. The general voice of history denounces them as the most mischievous and malevolent enemies of man. Michelet thus asks and answers:

"What is the nature of the Jesuits? He has none; he is fit for everything. The Jesuits are a formidable machine for war, invented for the most vile combat in the sixteenth century."

The society was instituted, as every one knows, as a crusade against heresy in the sixteenth century, the especial heresy being the Reformation under Luther, who was contemporary with Loyola. Laynez, the associate of Loyola and his successor as general of the society, succeeded in obtaining control of the Council of Trent; and from that time to this, save for one or two trifling interruptions, the Jesuits have constituted the real supremacy of the Romish Church. They presided at the last imperious council at the Vatican, the last that had assembled for three hundred years; and it was their voice which anathematized the course of nineteenth century civilization, pronounced poor old Pius IX. the vicegerent of God, and invoked the curse of heaven against all who refused to submit to his infallible rule.

Since their triumph at Trent, the popes have been, almost without exception, as pasteboard puppets in their hands. The Italian prelates know this so well that they term the General of the Jesuits "The Black Pope," regarding the ostensible wearer of the tiara as but the tool of his sable brother who works the papal machinery in the dark.

When it is considered that the society is a secret police, the most perfect ever organized, possessing fuller information of political affairs than any civil government, it will be seen how unavailing have been the various attempts to abolish them. "From this chamber, monsieur, I govern not only Paris, but China; not only China, but the whole world, without any person knowing how this is accomplished," remarked one of their generals to the Duke of Brissac. Some one has said that the society was a sword with its hilt at Rome. But the hilt is always in the grasp of its general, wherever he may be, who can cause the blade to be felt everywhere, and frequently with so fine an edge that it can not be seen. This is the secret of the society's mysterious vitality and sinister influence. When threatened with danger it sinks from sight, but yet lives like a reptile lost in the grass.

Its sister and once superior societies have almost ceased to exist. The rival orders of Dominic and Francis, which once strove with it for ecclesiastical supremacy, are now scarcely known, while the Benedictines are barely remembered on Monte Cassino; but despite the decrees of Catholic kings, the assaults of secular governments, despite the reprobation of the past and the protests of the progressive present, the crafty "Company of Jesus" still remains to menace the peace of mankind and confront the advancing civilization of the age.

When the good Ganganelli gave his Bull for the abolition of their order in 1773, the Jesuits would have been entirely expelled from Europe (that is, all who did not disavow affiliation with the prescribed society) but for the refuge afforded them by Frederick the Great. This imperial infidel and admirer of Voltaire, proffered them Prussian hospitality. He termed them his "tame leopards." But good cause had after generations of Germans to regret it. Not till after the most desperate struggle during the last quarter of a century, with that diplomatic Hercules, Bismarck, was Jesuitism compelled to release its poisonous coils from the expanding empire. During the same period it was dispossessed and driven forth from Italy, its inherited home and the stronghold of mediæval popery.

But there remained just as many Jesuits in the world as ever. Their headquarters were merely removed from Rome to the Isle of Malta. Father Beckx, their general, remained the real autocrat of the Church, and the unknown manipulator of that mighty ecclesiastical machinery that moves, as one man, nearly 200,000,000 worshippers at the shrines of Mary. And if it be true, as announced, that they have again been granted pontifical restoration, it is because Leo XIII. recognizes the necessity of an audacious and aggressive policy, and of their public aid in opposing the progressive movements of the age.—S. H. Preston, in the Day Star.

Rev. Dr. T. DeWitt Talmage, referring to the subject of impure jesting, says:—

"The most miserable thing on earth is a bad man's fun. There they are—ten men in a bar-room; they have at home wives, mothers, daughters. The impure jest starts at one corner of the bar-room, and crackle, crackle, crackle, it goes all around. In five hundred such guffaws there is not one item of happiness. They all feel demeaned if they have any conscience left. Have nothing to do with men or women who tell immoral stories. I have no confidence either in their Christian character or their morality."

REFORM NEWS.

WISCONSIN STATE MEETING.

MENOMONIE, Oct. 28, '86.

The fourteenth Annual Meeting of the Wisconsin Christian Association opposed to secret societies was held at Waupun last week from Tuesday to Thursday evening inclusive. Delegates from abroad were not numerous but in earnest. The prohibition lecture Tuesday evening by Mr. Cushing, of Maine, was a clear-cut and exceedingly enjoyable presentation of the subject, and beyond a doubt a great help to the cause. The Association met Wednesday morning, and after a season of devotion organized for business.

The following named persons were chosen as permanent officers:

President: J. W. Wood.

Vice Presidents: Nathan Wardner, Jacob Griffin, Warren Whiting, Wm. Wilson, Isaiah Ferris, Thomas Lowe, W. Van Driessen, J. W. Suider, S. D. Horine, L. B. Webb.

Secretary: W. W. Ames.

Treasurer: M. R. Britten.

In the afternoon there was a very lively discussion of the labor question including the Knights of Labor, their claims and methods, chiefly by Bros. Ronayne and Stoddard—lively, but no doubt very profitable.

On Wednesday evening a large audience assembled in the hall to listen to Bro. Ronayne. He discussed the Master Mason's degree, its oaths and their operation upon the Mason in the courts, and also from the Christian stand-point, showing its denial of Christ. An intoxicated lawyer from out of town came in, doubtless to brow-beat the speaker and make disturbance. Bro. R. had proceeded but a little way when he was met with a gruff and flat contradiction, which was many times repeated. He called Bro. Ronayne a liar; what he said was "a falsity." He would listen to no entreaty or advice, and quite a number of young men and boys would clap and stamp and whistle and drown the speaker's voice, and the Deputy Marshal, who, as I was informed, sat within ten feet of the drunken man, seemed to make no attempt to quell the disturbance. Bro. Ronayne spoke very kindly, but assured the Masons that the disturber was injuring Masonry more than he was. After a while the intruder rose to his feet and left the hall, followed by "Young America," some of whom said the fun was over. Masonry was exposed then if never before; and Bro. R. finished in peace his very able and impressive discourse to the great satisfaction of a large congregation. Several prominent Masons got around Bro. Ronayne after the lecture to ask questions and dispute, calling him a liar, telling him that he never was a Mason, and almost the next moment that he had been expelled from the lodge. Bro. R. was enabled to keep cool and to hold the inside track.

On Thursday morning it was found that bills had been placarded about town purporting to be from the "Committee for Welfare of the City," calling on the people to "lock their hen-roosts and out-houses, and gather in all loose property, as two men—no, not men, but sneaks, E. Ronayne and J. P. Stoddard, under cover of the Wisconsin Christian Convention, were at large in the city." Those who would lie would steal, and such as had misappropriated funds committed to them could not be trusted. The ladies were advised to keep off the street after dark, until Stoddard and Ronayne were gone. Whether so intended or not, it proved a good advertisement for the evening meeting, when the hall was filled to hear Bros. Stoddard and Browne. Although it was seriously rumored that trouble was brewing and that three kegs of addled eggs had been provided for use on the Antis after meeting, we were assured that two of them had been taken care of, and that the hall-owner and some others would do their best to keep order. This was done and the Divine presence being invoked seemed to rest as an atmosphere upon his servants, calming every fear, and aiding the speakers to give a calm, clear and powerful presentation of the truth. Great light was shed on the systems of both Odd-fellowship and Masonry, and we trust great good will be accomplished, and many rescued from the clutches of the dark orders.

Bro. Browne is doing a noble and faithful work, and the Association, wisely, we think, has engaged a continuance of his services. Let the friends of the cause "thank God, take courage," pray earnestly, and contribute freely for this good work.

THE RESOLUTIONS.

WHEREAS God in Christ Jesus has given us a perfect example, and made known the whole duty of man in his inspired Word; and

WHEREAS, Our Perfect Example ever spake openly to the world and by his servant hath warned us against evil doers, saying, "He that biddeth him God-speed is partaker of his evil deeds," (2 John 11), therefore,

Resolved, That as disciples of Christ we are prohibited from fellowshipping Freemasonry and kindred orders.

1. Because their oaths or pledges are in conflict with the higher obligations which a man owes to his family, his country and his God.

2. Because they are religious systems from which Christ, the only Mediator between God and man, is excluded.

3. Because Masonry assumes the functions of civil government, and after trial in secret courts wholly unauthorized by law, condemns men to suffer punishment and even death at their hands.

4. Because they are not only training schools of infidelity, but cabals in which men are indoctrinated in crime by playing murder and then swearing to conceal each other's secrets, crimes not excepted.

Resolved, That we deeply sympathize with the industrial masses in their privations and in all their laudable efforts to secure their just rights at the hands of capitalists and corporations, and believe that a cause so evidently just and praiseworthy does not require the cover of organized secrecy.

Resolved, further, that we deeply regret to learn that such a large number of the workmen of this country have surrendered their personal liberty by joining secret unions and binding themselves to obey their leaders with out question.

Resolved, That we approve the Congress of Christians proposed to meet in Chicago during the approaching winter to consider the system of secret lodges, and we recommend that a committee of three or more delegates be appointed to represent the Wisconsin Christian Association at said Conference.

Resolved, That the effort in progress to secure the prohibition of intoxicating liquors by legislation has our unqualified approbation, and we earnestly appeal to all leaders in this great movement, who favor secret methods of work, such as Good Templarism, etc., to abandon such secret agencies and stand upon an open platform where all the friends of prohibition can meet and walk in unison for God, humanity and the right.

Resolved, That "formation is better than reformation," and hence it is the duty of all who have been enlightened on the evils and dangers of secret societies to make special effort to bring the subject before the youth and children of our land and furnish them with lectures and other means of obtaining information before they are caught in the evil net.

Resolved, That we approve the action of the N. C. A. Board of Directors in tendering to each State Association $35 per month, paid in newly-obtained subscriptions, by its Agent each month while engaged in the Association's work.

Resolved, That we will endeavor to extend the circulation of the Christian Cynosure as the exponent of our principles on the secret lodge system.

Resolved, That we appreciate the liberality of E. A. Cook of Chicago in donating $50 worth of his valuable publications in aid of the reform work in which we are engaged and that we do hereby tender to him our sincere thanks for said donation.

Resolved, That the thanks of this convention are due, and are hereby tendered to the C. M. & St. P. and C. & N. W. railroads for favors granted to delegates to this annual meeting of the State Christian Association, and to the citizens of Waupun and vicinity for the hospitable entertainment to us while in their midst.

So it will be seen that while there was disturbance and opposition, there are those in Waupun who are in sympathy with the reform and those even among the orders who would in no wise approve of the unfriendly demonstrations of which mention was made. Turn on the light. W. W. AMES, Secretary.

WORK AND PLANS IN WISCONSIN.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—October 9 I went to Beaver Dam, whence Bro. William Croft took me seven miles south in Calamus, where the Wesleyan brethren held quarterly meeting on the 9th and 10th. I preached on the 9th, afternoon and evening, and on the forenoon of Lord's day, 10th, and being asked to do so, I lectured on secret societies on Lord's day evening. I had good liberty throughout the meetings, and the occasion was a profitable one. A generous collection was given me.

On the 11th and 12th was engaged in Waupun and vicinity in preparing for the State meeting. On the evening of the 13th I attended, with Father Griffin of Hortonville, a meeting at a private house in Oshkosh, and spoke. October 14 and 15 attended Wesleyan Annual Conference at Oshkosh. Was very cordially received, and was invited to lecture before the conference on secretism, and also to preach. I did both with good effect, I trust. October 17 I preached, according to previous arrangement, at the Disciples church, Waupun. After sermon I was invited to speak there again that evening, and did so. In the afternoon I preached at the Wesleyan church, three miles northeast. My part in the Waupun convention will be noted, I suppose, in the secretary's report.

I expect, God willing, to continue work in Wisconsin till about December 20. My general plan is to work at, or in the vicinity of, the following places, probably in about the order mentioned: Waukesha, Springvale (Columbia county), Coloma, Pleasant Ridge (Vernon county), Jacksonville (Monroe county), Menominee (perhaps), and Mondovi (Buffalo county), returning by way of Baraboo and Madison to Green county. Brethren desiring my services at other places please address me at once at 221 West Madison street, Chicago, Ill., and mail will be promptly forwarded. Let me help you all I can. For Christ's cause. J. F. BROWNE.

FOR THE PASTORS OF WAUPUN, WIS.

MILWAUKEE, Oct. 23, 1886.

After my partial report yesterday from Fond du Lac, I returned to Waupun, thinking I might have an opportunity to preach in some of the churches. The spirit of the pastors "was willing but the flesh was weak." To Bro. Browne they avowed a sincere purpose and no intended discourtesy to me, and I do most heartily accord all that they ask as personal, and will place responsibility where it evidently belongs by exhorting my brethren from any intention to wound Christ in the "house of his friends," and freely attribute the restrictive measure to the "world, the flesh and the devil," which trinity in unity, seems to have been much occupied with religious and church affairs in Waupun during the few days of the State Christian Convention. While thanking these brethren for many courtesies of which I was the grateful recipient, I must also with equal fidelity give the "devil his due." I love these brethren in Christ, and trust that without arrogance I may assume to enjoy a share of their respect. But "if ye love them which love you, what reward have ye: do not even the publicans the same?" Does not Hon. (?) Daniel W.—love his brother Masons? Did he not show his affection by leading the "forlorn hope" to suppress free speech? But Christ says, moreover, "Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, and do good to them that hate you," etc. Can a more fitting instance in which to exercise the Christian grace so highly commended be anywhere found than in the enmity, hatred, evil speaking and cursing, to which some were subjected who insisted on "speaking openly to the world" in the spacious hall where "the people resort," and can we more clearly demonstrate a sincere love than by giving these men credit for what they actually did? If it is true that a quantity of bad eggs were stored near the hall to be employed in defence of the "ancient and honorable order," let the honorables who belong to the order have the benefit of those eggs, even though they were discovered and destroyed by Bro. Dean and others before they were used to plaster the garments of ladies and others and to cover the "Hon. (?) fraternity" with imperishable GLORY. Why not? Justice to all, is the motto of J. P. STODDARD.

THE NEW HAMPSHIRE STATE CONVENTION.

GLORY TO GOD IN THE HIGHEST!

NEW MARKET, N. H. Oct. 23, 1886.

Our Tenth Annual Convention was held in Manchester, the largest city of our State, according to notice. We have experienced what many able writers have recently suggested in the Cynosure as necessary to the success of moral reforms, and especially the anti-secret reform. Human strength is not able to cope with the devil. We must have the Lord's help. In New Hampshire we have received it, praise his name. Our convention was successful beyond all precedent in every respect. The attendance of friends was larger than ever before, the number of our active membership was nearly doubled, sinners were convicted, saints blessed, consecrated money abundant, and the devil routed at every point, horse, foot, and dragoon. Lust and pride, ambition and avarice, rum and tobacco, sectarianism and lodgism went to the bottomless pit together. Even the money that flowed into the Lord's treasury shouted MAH-HAH-BONE. Maine sent up to the help of the Lord Bro. H. W. Goddard with Elder Isaac Jackson and wife; Massachusetts was well represented by Henry J. Pierson and wife, God-sent evangelists, Deacon Increase Leadbetter and wife, Zephaniah Graves, Louis W. Norton and our beloved sister, E. E. Flagg, who gave one of the ablest anti-secret addresses ever listened to in our State. As the various popular evils were ground to powder, it reminded one of Samuel hewing Agag in pieces before the Lord, and of the sword of the Lord and of Gideon, and all the Lord's people seemed to be Gideons. Our president, secretary, treasurer, and every member of the executive committee are seceded lodge men, who believe not only in forsaking, but confessing their sins. These brethren represent Masons, Odd-fellows, Grangers, Templars, etc. Nearly all our brethren have wallowed through the horrible pit and the miry clay of lodgism, but, glory be to God, the blood of Jesus Christ can and does cleanse us from all sin. He is able to break every yoke and let the captive go free. One thing many for the first time learned, and I wish I could so proclaim it that every Christian on earth could hear: It opens the way for the mighty working of the Holy Spirit when Christian people stand out boldly for all truth. It was the joyous testimony of all present that they had never attended so glorious and blessed meetings. In saying this we gladly confess that we have witnessed the unspeakable glory of God displayed to his people at Beacon Hill Place, Old Orchard and elsewhere. This hearty shout of victory and praise must close, but I desire to proclaim the Lord's wonderful goodness to us, that our brethren everywhere, who are "toiling at midnight rowing" may see Jesus walking on the water for their deliverance. He will come to those who look for him with all their heart, and are willing to follow him in all things. The details of this remarkable convention will in due time be laid before the public.

S. C. KIMBALL.

GOOD HOPE FOR IOWA.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Just before the annual meeting at Birmingham I was at the State Conference of the Free Methodist church held at Burlington. As agent of the Iowa Christian Association I offered to furnish them, free of cost, as many of the N. C. A. reform tracts as they would engage faithfully to distribute.

Since the State Convention I have attended the Friends Yearly Meeting at Oskaloosa. Being called upon to do so, I made brief remarks, which drew out some warm manifestations of sympathy and secured some co-operation in the distribution of tracts. I also attended the Iowa Conference of the Wesleyan Methodists at Wayne, Henry Co., and addressed the body and invited their co-operation. I also attended the Iowa Presbytery of the Covenant church, and by invitation addressed them.

As the first fruits of these efforts at enlisting the co-operation of the churches in the work of withstanding and removing the secret lodges, 12,000 pages of reform tracts have been ordered for distribution by brethren of the denominations named. In addition to that I have supplied one Adventist and one United Brethren minister with reform tracts for distribution.

I have just preached and lectured four times at Beaconsfield and the vicinity, and am now on my way to College Springs, Page Co., where I will lecture Oct. 14th and 15th, and preach the following Sabbath. I will then do such other work in Page county as God in his providence may open to me.

I am ready to enter every open door to lecture on Freemasonry and its kindred orders. Wherever the co-operation of friends can be had I am ready to hold county conventions and assist in the organization of county Christian associations opposed to the saloon and the lodge, auxiliary to the Iowa Christian Association. In some places the friends are already moving to prepare the way for the holding of county reform conventions.

The general co-operation of those who will take sides with Christ against the "rival worshipers" of the lodge and with American liberty against the despotism of the secret empire, is earnestly invited. Let ministers and others prepare lectures and be ready to co-operate in holding county conventions. Let us not sleep, as do others, while Satan is working through the secret lodge system to supplant Christ and subvert our holy Christianity. Do not think that the devil is so strongly entrenched in the secret lodge system that he cannot be routed and his works destroyed.

Fifteen years ago the ministry of some of the churches were flocking like sheep into the lodge. In some places they are coming out now as fast as they went in then. A leading minister of one of the M. E. Conferences told me that three-fourths of the Masons of his conference had withdrawn from the lodge. A canvass of a part of one of the counties of Iowa revealed the fact that only two out of twelve pastors of the various churches were members of secret societies; and nine out of the twelve had no sympathy with any of the minor secret orders.

The time will surely come when the breath of God will blow upon the dormant mass of non-secret society people, and a vast army of opposition to the infidelity, injustice and despotism of the myriad forms of lodgery will arise to work with Christ to save the church from corruption and the nation from decay.

And to the Christian reformers of Iowa I would say: Brethren, not only pray for me, but work with me, and let us trust the Lord of the vineyard to give the increase. Your brother in Jesus,

C. F. HAWLEY.

FROM THE OHIO FIELD.

COLUMBUS, O., Oct. 29th, 1886.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Since reporting last, I have changed my plan of work slightly. Instead of going to the southern part of the State this week, I am advised to work here until after election. This will give me the opportunity to cast my ballot on the right side. Last Friday Mr. Orris and myself drove to New Albany, a little village some thirteen miles from here, and were made welcome at the home of Mr. John Swickard. He is one of the leading men in the U. B. church in this section and has been a life-long Anti-mason. He is now in his eighty-first year, and a reader of the Cynosure for years.

Sabbath morning at the request of the U. B. pastor, Rev. Robb, I spoke to his congregation. The Lord was with us. In the evening I spoke to a crowded house in the Congregational church, now occupied by the Free Methodists, who have recently organized here. Rev. Brothers, the pastor, reports the class as steadily increasing. Many have left the Methodist church and joined with them on account of deadness and seecery in the mother church.

On Monday evening I continued to point out the evils of secret societies generally, and of Masonry in particular. Every seat in the house was occupied with attentive listeners. Among the rest was the Methodist preacher (Rev. Gortner, I believe). He took the front seat and busied himself writing while I spoke. In private conversation at his home he had told me that he had gone as far as the Royal Arch degree in Masonry, and had sat and listened to temperance discussions in the Grand Lodge in Columbus. I hope that this subject is being looked into by some of the members of the Grand Lodge. Judging by their appearance, I think they should have looked into it long ago. During the evening I told the people how he and every other Mason was prepared to receive the Entered Apprentice degree. As he had previously requested, at the conclusion I gave him or any other Mason an opportunity to deny what I had said, or make any remarks they saw fit. A few questions were asked in regard to Odd-fellowship, and answered by a brother Miller who has seceded from that order, but no questions were asked or remarks made about Masonry. All seemed satisfied, and testified by a fair collection—all but Rev. G., who said at the close he felt very much insulted; that it was no place for him to answer me in such a meeting; but that he would meet and discuss the points I had endeavored to make. I accepted this challenge and asked when he could meet me. He replied, "Most any time." I sent him word by Rev. Brothers the next day that I would meet him the 15th of December, 1886, or any time after that which he might see, provided such time should not be so remote. I cannot well meet him before this on account of the State and other meetings. He will have either to meet me or go back on his word given in the presence of many witnesses. We shall hope he will not do the latter.

That the Cynosure readers may get an idea of this man I will quote a little of our conversation after the meeting. He inquired several times, "What is a secret society?" I replied that I was not supposed to be a dictionary, but would refer him to Webster. He said there is only one secret society in this country and that's the Kuklux. He also said Mackey was not authority on Masonry. When I asked what was authority, he replied that he did not know. I certainly hope he will get a little more knowledge before he attempts to discuss. Perhaps an increase of light will lessen his desire to discuss.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U. MEETING.

MINNEAPOLIS, Oct. 27, 1886.

Saturday evening being set apart for the Young Woman's Christian Temperance Unions, their leader, Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, presided. She is one who has done much in building up this part of the work, a lady of sterling worth, bright, sparkling, and fully consecrated to the service of the Master. As we listened to the words of the young ladies who had the courage and grace to step out and into this grand work, we could see in their words and actions, also in their bright, animated countenances the fulfillment of their motto: "That our daughters may be as corner-stones polished after the similitude of a palace."

Mrs. Barnes, in her annual address, showed how their work had grown until they had become a power not to be ignored. She especially recommended that the young ladies should make the standard for young men as high as the young men set up for the young ladies; then say, Unless you live up to that standard you cannot stand by our sides; if you who are strong wish us who are weak to lead pure, upright lives, we demand the same of you: there cannot be one standard for men, another for women. We ask that you stand side by side with us on this question.

Sabbath morning many of the pulpits (of this rightly called "Queen of cities") were occupied by the prominent ladies of the W. C. T. U. A mass meeting was held Sabbath afternoon in the Casino, addressed by the leading speakers, among whom were Mrs. Sallie Chapin of South Carolina, Mrs. Brady of England, Mrs. Youmans of Canada, and Mrs. Fixin, a Scandinavian.

Monday morning the executive committee held its regular session, and while that was being held the superintendents of departments held meetings in different churches. This was necessary as there was not time to bring them into the regular convention; and those especially interested in hygiene could go to that meeting, while those interested in hereditary work could go to another, and so on. Many valuable suggestions for the workers were brought out at these section meetings. Permanent training schools are to be established in different parts of the country, and as soon as an endowment fund of $100,000 can be secured, a seminary, already established in good running order, is offered to the W. C. T. U., without any encumbrances, by a lady who is interested in this line of work. This will be used as a Normal School, so that we may have trained workers.

Monday afternoon, after the usual devotional exercises (which were a notable feature throughout the convention), the election of officers took place. Miss Willard left the chair to one of the vice presidents and retired. She was re-elected; the vote standing 261 for Miss Willard, 22 scattering.

The resolutions were next in order. The third, which declared in favor of the Prohibition or third party, met with considerable opposition, and led to an extended discussion, Mrs. J. Ellen Foster being the leader on the opposite side. In fact, nearly all of the opposition belonged to the Iowa delegation, they claiming that the N. W. C. T. U. becomes partisan in so doing. When it came to a vote 252 declared in favor of the resolution to 33 against. Mrs. Foster filed a protest which is to come up later.

Much to the surprise of many the Haddock resolution met with full as strong opposition from the same source. The resolution declared that the politicians of the country with the official board of Sioux City, were responsible for the death of Mr. Haddock. The resolution was tabled and brought up in another form which was passed.

Tuesday evening the newsboys of Minneapolis were received by the convention, and Mrs. Youmans and others gave them words of cheer and wisdom. When asked who of them knew the taste of liquor, a large number of hands went up. When asked the same in regard to tobacco, nearly every hand was shown. A gentleman who has been working among them the past ten days, asked all that had not used any of these things since he came to them to show hands, and a large part put up their hands. The boys presented Miss Willard with a beautiful basket of flowers, and one of their number read a neat speech. A good work is being done by a lady of the city, who has been working among them for six years.

Dr. J. H. Kellogg gave a short talk on diet and dress; also talked to the boys on the effect of alcohol on the bodies and souls of men.

The convention was to have closed on Tuesday evening, but owing to a press of business it was continued through Wednesday. The executive members, however, will remain a day longer, if not more.

The convention has been a success. Its influence will be world-wide in its extent, giving an impetus to the work all over this and other lands. There were, of course, some things done which might have better been left undone; rarely, if ever, can it be said of any assembly that there were no mistakes. We would have been glad if the convention had been pronounced against evil of secretism, and more outspoken in the favor of open methods. That will come in the future we trust. May the Lord open the eyes of these women to see that the liquor traffic, which they are working so hard to eradicate, is entrenched in the secret societies.

ANNA E. STODDARD.

THE GOOD MEN ARE COMING OUT.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I may be allowed space in which to say a few words on the secret society—I had almost said question, but position may be the better word. I think I made the statement somewhere, if not in the Cynosure then in the Western Crank, that good men in the lodge are leaving it good men outside are determining to remain out, and bad men are rushing into the place where by oath their vices and crimes may be sheltered, and soon the lodge will fall of its own weight. However, the "soon" may not correspond to the common meaning placed upon it. Everywhere we learn of grand, good men renouncing the lodge, giving their reasons for so doing, and they universally agree that good men are in bad company in such places.

There are some strong men holding high positions in life who still adhere for various reasons, and the influence of these men leads quite a number of worthy young persons into the lodge fold. They say: "There is Mr. B., or Dr. D., a good man and a member of the orders." This works badly; but those who inform themselves may find an army of great and good men marching out and giving the lodge the benefit of a goodly airing—there being no secret society of note which has not had its so-called secrets made known in this manner.

Just now occurs to my mind two or three cases of persons renouncing the lodge. Bro. A. W. Van Alstine, who was the Deputy Grand Worthy Chief Templar of the I. O. G. T. for Dakotas, renounced lodgism entire less than a year ago (which renunciation has been noted in the Cynosure), and recently wrote to the writer that the way is clear and "no lodge for me" as his battle-cry. This young brother was persecuted by false reports, slurs, etc., because of his "going back" on the orders, but he stands firmly. Bro. R. B. Neal, editor of the Truthful Witness, Louisville, Ky., one of the men whom I know well, and the best I ever knew, perhaps, a grand, godly man, was once a Mason—or nearly so—having taken two degrees, and he writes: "I took two degrees and quit. Had quantum sufficit of it. If it ever was a good thing it has outgrown it; rather, if there was ever a necessity for it, the necessity no longer exists. I...oppose those (secret societies) that are working evil. In fact, this country is society-cursed," etc. Bro. Neal has more to say in this vein, but it is the same old story of arousing the churches to throw off these snares and put on Christ. May God help us to work to this end.

C. E. WALKER.

TO ANTI-SECRET PROHIBITIONISTS.

Having received inquiries of such as want to vote a clean ticket, and vote prohibition of lodgery as well as of liquor, I am in correspondence with the Pennsylvania candidates, and will, soon as possible, report through the Cynosure and American the result of my correspondence. Our dear brother, J. A. Conant of Connecticut, has done his duty in good style and good time. I hope to report in time for us to vote as we pray. Could I enlarge my capacity enough to swallow down a huge mass of lodge-bound trumpery, and could I see it consistent to do so, I would hitch onto the crew "asking no questions." It is with me a thing of "moral inability," as theology would define it. Really I can't.

I want prohibition enough to do anything right in itself, and so consistent; that I can do. By voting oath-bound lodge-men into power, and so helping to entrench this giant evil, every whit as bad and as potent as the rum demon, I should help to install an enemy in the camp of Israel, equal in every respect to the very worst; and I think this viper would grow fat on the vitals of the temperance cause. Good men cannot afford to help install anti-Christ into official power for a time unknown—a half century, more or less. Deeming this agency, lodgery, to be a torpedo in the interest of Satan, to be deposited in the heart of the temperance cause, I can't help put it there by my vote. That prohibition is coming I scarcely doubt, that it is to help lodgery into increased power is, perhaps, possible, but that I should help to do the latter is impossible. If sincere temperance people will create a lodge boom I can't help.

NATHAN CALLENDER.

PITH AND POINT.

A WORD FOR NEXT TUESDAY.

James Springer, of Galena, Kansas, asks in jest, "What we (the sovereign people of the United States) are to do to be saved?" Saved from what? From the backsliding since 1832, when no slaves of secret, deistic, atheistic lodge,—devil's school of sin,—could hold a post, however humble, in any public trust. In many churches it was the same. How is it now? The blandishments of Satan's slaves so captivate the masses that every place in church and state is for such only as are qualified in his secret dens. When such men rule the wicked walk at large unpunished. Let Mr. S. and every one who knows Satan's lodgery, condemn Satan's child wherever presented, as a candidate for honor and trust. A people ruled by Satan's slaves must become more and more the slaves of Satan's wiles. To know them is not enough. We must resist them. "Resist the devil and he will flee from you." You have the vote. Give it only for Christ's freeman and you shall be free. If you vote for Satan's slave you are enslaved and you forge your own chains and pay him who enslaves you. Every citizen to the rescue and liberty is yours!—JAMES DONALDSON.

TWO WRONGS DON'T MAKE ONE RIGHT.

Prof. Lumry, in his account of a conference at Indianapolis, Ind., apologizes for the secret trade unions, because capitalists work in secret. Can the professor mention an organization of employers established on the basis of swearing to unknown secrets, making such a false oath the sine qua non of admission? If there be such a society it should be hooted and routed out of existence. If there is not, then there is less excuse for labor lodges. At least the wrong doing of monopolists does not excuse any body of men who follow their bad example.—QUERIST.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE WRITINGS OF JOHN.

LESSON VII.—November 14, 1886.—Peter Restored.—John 21: 4-19.

GOLDEN TEXT.—He saith unto him, Feed my lambs.—John 21:15.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The third appearance of Christ to his disciples. vs. 4-14. By the same lake on whose shores he had preached and healed and taught, Jesus now fulfills the promise made his disciples that he would meet them in Galilee; and proves the reality of his personal presence to them but especially to Peter by a similar miraculous sign to that wrought in the beginning of his ministry when they were first called to become fishers of men. In going back to their old employment they adopted a far wiser course than to have spent the waiting time in idleness. They were better prepared to recognize him when he came, as the sign by which he manifested himself was in the way of their everyday duty. We find here some important lessons to be learned. (1) The way in which we employ life's waiting times gives the keynote to character. When no great work for the Master seems to present itself, do we sit down idly and mourn our lack of opportunity, or do we cheerfully and hopefully "do the next thing," though it be only the humblest toil of the hands? The period may be long or short in which we shall have to wait our Lord's coming, but the motto of St. Edmund of Canterbury is one worthy to be engraven on the heart of every Christian: "Work as though you would live forever; live as though you would die to-day." (2) Christ does not reveal himself in strange out-of-the-way experiences, but rather in the familiar walks of our common everyday living. (3) He comes when we need him most. He knows when we have toiled all the night in weariness and discouragement and taken nothing, and can by one suggestion of his Spirit show us where and how we have failed, and direct us to a grander success than ever came into our faithless souls to even pray for.

2. The Restored Disciple. vs. 15-17. It will be remembered that with the general message to all his disciples a particular one was sent to Peter. The question put to him three times seems meant by its very form to bring to his mind his former "self-confident boasting" when he declared himself ready to go even to prison and judgment. Very different now is Peter's answer, "Lord thou knowest—not I know—that I love thee." The charge given him is significant as the sign of his full restoration—the highest possible mark of his Saviour's confidence and affection, "Feed my lambs," with the familiar words added that called him from his fishing boat three years before, "Follow me." This is the Alpha and Omega of Christian duty. It is sometimes asked, Can a Christian dave, join a secret lodge, or attend the opera and the theatre? There is another question more pertinent. Will they find Christ there? And if not how can they "follow him" in places where his presence is never known, expected or desired? Let us in all such matters be honest with ourselves, and remember that to say with Peter, "Thou knowest that I love thee," we must be conscious that we are walking in the way of his commandments.

LIGHT FROM THE WORD.

How should a shepherd feed the flock? 1 Pet. 5:2, 3. What will be his reward? v. 4. How ought the flock to feel towards a faithful shepherd? Heb. 13:17.

From Peloubet's Notes.

The Disciples go up to Galilee.—The very morning of the resurrection the angels in the tomb sent a message by the women to whom they appeared, that the disciples were to go into Galilee, Jesus would appear to them there (Matt. 28:7). Accordingly the eleven (Matt. 28:16) went away into Galilee, and waited for the special appearing of Jesus there. It was during this time that the three next appearances occurred; the seventh to seven disciples by the Sea of Galilee, the eighth to the eleven on a mountain in Galilee where Jesus had appointed to meet them; probably at one of the meetings on Sunday evening; and the ninth to about 500 at once (1 Cor. 15:6), either at the same time with the eleven or in close connection with that interview. The reason they did not go immediately on receiving the message from the angels was doubtless because Jesus at his appearance that same evening made the appointment, and they went just before the time. While they are waiting for the appointed time, seven of the disciples are by the sea, in the neighborhood of their former homes and the scene of their former labors. Naturally Peter suggests that they go a-fishing, either as a reminiscence of old times, or because they needed to do something for their support. Seven of them enter into a fishing boat and put out into the lake. Three years before this some of the disciples were fishing in this same lake when Jesus called them to become fishers of men (Luke 5:1-11; Matt. 4:19).

"For the multitude of fishes." Thus Jesus gave them an illustration of the success they might expect as fishers of men when they labored in accordance with his word. This result was abundantly exemplified not many weeks later on the day of Pentecost.

"And did cast himself into the sea." It is characteristic of the two men, that John the thoughtful was the first to recognize Christ, and Peter the impulsive, the first to go to him.—Stock.

"Yet was not the net broken." So the Gospel net can hold all who will come. Not one believer will be lost.

"Jesus then cometh, and taketh bread, and giveth them." We may reasonably see, with Alford, Trench and others, a spiritual significance in the fact that Christ provided a meal for the apostles at the same time when, by this new miraculous draught he reminded them of their first call to become fishers of men, thus (1) suggesting to them the spiritual truth involved in the Lord's Supper, and symbolically represented in the feeding of the five thousand, that they who minister in the things of Christ are themselves dependent on Christ for their spiritual support; perhaps (2) also suggesting that when the labor of life is over, there will be for them that have wrought for Christ a feast with him in the kingdom of heaven. (3) It is reasonable to see in this provision for the disciples common needs—food and a fire at the end of a night of sleepless toil—a new illustration of the tenderness of Christ's consideration for his own.—Abbott. (4) They were taught also that if they gave themselves up to the work of the Gospel, they should find in that work all they needed for the necessities of the body.

"This is now the third time." The third time he appeared to the disciples in a body, and when John was present, the appearances to individuals not being counted here. The two other times were those on Sunday evenings, April 9 and 16.

"Jesus saith to Simon Peter." It is necessary if we would fully understand this passage, to call attention to some of the delicate shades of meaning in the Greek, which do not appear in our English translation, and which it is difficult to make clear in any translation. Jesus uses the word love three times in his questions, and Peter uses it three times in his answers. But in the original, the word for love (agapao) which Jesus uses in his first two questions, is a different word from that which Peter uses for love (phileo) in all his answers. In the third asking Jesus uses Peter's word.—P. The word which Christ uses in his question, Lovest thou me? (agapao) signifies if not the higher, at least the more thoughtful and reverential affection, founded on an intelligent estimate of character, and accompanied by a deliberate and well considered choice. Peter's I love thee represents rather the personal instinctive love, the activity of feeling rather than of will, the affection which, being spontaneous and instinctive, gives no account of itself, and no reason for its existence. We are bid in the New Testament to exercise the first form of love (agapao) towards God, but never the second; while the Father is said to exercise both forms towards his own Son.

"Yea, Lord; thou knowest that I love thee." Christ's regard to his flock is so tender that he will not trust it to any but those that truly love him, and all that are his for his sake. Those that do not truly love Christ will never truly love the souls of men.—Henry.

"He saith unto him, Feed my lambs." Feed them as being my lambs and not thine; seek in them my honor, and not thine own honor; my authority, not thine own; mine, not thine own gain.—Augustine. The Lord Jesus saw what has been confirmed in the experience of the church, that the success of the Gospel among men depended on the care which the ministry would extend to those in early life.—Barnes.

"Feed my sheep." Tend or shepherd my sheep; a different word from the one translated feed in the previous verse. It includes watching, feeding, leading, guarding.

"Peter was grieved." Peter was grieved, because our Lord said unto him the third time, Lovest thou me? But I will not be offended at thy often inculcating the same precept, but rather conclude that I am much concerned therein, and that it is thy pleasure that the nail should be soundly fastened in me, which thou hast knocked in with so many hammers.—Thomas Fuller.

The Object of this Questioning.—(1) To show Peter that Jesus knew his failures, and heartily forgave him. (2) To guard him against his natural self confidence, lest he should again fall. (3) To publicly reinstate him among the disciples, and show to his brethren that he was fully restored. (4) To restore peace and hope within Peter's own soul. (5) To impress upon him that only in deep and earnest love to Jesus could he do his appointed work. (6) To set clearly before him the great work he was to do.

SECRETSOCIETIES CONDEMNED.

BY GREAT MEN IN THE STATE.

George Washington, in a letter written a year before his death: "I preside over no lodge, nor have I been in one more than once or twice during the last thirty years."

Charles Francis Adams: "A more perfect agent for the devising and execution of conspiracies against church and state could scarcely have been conceived."

Thaddeus Stevens: "By Freemasonry, trial by jury is transformed into an engine of despotism and Masonic fraud."

President Millard Fillmore, J. C. Spencer and others: "The Masonic fraternity tramples upon our rights, defeats the administration of justice, and bids defiance to every government which it cannot control."

Chief Justice John Marshall: "The institution of Masonry ought to be abandoned as one capable of much evil and incapable of producing any good which might not be effected by safe and open means."

William Wirt: "I view it as at war with the fundamental principles of the social compact, and a wicked conspiracy against the laws of God and man, that ought to be put down."

John Quincy Adams: "I am prepared to complete the demonstration before God and man, that the Masonic oaths, obligations and penalties cannot by any possibility be reconciled to the laws of morality, of Christianity, or of the land."

Charles Francis Adams: "Every man who takes a Masonic oath forbids himself from divulging any criminal act, unless it might be murder or treason, that may be communicated to him under the seal of fraternal bond, even though such concealment were to prove a burden upon his conscience and a violation of his bounden duty to society and to his God."

Charles Sumner: "I find two powers here in Washington in harmony, and both are antagonistic to our free institutions, and tend to centralization and anarchy—Freemasonry and Slavery; and they must both be destroyed if our country is to be the home of the free, as our ancestors designed it."

Thurlow Weed: "I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the Anti-masonic excitement by a sincere desire, first to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of secret societies."

William H. Ewald: "Before I would place my hand between the hands of other men in a secret lodge, order, class, or council, and, bending on my knee before them, enter into combination with them for any object, personal or political, good or bad, I would pray to God that that hand and that knee might be paralyzed, and that I might become an object of pity and even the mockery of my fellow-men."

Wendell Phillips: "I wish you success most heartily in your efforts to arouse the community to the danger of secret societies. They are a great evil; entirely out of place in a republic, and no patriot should join or uphold them. Considering the great forces which threaten the welfare of the nation in the next thirty years, and how readily and efficiently they can use any secret organizations, such should not be allowed to exist."

George Washington's Farewell Address: "The very idea of the power and the right of the people to establish government presupposes the duty of every individual to obey the established government. All obstructions to the execution of the laws, all combinations and associations, under whatever plausible character, with the real design to direct, control, counteract, or awe the regular deliberation and action of the constituted authorities, are destructive of this fundamental principle, and of fatal tendency."

Daniel Webster: "All secret associations the members of which take upon themselves extraordinary obligations to one another, and are bound together by secret oaths, are naturally sources of jealousy and just alarm to others; are especially unfavorable to harmony and mutual confidence among men living together under popular institutions, and are dangerous to the general cause of civil liberty and just government. Under the influence of this conviction it is my opinion that the future administration of all such oaths and the formation of all such obligations should be prohibited by law."

Edward Everett: "A secret society so widely diffused and connected as this puts a vast power, capable of the most dangerous abuse, into hands irresponsible to the public."

George Washington (to Gov. Trumbull): "Masonry is a benevolent institution, which may be employed for the best or worst purposes."

Richard Rush: Hooker, personifying law, eloquently exclaims, "her seat is the bosom of God, her voice the harmony of the world; everything on earth does her homage, the highest is not beyond her control, the least as claiming her protection." Masonry has oversteered this primordial system. She has de-throned this image of God upon earth. To re-instate it over so insolent a victor, we must have a political organization. There is no other way of assaulting, there is no other hope of vanquishing, there is no other dream of humbling such a foe. It fights with desperation.

Wendell Phillips: "History shows them perverting justice, stopping at no crime to protect and conceal their mummeries; controlling politics for selfish and personal ends, and interfering with great danger in national emergencies. Every good citizen should make war on all secret societies, and give himself no rest until they are forbidden by law and rooted out of existence."

John Hancock: "I am opposed to all secret associations."

James Madison: "From the number and character of those who now support the charges against Masonry, I cannot doubt that it is at least susceptible of abuse, outweighing any disadvantages promised by its patrons."

Berea College History

PP. 87, CLOTH, 40 CENTS.

The establishment of a College for the education of colored children and the white children of the mountaineers in a slave State at a time when the whole country was shaken by the discussion of abolition, was a sublime act of faith in God who "hath made of one blood all nations of men."

This is what REV. JOHN O. FEE did at Berea, Ky., and the friends of reform cannot spend 40 cents better than to send for this

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 4, 1886

"THE KNIGHTS OF LABOR" AND THE W. C. T. U.

"Adelphon Kruptos" is the Greek-letter title of the Knights of Labor. The words mean The concealed Brotherhood; and it was so effectually concealed, that its existence was hardly known to the general public for four years.

We are pained that the late W. C. T. U. meeting at Minneapolis sought occasion to recognize and compliment the Knights of Labor as co-laborers in the work of temperance.

The candidate for initiation, with his left hand on his heart and right hand raised to heaven, promises to conceal the doings of the order "till death." This sets the order outside of the example and against the precepts of Christ. The first symbol, a globe before "the outer veil," proclaims the order cosmopolitan, taking in the world; of course, leaving out Christ. The symbol of "the inner veil is a lance, and signifies defence. What do anarchists propose more than to threaten death in defence of the supposed rights of their organization and members? Does Miss Willard approve of this?

Then the perpetually recurring sign of "Obliteration," (instead of the hand drawn across the throat, as in Masonry), can suggest nothing less than the wiping out, or extermination, of those the order makes its foes, i. e., capitalists and non-union men. Then such a society with secret signs, passwords, and tokens of recognition identifies the order as a secret lodge, in conspiracy against the balance of mankind. Such are the methods of brigands, counterfeiters, harlots and thieves. And such methods have been invented and chosen by the criminal classes because they suit the purposes of sin. The despotism, also, of the order is as absolute under irresponsible masters as that of popery, Jesuitism, or absolute monarchy. The name of the order is a fiction, but its despotism is real. And no matter how worthy the ends sought or the present members of such an order;—if angels adopt methods suited to devils, they will soon become fiends. Mr. Ezra A. Cook, the well-known and respected publisher of anti-secret literature, has just given the history and secret ritual of this new and wide-spread order in a little book of fifty-six pages. It is timely, and will be read by thousands. It is to be had of Mr. Cook at 13 Wabash Ave., or of the National Christian Association.

The whole secret lodge system is a system of floating islands: some sinking; new ones rising, but all constructed after one general model. The mysteries of Eleusis, which Paul proscribed, then filled almost the whole known world, and the Knights of Labor resemble them in the rapidity of their spread; and not until the churches of Christ enlighten the masses which are being swindled by new forms of this ancient error, will the disintegration of the churches be reversed, the masses come back to the churches, and deliverance come.

The W. C. T. U. organ, the Union Signal, has done bravely in publishing the open letter of Miss Flagg; but Miss Willard is mistaken in hoping to conciliate and avoid collision with the Knights of Labor, because Powderly talks temperance, and his officers have promised to quit whisky two years. Powderly and his Knights worship the "Image of the Beast," and Miss Willard honors his "mark" by recognition without reproof.

POSTPONE FOR PROHIBITION.

Why not postpone the grapple with the lodge till the saloon is disposed of?

Because the lodge shelters the saloon. If Lincoln, Chase and Seward in the Cabinet, and Stevens in Congress, C. F. Adams and Thurlow Weed in England, and Grant in the army had not been Anti-masons, slavery would not have fallen, and the Union would have been fatally sunk. Putting our war-government in anti-lodge hands was a marvelous act of God.

"If we help build up the Prohibition party with Masons in it, those Masons will rule it. They never work with a party which they cannot control. And if we build up another lodge-ruled party, we must then begin to tear down our own work. We shall have another Masonic party to grapple with." The above are the sound words of Rev. C. C. Foote of Detroit.

Hon. Gideon T. Stewart, of Ohio, wrote us at Washington, urging the American party to send delegates to Prohibition conventions, with the understanding that all nominees for office by the united parties should be, or, on their nomination, should become clear of secret lodges. We assented at once to Mr. Stewart's proposition, but insisted that the agreement must be an open one, not secret. The absurdity of a political party receiving delegates from a secret lodge, which is estopped by its constitution from receiving delegates from open bodies is obvious. Nor would the secret temperance lodges unite with us on the plan proposed by Mr. Stewart, and consent to join with us on the ground of being barred from nominations while members of the lodges. They would sooner give up their lodges altogether. Indeed, we see no way but to give up secret lodges as offensive to Christ.

Dr. Funk, of the Voice, N. Y., is opposed to secret societies, but thinks the Prohibition party should not be committed to the religion work of their extermination; but he thinks our political action should exclude secret societies as hostile to the nature of American politics. Perhaps something of that kind might be done, so as not to compel the Prohibition party to wage open war on the temperance secret orders. But something open and fair should be done, and that soon. Or else the AMERICAN PARTY should begin now to prepare for a national convention next June, to nominate its own ticket, and vote for it, as the Birney men did in 1840-44. We oppose a power which is "earthly, sensual and devilish." Secretary Stoddard saw Masons and women members of the Eastern Star lodge playing cards together on the cars on their way to their respective annual meetings at Chicago; and the women, when asked if they were Masons, answered, "Yes." These lodge members, male and female, play cards together on their way to Chicago, and dance together after they get there. Such people cannot be trusted as Prohibitionists, and the sooner their lodges are dropped the better for them and the country. The W. C. T. U. have endorsed the Prohibition party 253 to 38. It is amazing that they have nothing to say concerning these secret lodge women who play cards and dance with strange men,—women who leave their homes for a week together, under bonds, not to give the public or their families any account of their doings. If Miss Willard, as she says, dislikes secret societies and has no use for them, which is doubtless true, it is a pity Miss Flagg's proposition could not be accepted, and the White Ribbon army oppose the idolatries and debaucheries of the lodge.

THE CONGREGATIONAL COUNCIL.

WHAT IT SHOULD HAVE DONE.

Our railroads would run four times around the globe if in a right line. They are operated by an army of young men, mostly from Christian families, who can be trusted to man the locomotive and the brakes. These young men have no Sabbath. The writer was in an interesting revival thirty miles north of Cincinnati, and the entire neighborhood being Presbyterian, the young people almost all came out for Christ. One fine looking young man looked sad and held back. I said, "James, why don't you come?"

"It don't suit my business," said he. "I run coal boats for Mr. Shrophire, and if I should tie up and keep the Sabbath he would discharge me Monday morning."

This army of railroad young men, who bring the fruits of the world and comforts of life to our tables through the broken law of God, are on the down grade to heathenism; for that country, or people, or family, which has no Sabbath is heathen, between the upper and nether millstones of despotism and their vices.

The Council appointed a committee to report on Mormonism. That was well. If they had appointed a commissioner to lay before the churches the statistics of Sabbath-breaking and our home-Mormonism, called the lodge; and to show that six days running, to go and return, would carry all our travel and in-land commerce, better, safer, and more economically, than to run seven days, and leave the trains at the odd end of the route; and, above all, to report the morals of the employers of the young men, who, in the off days of travel, inhabit doggery taverns, and learn "the filthy conversation of the wicked;" if, instead of cracking jokes on the post-mortem rationalism of Andover, the Council had appointed a committee on the organized deism and Unitarianism of the lodges which out-number Andover thousands to one, the reports of such committees would have crammed the largest church, and filled the street in front of it.

REV. ROBERT LOGGAN, in the Cynosure, October 21, page 2d, has shown that Masonry, like Mormonism, has provided in its constitution for a class of Danites or avengers of a high degree, whose business is to enforce Masonic penalties in brutality and blood. Please turn to the paper of the above date and page, and read carefully Mr. Loggan's important article. Masonry and popery are one system. Both refrain from killing their heretics when they will lose by it; yet they murder them where they have power.

A FOURTH THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY (Lutheran) has by its representatives endorsed and called for the proposed "congress" by its representative men. The names will all soon be published, and the congress pushed. It is a great and mighty thing, and the lodge-wasp will be singing and stinging soon. Let us remember Christ's "prayer and fasting," the only effectual way of dealing with demons.

—Pres. H. H. George, of Geneva College, writes to Secretary Stoddard very cordially accepting an invitation to attend the Southern convention if his college duties permit. He will arrange, if possible, not only to attend but address the meeting.

—The Baptist Advocate, of New Orleans, edited by Revs. S. T. Clanton and A. S. Jackson, contains an interesting report of the National Missionary meeting, held lately in the Tabernacle Baptist church (Bro. Countee's), Memphis.

—The National Woman's Christian Temperance Union has planted an oak tree over the grave of Dr. Benjamin Rush at Philadelphia and erected there a memorial tablet. This just recognition of a noble man, physician, philanthropist, and the father of the temperance movement in this country, should remind us that he also gave to the world the statesman, Richard Rush, whose writings against the lodge were among the ablest documents of the Morgan movement.

—Just before election day the labor lodges of this city issued a sheet giving what purports to be the facts respecting their ticket. They say that their nominating convention was composed of delegates from 122 Knight of Labor lodges and 74 trade societies. Their nominees for State officers are both members of the grange and Knights of Labor, and the entire list of thirty-nine candidates, except seven, are members of some lodge, generally Knights of Labor. It is published that this order does not go into politics!

—The Cynosure has often had occasion to speak of Bro. H. L. Hastings, and his remarkable work in Boston, as editor of the Christian, lecturer, evangelist, author and publisher. The Christian is one of the best, if not the very best paper given to purely religious and devotional instruction with which we are acquainted; and it is an evidence that this belief is shared by many, that it has had during the past twenty years a larger circulation than any other religious monthly in New England. It would be good news for the kingdom of Christ to hear that it visited every family in the land. Send for it to Boston or to this office.

—The death of William K. Guild, one of the best known citizens of Wheaton, last week, is lamented by a large circle of relatives and friends in DuPage and Kane counties in this State. Bro. Guild was a church member from the age of ten, and his efforts to extend the knowledge of Christ through the church and Sabbath-school agencies continued from that early age till his death. He was also an earnest promoter of Christian reforms against slavery, intemperance, and the lodge. His funeral was attended by a large concourse in the College chapel at Wheaton, pastor Chittenden preaching the sermon, followed by a brief address by Pres. C. A. Blanchard.

—The Free Methodist General Conference just adjourned, resolved on some radical and important changes in the business of publication. Their organ, begun by Mr. Mackey in New York, passed from one to another, until Bro. Thomas B. Arnold has finally sold his interest as publisher and proprietor to the Conference for $8,000. He will be continued as publishing agent on a salary, and Rev. B. T. Roberts of North Chili, New York, and Rev. S. B. T. Chesbro of western New York were elected editors. Bro. Roberts has published for many years the Earnest Christian monthly, and is therefore familiar with editorial work, and his abilities are everywhere recognized. The Free Methodist, under the charge of Bro. Travis for two years has been growing constantly, as an able and influential paper, and we hope that he will find some position where his excellent judgment and abilities as a Christian worker will find a useful field.

Twelve saloon-keepers, of Shelbyville, Ill., have been indicted for selling liquors to habitual drunkards.

THE SOUTH KEEPS NOT BACK.

BRO. HINMAN AT TOUGALOO, STRAIGHT AND LELAND UNIVERSITIES; NEW IBERIA, TEXAS; AND BEFORE THE BAPTIST PASTORS OF NEW ORLEANS.

WESSON, Miss.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—By invitation of the students of Tougaloo University I lectured in the College chapel on Masonry and kindred societies, Oct. 15, in which by request I illustrated the Entered Apprentice degree. The meeting was very satisfactory to myself and to the hearers with a single exception—a white Odd-fellow, who was too full of whisky to be well pleased with any appeal to moral principles. It was also to be regretted that the acting principal (not Pres. Pope) should have taken it for granted that ladies were not invited, thereby diminishing by one half the attendance. I remained there over the Sabbath, preached, and was kindly taken to the depot and came away impressed with the great and good work which this and similar schools are doing.

A freight train brought me to Wesson on the southern border of Copiah county and one of the few manufacturing towns of the State. A large establishment for the manufacture of both woolen and cotton goods employs about nine hundred operatives, all of whom are white, except seven or eight who work outside the building. The town more closely resembles a New England village than any place I have seen in the State. This is one of the prohibition counties, and the law in this, and in the adjoining town of Beauregard, is fairly enforced. Of the 280 votes cast in this place all but two, one white and one colored, were for prohibition. The entire vote of the county was 2,226, of which 747 were wet, 1,479 dry—a majority of more than two to one. The result was largely due to the efforts of Rev. J. F. Sisson, pastor of the A. M. E. church, an Anglo-American, who is devoting himself to the Christian culture of his Africo-American brethren. He received me most kindly and provided me entertainment in the family of colored Christians where he boards; a family that I have found intelligent, cultured and Christian, as well as truly hospitable. I have arranged to address the people of the A. M. E. church on Wednesday, the 27th, and it is probable that I shall be replied to by the Masonic Grand Lecturer of the State. I expect to go from here to New Orleans and return for this meeting. Yours for the Lord,

NEW IBERIA, LA., OCT. 22.—I wrote last from Wesson, Miss., which is on the southern border of what has been called "Bloody Copiah," but which, under prohibition, is one of the most orderly of counties. Starting at 3:30 A. M. of the 20th, the daylight found us on the border of the great cypress swamps of Louisiana, which, with some intermission, cover the country to the border of New Orleans. Here I saw the first fields of sugar cane, and the palmettos grew larger. As we skirted along the border of Lake Pontchartrain, it was abundantly evident that the great storm that drove the waters into Lake Sabine, destroying the whole town of Sabine Pass and more than one hundred lives, was not without its power here. The whole country showed marks of recent overflow.

We reached the city at 8:30 A. M., and I went direct to Straight University where I was most hospitably entertained by Pres. R. C. Hitchcock. After calling on Rev. H. C. Green, a Baptist pastor who has "no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reproves them;" on Bro. F. J. Davidson, a preacher of righteousness, who lectures and publishes tracts against the lodge; and on Rev. Jackson, pastor of Commons Street Baptist church, who has "renounced the hidden things of dishonesty," all of whom received me as a brother beloved. I went out to Leland University, near the Exposition grounds, and called on Pres. Stone, who is an old-time Anti-mason. I arranged to give my first lecture to the students of that institution Thursday at 1:30 P. M. I then went back to Straight University and spent the night.

Next morning I met the more than 350 students and teachers at their morning exercise, and by request addressed them for twenty-five minutes on the lodge question. I had an attentive hearing and think a good impression was made, though it is probable that a majority are members of some of the orders.

From thence I went to Leland, where I met the assembled students and teachers—not forgetting Miss J. P. Moore, who is a veteran philanthropist and an earnest co-worker in this reform—and spoke forty minutes. There is doubtless more sympathy with the principles of our reform among the students and teachers of Leland than of Straight University, but Leland is the younger and smaller school.

At 7:30 P. M. I left New Orleans on the Morgan railroad for this place, which is due west of New Orleans 125 miles, and in the heart of the cane-growing region. We came by the way of Morgan City, which must ere long rival New Orleans as a commercial depot, as it is on the waters of the Gulf. This is the seat of Iberia Parish, and a town of 4,000 inhabitants. Its population is largely French and Catholic. There are but two white Protestant churches, the Protestant Episcopal and the M. E. South. It is on Bayou Teche, which is navigable for steamers. The country is very level and quite fertile. Live oaks abound, and are magnificent. Three newspapers are published here, some partly in French. Formerly they raised many oranges here, and there are trees as large as I ever saw, but the cold of last winter killed most of them, and not an orange can be seen.

There is a large colored population who are more prosperous than the average of their race in the South. Rev. Byron Gunner, a graduate of Taladega College, Ala., is pastor of a flourishing Congregational church. It is by his invitation I am here, and I expect to address his people twice on the Sabbath; after which I am expected in New Orleans to attend the ministers' meeting of the colored Baptists in Rev. Jackson's church, and speak half an hour on the lodge question, and then go north. No where is the field riper for the harvest of our reform than here in Southern Louisiana. I only regret that my time is so short here.

STRAIGHT UNIVERSITY, NEW ORLEANS, OCTOBER 26, 1886.—The world moves. On my first visit to this city in December of 1880, I found just one man who expressed sympathy with my work. One other subscriber to the Cynosure was a Mason, who took the paper because he wanted to oppose its teachings. No man offered me any hospitality; I found it impossible to get a hearing, and after a day or two I left for Mobile. A year later things were but little better. I visited Straight and Leland Universities, and made one address at Straight. I also preached one sermon in a colored church, but I did not find one pastor who favored my work, nor one person who would give me food or rest except for an equivalent. Now I find a pleasant home here, and a hearty welcome to the studies and homes of several pastors and laymen, and in a meeting of ministers my strongest words of condemnation of the lodge system were heartily endorsed by those who, until a few months since, were the most obsequious defenders of its workings; and, moreover, I learn that the leaven of anti-secrecy has been spreading all over this region.

I preached and lectured last Sabbath in the Congregational church at New Iberia, 125 miles west of here, and one of the most important places in Southern Louisiana. Besides the sugar cane and rice that are produced in that part of the State, there is in that vicinity an immense salt mine, where pure salt is blasted from the solid mass and crushed for the market. I do not know that there is a similar mine in America.

Rev. B. Gunner of that city is earnestly devoted to our reform, and has the sympathy of about all of his congregation. I left there at 3 A. M. on Monday, and reached here at 7:30, and at 10 o'clock went to the Commons Street Baptist church, where I met most of the colored Baptist ministers of the city. After they had finished their regular work I was invited to address them on secret societies, which I did for more than three-quarters of an hour. I noticed that the brethren would take nothing for granted, but had their Bibles and searched out every passage I quoted, and seemed most deeply interested with the relations of the lodge system to the Christian faith.

After I had done, the pastor, Rev. J. C. Jackson, said we would now have an enquirer's meeting. He thought there were some penitents who wanted to confess their sins. He had been a zealous Mason, and the Grand Master of the State was a member of his church; but he had renounced them forever. Their foolish and wicked secrets he could not conceal if he would, and he regarded these orders as the enemies of the church. Other brethren, some of whom had been long in the ministry, said they had always opposed secret societies and were glad of instruction. One pastor said he was a Mason. He had joined the order for his own sake, and that he might do good to others. He had all along had doubts about it, but was now quite clear. He renounced it forever. Several brethren desired that I might address their congregations as soon as practicable. The entire meeting lasted three hours.

Through the efforts of Bro. F. J. Davidson, an enthusiastic Christian worker, an appointment was made for me to lecture in St. Mark's Baptist church at night. At 7 P. M. I met a fair congregation, which grew to be quite large. I spoke over an hour and had the hearty endorsement of the pastor, Rev. W. W. Davis, and some of his members. Most of them belong to the societies, and thought it was "a hard saying." Nevertheless I had fair attention. It is now believed that there are but four adhering Masons among the colored Baptist ministers of this State. Certainly there is most hopeful progress. I propose to go from here to Mobile, Ala., and thence north.

H. H. HINMAN.

PRESS COMMENT.

Mormons continue to import the raw material for making of criminals. Three hundred immigrants disembarked at Philadelphia yesterday under the charge of Mormon missionaries. They certainly obeyed pretty closely the scriptural injunction, for they had neither purse nor scrip nor two coats, many of them. The possessions in cash amounted to an average of about sixty cents each. These people will probably hear nothing about the doctrine of polygamy until they reach Utah and find themselves strangers in a strange land, penniless and dependent upon the Mormon church for subsistence, and compelled to subscribe to any creed it may force upon them. It is about time such a farce was interrupted vigorously. These men should have been sent back as pauper laborers at the expense of the Mormon church.—Daily Voice.

The arrogance of secretism is cropping out in the Assembly of Knights of Labor at Richmond, Va. It has been proposed to establish a Congress of Knights, similar to the National Congress, to sit at Washington during the sessions of Congress, as a censor, which shall take special charge of all legislation proposed and pass upon it, before Congress takes action. Their design is to influence Congress in its action. We have not noticed that the measure was adopted, but the fact that it was seriously entertained its significant of the aims of the order to rule the nation. Verily the signs of the times are similar to those that preceded the French Revolution, when secret factions met, and blood flowed in like water, as a result.—Christian Instructor.

A devoted United Presbyterian pastor of Viola, Ill., is about to resign his charge. Same old story, he preaches too much prohibition and does not stand up for the old party. He makes too much fuss about such trifles as fifteen dollars spent for liquor for every one that is spent for education, and two hundred and seventy dollars spent for liquor for every one spent for religion, and 100,000 immortal souls annually destroyed by rum. Poor preacher! he thinks these are matters of such importance that they ought to be noticed by the Republican party, and because it does not notice them, he refuses to support it. Poor man! Is it any wonder that several of his good elders and deacons have refused to pay him anything for two years, trying the old game of starving him out. O God, is there anything but a physical or social earthquake that will wake up such elders and deacons!—Rev. M. A. Gault, in Western Crank.

The Knights of Labor have not shown, in their Richmond Convention, that harmony and brotherly feeling that is so necessary to the accomplishment of their aims. Prominent members of the order are already prophesying its downfall, and even the time of its demise has been fixed by several. The cause of the trouble is rather strange, too, when we consider the character of the organization. They have been crying out against the "tyrants" and "robbers," who live in ease at the expense of the laboring man, and now they find that they have specimens of this class in their own order and among their own leaders. They find that becoming a Knight of Labor does not alter the nature of a man, and that laborers themselves are at heart not very different from capitalists. The greed for money and influence affects all classes and laboring men are now supporting a coterie of despots in their midst, who are giving them no return for their money and their allegiance.—Advance.

THE HOME.

A RETURN.

The charm of the golden trees,
The glow of the autumn day,
And the garden walks with their murr'ring bees,
Soothe all my cares away.

My soul is sick of the strife
Where pulses never are stilled;
But here, in the rest of a simple life,
God's promise is fulfilled.

When the bramble bears its fruit,
And mists creep over the lea,
And soft as the sound of a distant flute,
The sheep-bells' chime to me.

When the bracken turns to gold,
And down in the winding lane
A little bird sings me the songs of old,
Till youth comes back again;

Then trouble and pain depart,
And comfort and peace draw near,
And all the foes of a timorous heart
Like phantoms disappear.

And the autumn lands grow fair
With a light that seems divine;
And the treasures I left in childhood there,
Once more are wholly mine.

THE CUT FINGER.

We sometimes learn important lessons from strange teachers. I cut one of my fingers the other day. It was a ragged and painful wound. It sent a thrill through the network of nerves to every part of the body. There was aching in the head as well as in the hand. Even the toes seemed to twitch in sympathy. As I sat, faint from the loss of blood, and watched the binding of the wound, I thought of Paul's beautiful figure of the church as the body of Christ. "And whether one member suffer all the members suffer with it." There is a sympathy that we cannot control. United as we are in even nominal fellowship, any reproach which any Christian brings upon himself he brings upon us all. But we should have such mutual love that we would feel not merely humiliated, when a brother or a sister falls into sin, but sympathize promptly in whatever interests any one who is a member with us of the mystical body of our Lord. Oh, if the church was knit together as the parts of my body are, and if the nerves ran everywhere, so that to touch one would awaken all, what a blessed brotherhood it would be! This is the ideal church. And just so far as we have departed from it we have shorn it of its pristine power. If we were all of "one accord" as the converts were after the day of Pentecost, the Lord would add to the church daily such as should be saved.

I learned from that cut finger the use of pain. It was bad enough to have a member mutilated and rendered useless for a time. Why must I suffer too? Because the suffering would compel me to attend to the wound, and would help me to be more careful in the future. So disease brings pain to warn us of its ravages. If there were no pain connected with the abuse of our bodies, how careless we would become! I have read of a doctor in Chicago who applied cocaine to the limbs of his children and then cut and hacked them to prove the power of the anesthetic. He could not have done that, crazy though he was, if the children had screamed with pain. Suffering would have been their safeguard. And so it is in regard to sin. It is well for us that it brings sorrow, and brings it speedily. That sense of shame is the shadow of the great and terrible future thrown forward to warn us. If we could sin on and not suffer, if we were simply gathering up condemnation and anguish for the future, there would be little hope of awakening men. But now we can appeal to their present feelings of sadness and remorse. We can show them that they are wrong because they are unhappy. I am told that there is a new class of diseases, the result, largely, of sedentary habits and fast living, that are exceedingly insidious. They seize upon their victims with a death grip, and yet he knows it not. They seize as it were with gloved hands, but with a hold that nothing can relax. Such diseases are terrible. But there are modern and fashionable kinds of sin just like them. They are so soft and velvety in their approach that the victim is bound hand and foot before he is aware of his danger. Conscience is chloroformed. Oh, save us from this drugging of the soul into insensibility! Let us call things by their right names. Let us cultivate the faithful, old-fashioned conscience. Let us be glad that pain follows sin, and learn from it to shun that blackness of darkness of which it warns us.

But I learned also from that cut finger how promptly and how wonderfully God saves us from our sins. As soon as the wound was bound up the remedial agencies began their work. Microscopists tell us that all through our bodies there are minute particles of living matter. They call them bioplasm, I believe. These particles, too small for our eyes to see, are really looms that weave tissue, getting their warp and woof from the blood. If, by accident or design, any part of the body is cut away, they go to work at once to replace it. They cannot make a new limb, but they can heal a wound. They cannot restore life, but they can patch the body and keep it in pretty good condition as long as it is alive. As I felt the itching and the throbbing in that wound, which assured me that the little looms were all busy, I could not but adore the goodness of God; and I could not but believe that since he takes such an interest in the healing of our bodies, he will surely heal our souls if we will let him. Some would-be-wise men sneer at the revelation of a remedial system in the Bible. They say law is inexorable. Whoever sins must bear the full penalty of his sin. But it is not so in the case of my finger. I was careless; I needed not to cut myself, but I did. Now, the full penalty of that abuse of my body would have been a gaping wound, a sore and useless finger, the rest of my life; but God provided for the contingency. He did not punish me as my folly deserved. He gives me, through the wondrous working of the bioplasm, a finger as good as before, with only a scar upon it to remind me of my carelessness and of his mercy. I find great comfort in this analogy. No doctor could have healed my cut finger; he could only bind it up, so that the tiny weavers should not be hindered in their work. God alone could heal it, and he did. And so he has moral forces waiting to restore our souls. If we go to him and put our broken and contrite hearts into his hands, he will work in us both to will and to do of his good pleasure. He will create in us new hearts and renew right spirits within us.—Interior.

REST IN THE LORD.

"The wicked are like the troubled sea, which cannot rest." Tossed and beaten by storms of passion, restless as the heaving tides, God's peace is unknown to them. They have no inward rest, and they have no resting-place where their soul can find refuge. Like Noah's dove, they "flit between rough seas and stormy skies." To mortals thus laboring and heavy laden, Christ sends the gracious invitation, "Come unto me, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you and learn of me, and ye shall find rest to your souls."

The restless cannot rest, wherever they are; and the faint and weary fail to rest, because they have no resting-place. Christ gives an inward rest, a rest to the soul, and he also affords a resting-place where heart and flesh may find repose.

Rest in the Lord. Rest in his love, which satisfies the deepest yearnings of the human heart; rest in his care, which watches over the lowliest, and notes the sparrow's fall; rest in his providence, which never fails, and which is over all his works; rest in his promises, which are exceeding great and precious, and which cover the needs of his trusting children in every state and condition in life. O weary, wayworn, burdened, tempted, despondent, troubled soul, there is rest for you. Go to him who giveth rest. "Rest in the Lord, and wait patiently for him." "Return unto thy rest, O my soul, for the Lord hath dealt bountifully with thee." And beyond the blessedness of this present rest of faith, and hope, and love, "there remaineth a rest for the people of God." Blessed are they who shall gain that Sabbath and share in its sweet repose.—Armory.

AN EVEN BALANCE.

A minister of the Gospel was once deliberating regarding a change in his field of labor. The question was whether he should remain where he was, in a comfortable position, or whether he should leave the place where he was preaching and go away, trusting in the Lord, and proclaim the glad tidings of salvation in the regions beyond. He was unsettled as to the right course, and consulted his friend, the tailor, who put the case somewhat in this way:

"If, on weighing the matter, you cannot decide what the path of duty is, it must be because there is something in one side of the scales that ought not to be there. You take that out and it will be easy to decide the matter."

The minister promptly accepted the suggestion, and admitted that there was something in the scales; the question of salary was there, and it was this that made him undecided. When that matter was laid aside, he found it very easy to make up his mind as to the path of duty.

It is very important that we weigh our motives in an even balance. Self must stand aside; and if we seek to serve the Lord, we must be willing to endure trials, privations and losses, if we may but win Christ and be found of him in peace.

Let us weigh our acts in an even balance. Let self-will, and pride, and self-interest stand aside, while we seek to stand in the counsel of God, and walk in his commandments, laboring to work his work, and do his will. We cannot well do much for the Lord until we abandon our own desires and yield ourselves servants to obey that One Master who hath bought us with his blood.—Common People.

ALL THE GOOD WE CAN.

If the sunshine never ead,
Into hovels dark and sad,
If its glories never shone
Save where everything was glad,
If it scattered not its beams
Over hearts by sorrow chilled,
Would the sunshine do His will?
Would its mission be fulfilled?

If the roses never bloomed
Save for gladsome eyes alone,
If their beauty and their grace
For the weary never shone,
If they never brought a smile
To the wayside passer-by,
Would the roses do their task
While the hours of summer fly?

If the birds sang their songs
Far from every listening ear,
If they poured them not abroad
All the earth to glad and cheer,
Would the birds' work be done
Ere the autumn breezes call,
Ere the gold and crimson leaves
O'er the grave of summer fall?

If the sunshine of our smiles
We have scattered not afar,
If our roses—kindly deeds—
Bloom not where the lowly are,
If our words of hope and joy
Never fall to bless and cheer,
Have we done our Maker's will?
Have we wrought our mission here?

SERMON ON PLAY.

Play is neither idleness nor folly. It is one of the many good things which have come into our life from heaven. It is a gift from God. It is one of his wonderful works. When he made the beautiful earth and the sky, and the body and soul of man, he made the happy play of childhood. It is a part of your life as truly as prayer is, as truly as the soul itself is. And it is a part of the life of children all the world over. If it were possible to journey with the sun-light, and see all that it sees, and go round and round the globe with it, we should everywhere see children at play.

Now, the first thing I want you to see is that this playing of your boys and girls in the streets, or anywhere else, is a pleasure to God. He is a God so kind and loving that he delights in everything innocent that is a delight to you. Just as he delights in the songs of birds and in the color and fragrance of flowers, he delights in the play of childhood. It was because he was thinking of it as a pleasure that he sent Zechariah to tell the builders of Jerusalem the good news that children should be playing in the streets.

I know a poet who made a song on the happiness of poor children at their first day of play in the spring. All the winter they were shut up in their homes for want of shoes. But now the winter was past, and sun shining and air warm. And "the bairnies," barefoot but happy, were out on the pavement again."

"Their wee shoeless feet have forgotten their pain,
As they walk in the sun on the pavement again."
Something like this must be the joy of God as he looks down on the same sight.

God has made play a part of your life, because he wants you to be strong. He has work waiting in the years to come for every boy and girl on the earth. And although it is not all the same kind of work, all of it is work which will want strength for the doing. Therefore he will not have you always at tasks. He has divided the time for tasks with the time for play. He will have you out in the open air. By your games he will have your body in endless motion. You shall run and not be weary. You shall leap, and dance, and race, and climb, so that every part of you may be made strong for the work that lies before you in life.

For another thing God wants you to have a happy gateway into life. Nobody can tell beforehand whether your after-life will be happy. In games you are joined together, just as we who are old are in our toils. The playground is a little world. You cannot have any pleasure in any of its games, unless you try to have the others playing with you as happy as yourself. To be unkind, unjust, unfair, or ungenerous in a game is to spoil it and bring it to an end. Surely this a new, rich addition to our knowledge of God, when we discover that the same kind Father, who gave his Son to die for us, that he might deliver us from sin and death, made the joy and play of boys and girls in the streets and in the house. May you carry something of the joy of it all through life with you, and may you remember that God has been so good to you, that he has set your life between two worlds of joy—the world of your happy childhood, and the world that awaits you in heaven.—Rev. Alexander Macleod, D. D.

THE TRUTHFUL PIONEER BOY.

Nearly sixty years ago a gaunt, awkward boy of sixteen looked in at the open door of a small log cabin on the outer edge of our Western frontiers, and pleasantly inquired, "Any chores you wish done, mother? I came home early on purpose this evening; for I want to begin that job of chopping to-morrow, and I shall want to take an early start."

"You are a good son, Abra'm, to think of me," replied the woman proudly, turning at the sound of his voice.

"I'm sure I know of no one who has a better right to be in my thoughts," the boy returned.

The woman smiled upon him pleasantly, and then handed him a couple of buckets, saying, "If you are a mind to give me a lift, you may fill the tubs with water from the spring, as to-morrow will be washing day; and then, if you'll just see where the cow has strayed, and bring her in and milk her, I am sure I would be much obliged."

"I'll have her pailed in good time, mother, never fear. Come, Sallie, and ride down to the spring," he continued, perching his little seven-year-old step-sister on his broad shoulders.

I am persuaded that very few of my young friends ever looked upon such an ungainly specimen of humanity as was this tall, awkward prairie boy, who went striding to the spring, chatting merrily with his little sister, who declared that he was far better than real brothers, who were always teasing their sisters.

I am sure the tired woman who watched him from the cabin door thought him very beautiful in spite of his homely features and uncouth ways.

"Come, Sallie," called her mother just as the little girl mounted her brother's shoulders for a fine race through the tall grass in search of the cow. The child, not wishing to be cheated out of the sport, showed no disposition to obey, until her brother placed her on the ground, saying, "Mother called, Sallie; run and see what she wants."

The little girl hung her head, but obeyed her brother without questioning.

"God bless the boy! He could not be any better to me if he were my own. I do not know how I could get along without him."

"Without him! I don't know as you need worry about that, mother," replied her husband. "Abra'm will not leave us for many a day."

"I hope he will think it best to make his home with us; but take my word for it, that boy will not be shut in by hewn logs much longer. You will be proud of him yet, father."

"I am in no way ashamed of him now," the old man returned. "May-hap he will make a place for himself in the world yet, for he takes to book larnin' like a fish to water."

"You will hear from him if you live long enough, father, never fear," the woman responded, with an emphatic nod of her head.

Long before the sun was up the boy had completed his work in and around the cabin. Sallie was anxious to go with him to the woods, but her mother objected, and he set out alone. With his ax slung over his shoulder, he made long strides over the trodden path, whistling merrily as he went.

When over a mile from home he was startled by a little figure springing from a wayside thicket, with, "I beat you, Abra'm;" but the laugh turned into a piteous cry, for the little girl struck the ax and cut a gash just above her ankle.

"Sallie, how came you here when mother told you to remain at home?" inquired her brother, as he tried to stop the flow of blood by applying plaitain leaves. After he had partially succeeded, he tore the sleeve from the coarse white shirt he wore, and bandaged the injured limb as gently as her mother would have done.

"There now, Sis! Tell me how you got here?" And the girl told how she cut across lots in order to frighten him.

"You frightened yourself much worse than you did me," he said with a smile; "but the saddest thing about it is you disobeyed your mother."

"You won't tell, Abra'm?" sobbed the child.

"No; you must tell her all about it yourself. First tell the truth, no matter what happens," he said, as he lifted her in his great, strong arms and walked rapidly home. Placing her on the doorstep, he whispered, "Now hop in and tell her the truth. Better be whipped than tell a lie. Now, good-bye; I must be off, for the morning is running to waste."

Sallie did tell the truth, and received her mother's forgiveness; nor did she ever forget the two lessons—those of obedience and truthfulness—that her brother tried to teach her that bright autumn morning. I need not tell that honest Abraham Lincoln preserved his truthfulness and integrity even in the most trying hours of our country's experience, for a boy of his sterling principles may always be relied upon. Always tell the truth, no matter what may happen.—Christian Standard.

TEMPERANCE.

DRAM-DRINKING.

The Osage City Free Press, in Kansas, has prepared a table which is interesting as an illustration of the various pretexts under which liquor is sold in a State where the law is very stringent, and of the extraordinary zeal and diligence with which the prohibitory movement is prosecuted. The Kansas law makes the buyer of liquor the judge of its necessity, and whatever may be his plea, there is no one legally authorized to prevent the sale when he has stated the cause for which he wishes the liquor. The Free Press confines its inquiry to the month of June, 1886. The population of Osage county is 25,839, and there are nineteen druggists in the county authorized to sell liquor. They reported 2,812 sales of liquor during the month. The lowest number made by any one druggist was 23, and the highest number was 516. There were 315 different purposes declared, ranging from 1 for "whisky broth for congestion of the brain," and 1 for "spinal trouble," and 1 for "lame back," and many other ones, up to 270 for "indigestion," and 257 for "billiousness."

As to liquors preferred, there were 2,154 bottles and 788 quarts of beer sold, 622 pints and 244 ounces of whisky, and 388 pints and 78 ounces of alcohol. There were but 15 pints and 12 ounces of wine, 2½ ounces of sherry wine, 20 ounces and 10½ pints of port-wine, 1 pint of Holland gin, 31 pints and 6 ounces of common gin, 51 pints and 45 ounces of brandy. The greater number of alleged diseases and troubles for which liquor was sold are those for which no intelligent physician prescribes liquor, and they are obviously merely excuses for obtaining a drink. In some States where prohibitory or restrictive liquor laws have been passed there are social clubs established, with a liberal admission fee, and liquor is furnished free to the members. The "striped pig" appeared with the first restrictive law, and the progeny of that pig is multi-form. But evasions of the law, however ingenious, do not prove that restrictive laws are useless. It is a common sneer that men cannot be made virtuous by an act of Congress. But a stigma can be thrown upon a traffic by law combined with public opinion, and this is the effect of the restrictive liquor laws. The consequences of such a stigma are great and valuable. To make dram-drinking difficult and discreditable is to save many a youth from drunkenness and disgrace.

It is this practical benefit, not virtue by act of Congress, which a stringent restrictive law promotes. It deprives dram-drinking of all its ease and glamour, and it is because of the actual and important effect of such laws upon the traffic that the liquor interest has entered politics, and seeks to control parties for its own ends. Here it is a common enemy. Its object is not Republican or Democratic, but to use both Republican and Democratic votes to protect itself and increase its power. The Legislature may elect either a Republican or a Democratic Senator, and the saloon will not care. But it does care that the same Legislature should not pass laws unfriendly to what Mr. Shook holds to be the just rights of the saloon. The overthrow of this malign power is a public duty, whatever may be a man's view of prohibition. The present agitation will be undoubtedly of great public service, and in many districts it will certainly amaze politicians who neglect it as the wild whim of foolish fanatics.—Harper's Weekly.

ONE STEP FORWARD AND TWO BACKWARD.

The anti-saloon Republicans, who are urging their party to take a courageous stand on the question, Shall the dramshops be outlawed or authorized? and who are urging Prohibitionists to vote for the old party because they think it is going to take up the question some time in the sweet by-and-by, will do well to ponder over a few facts.

1. In Chicago where the National Anti-Saloon Republican Conference met last month, there are to-day, running as candidates on the Republican ticket, two liquor dealers. So far from being the anti-saloon party in the great metropolis of the West, it appears that the Republican party has taken a more decided stand for the saloons than any other party. The Chicago Tribune (Rep.) says Sept. 29:

"The action of the Democratic and Labor county conventions in nominating tickets from which saloon keepers were rigidly excluded puts the Republican party in a peculiar and embarrassing position, since that part of its ticket which was nominated in a hurry, when the delegates were tired, forms a rather undesirable finish to it. It is a legitimate inquiry whether the Republicans care to stand before the community as the special defenders and representatives of the saloon keeping-interest. The Labor Convention not only put no saloon-keepers on its ticket, but it seriously considered a resolution that the party should select no saloon-keeper for any office, and that none of its meetings should be held in any saloon. This was not adopted, but it evidently reflected the views of a large number of delegates. So it appears to have come to pass that the Republican organization is the only one which feels especially called on to foster and protect an interest on which other parties have no favors to bestow."

The Tribune ought to know, for it is the pre-eminent organ of the party west of the Alleghanies.—Voice.

FACTS FOR BUSINESS MEN.

It is a fact that at the very time the people of this nation were crying hard times one year ago, the citizens of Maine, according to the official records, were depositing more money in the savings banks than in any other period since the State was formed.

It is a fact that in Providence, R. I., where Prohibition went into effect July 1, the arrests, according to the Chief of Police, were as follows: February, 583; March, 454; April, 592; May, 527; June, 515; July, 263.

It is a fact that in Atlanta, where Prohibition went into force July 1, in spite of all the lying newspaper reports regarding the injury to the financial prosperity of the city, the tax commissioners the other day decreased the tax rate from 40 cents on $100 to 30 cents.

An ounce of fact is worth a ton of logic.—Voice.

Compilation of statistics by the State Auditor show there are thirteen counties in Missouri which do not contain a licensed saloon.

Winnebago and Ogle counties, in this State, hope to elect their Prohibition candidate for State Legislature, the editor of the Rockford paper. He is an able man, esteemed by all classes.

The Supreme Court of Maine has decided that the State courts have no jurisdiction over the sale of liquors at the Soldiers' Home at Togus, and that they are not liable to seizure while passing through the State, destined for the home.

A reward of $1,000 has been offered for the arrest and conviction of the murderers of the Rev. Dr. Haddock by the Sioux district, Northern Iowa Conference of the Methodist church, through the presiding elder, the Rev. Wilmore Whitfield.

The Common Council of Sioux City, Iowa, paid the funeral expenses of the Rev. Mr. Haddock, who was shot for his efforts to enforce the prohibitory laws. The citizens of that place, with others, have raised about $1,000 for his widow.

Illinois paid $25,000,000 of internal revenue taxes last year, the greatest amount of any State in the Union. Kentucky comes next, with $16,000,000; New York, $14,000,000; Ohio, $13,000,000; and Pennsylvania, $7,000,000. The smallest contribution of any State or Territory was from Vermont, $31,000. Nearly all of these vast sums are paid by distillers as whisky tax.

Near Shueyville, Iowa, Anton Soukup, a demented Bohemian, who had become intoxicated, set the house and barn of Mr. Verba on fire. Two women named Novotny and Louvar ran to fight the flames, but were met by Soukup, who struck them on the forehead with an ax, inflicting fatal wounds. The fire in the house was put out by neighbors, who captured the madman after a desperate struggle, but the barn was consumed, together with forty hogs, a horse, and a large quantity of hay and grain. Soukup was taken to the Sioux City jail for safe-keeping, and threats to lynch the saloon-keeper who sold him the whisky are being made.

LITERATURE.

HOURS WITH THE BIBLE, or the Scriptures in the Light of Modern Discovery and Knowledge. By Cunningham Geike, D. D. Vol. I. From Creation to the Patriarchs. Pp. 381. Price, half morocco, 90c. John B. Alden, New York.

The extraordinary popularity and merit of Dr. Geike's Life of Christ must make welcome any work from the same pen on Biblical topics. This volume is the first of a series of six which cover the entire Old Testament history, and form the first successful attempt ever made "to incorporate the utterances of the prophets with the special incidents of contemporary history to which so many of them relate. The light thrown on writings often so difficult as they stand in our Bibles, by introducing them in their historical connection, must be evident. They become again what they originally were—the pulpit literature of the day in which they were spoken." These volumes shed a wonderful degree of light upon the inspired record. The influence of such a work is to broaden, deepen, and elevate the tone of Bible study. It gives to the people a hand book of the Bible which on every page shows the assiduous care of the author and the marvelous research with which it has been compiled. Had Mr. Alden done no more than to give the "Life of Christ" and "Hours with the Bible" to the people it were a work worthy of a life time. He has circulated some 150,000 copies of the first named work.

THE LIFE OF ABRAHAM LINCOLN, by his secretaries, John Hay and J. G. Nicolay, promises to be one of the most popular works of the year, and its publication in successive numbers of the Century will introduce it at once to an immense circle of readers who will appreciate its literary excellence and historical worth. "To this day," says the editor of the Century, "the life of Abraham Lincoln has never been told. Many biographies of the President, of varying value and interest, have been written; one of the best, considering the promptness with which it was prepared, being by Dr. J. G. Holland, our former editor-in-chief. Dr. Holland's work is to be classed among those prepared by accomplished authors who enjoyed no personal acquaintance with the subject, nor any unusual means of access to authorities; several interesting books have also appeared bearing the names of men personally acquainted with Mr. Lincoln, and giving details of more or less value and authenticity, particularly as to his early career. But only his private secretaries, John George Nicolay and John Hay, have had the opportunity and the authority to tell the complete story of Lincoln's life, and particularly of that part of it which pertains to the Presidency. When Lincoln died, these two returned to the White House, where they were still living, though already appointed to Paris; they gathered together the President's papers, and handed them to Robert Lincoln and David Davis, who sacredly guarded them till the return of the secretaries from Europe. They were then redelivered to the latter, for the purposes of this history, and have never been in any other hands. They have served as an important part—by no means the whole—of the data preserved by the biographers for the purpose of presenting to the world the record of their illustrious chief, in all its truth and fullness. This history includes not merely the personal career of Lincoln, but a graphic account of the events which led to the civil war, and a history of that war from the point of view of the White House,—the point of view, in fact, of the commander-in-chief of the armies and navies of the United States."

Vick's Magazine makes its bright visit to our table regularly. Susan Power entertains us with marvelous facts vouched for by patient observers of the busy bees and their work among the flowers. "The First Frost," "Bouquet Making," "Trees, Plants and Scenery in California," "Society of American Florists," "Repotting Roses," etc., are titles that suggest the fall care of plants.

The November St. Nicholas begins a new volume with brightest promises for young readers. "A City of Old Homesteads," has charming illustrations of the summer home of the poet Stedman and of Celia Thaxter's study. Some of the clever tales that Victor Hugo, the great French poet and novelist, used to tell his favorite grandchildren have been collected, and are here put into English for the first time by Brander Matthews. "Boring for Oil" is a very interesting and instructive description of one of the most wonderful enterprises of modern times by which our little readers are able to enjoy the long winter evenings with bright lamp light instead of pine knots and tallow dips.

—The Rev. Dr. Craig, at a recent meeting in London, said that an intelligent Turkish pasha had told him that he scarcely knew of an educated Mohammedan family in Syria that had not the beautiful illustrated books of the London Religious Tract Society upon their tables.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—Rev. Dr. Roy, secretary of the American Missionary Association in this city, has begun a campaign in Ohio, in connection with Rev. George V. Clark of Athens, Ga., to promote the interests of the Association.

—The report that Mr. George Muller died in Australia in May last, is finally contradicted by the fact that he appeared in Brisbane in the last week in July and conducted meetings there. The Australian Christian World of July 30 says that "he came to Brisbane unexpectedly, and was speaking in the churches."

—Rev. Edward Judson proposes to solicit 10 cents from every Baptist in the world, to build a memorial church in New York City in memory of his father, Adoniram Judson, who was born August, 1788.

—The late notice of the engagement of Rev. Albert Ethridge as evangelist for the Illinois Home Missionary Society, is followed by word that Rev. Edward A. Paddock, of the Providence church in Bureau county, has been persuaded to leave the wonderful work which has grown up under his charge and become also an evangelist. The engagement of these two brethren must be followed with great blessings upon the churches.

—In the discussion at Northfield, Mass., on how to get people to bring their Bibles to church, and use them, Mr. Moody said: "I think the whole thing comes from this text preaching. The ministers of the country are not considered good preachers unless they take a text and comply with the fashion. There is not one expository preacher in five hundred. There is the trouble. The people have no use for the Bible, as the services are usually conducted. Then in more than one-half of our churches there are stained glass windows so that the people couldn't read their Bibles if they had them."

—Owing to the untrustworthy records of heathen nations the following item of Chinese history, from the "Story of Baptist Missions," may not be wholly correct, and yet there may be truth at the root of it. "According to Du Halde, Fred Schlegel and others, the Chinese had such a vivid expectation of the coming of the Messiah, about the beginning of the Christian era, that they sent eighteen envoys to the west to hail their expected Redeemer. But being met on their way by the missionaries of Gaudama, they mistook them for the apostles of Christ. 'And thus,' says Schlegel, in his Philosophy of History, 'did this phantasmagoria of hell intercept the light of the Gospel.'"

—Rev. Dr. Abbott E. Kittridge, late of the Third Presbyterian church, Chicago, will be formally installed pastor of the Madison Avenue Reformed church, in New York, on Wednesday evening. Rev. Dr. Richard S. Storrs will preach the sermon.

—General Booth, the founder and head of the Salvation Army, arrived in this city Saturday evening, and was enthusiastically received by the Chicago battalions. Wednesday afternoon the army will lay the corner stone of a new fortification, corner of Chicago avenue and Franklin street.

—Next Sabbath, the first in November, will be observed by all Protestant missions, and the societies and denominations that support them, as a day of special prayer for the conversion of the heathen.

—A church for the use of Italian Protestants was opened in New York City on Sunday, Oct. 17, the entire service being rendered in Italian. The building is that formerly occupied by the St. Phillip's Protestant Episcopal church (colored), and was purchased and refitted for its present purpose by Mrs. Catherine Wolfe, at a cost of $45,000. It will be known as the Church of San Salvatore.

—The Woman's Home Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal church of the United States began its annual meeting in Detroit, Thursday last. Mrs. Lucy B. Hayes, of Fremont, Ohio, late mistress of the White House, as President of the society, read her annual report, which emphasized the need for the organization. This afternoon the reports of the Treasurer and Secretary were received. The receipts during the year, comprising cash and supplies, were $63,292.64, of which all but $3,692.88 has been expended in the work of the society.

—A discovery in Central Africa leads to the hope that the whole of the continent will be opened to Christian effort sooner than was expected. A cablegram to the New York Herald, from Brussels, states that the Congo State Department has received from its agent a report of the grand discovery that the rivers of Sankauron and Kassai are fully navigable, by which also the eastern region of the Congo state can be reached without a long detour to the north. These rivers have valuable resources on their banks.

—The Board of Visitors of Andover Theological Seminary decided at Boston, Tuesday, of last week, that they have original jurisdiction touching the charges preferred against the professors of the institution, but that the allegations must be made more definite and plain, and be so amended as to proceed against the respondents individually and separately.

—Details have been received of the massacre of native Christians of Uganda, Africa, by the order of King Mwanga. The massacre began in June and was directly due to the refusal of a Christian lad acting as the King's page to commit an abominable crime. Many Christians were tortured, mutilated, and speared, and thirty-two were burned alive together. The appeals of the missionaries for a cessation of the atrocities were unavailing. The fate of these unfortunates did not serve to frighten candidates for baptism, and within a week after the massacre many natives were baptized at their own desire. Leaflets containing extracts from the Scripture, prayers and hymns in the Uganda language are freely bought by the people, although their possession involves danger of punishment. The diary of Bishop Hannington, who was put to death by the King, will soon be published in London.

TABERNACLE MEETING IN PAXTON, ILL.

Rev. L. B. Kent, editor of the Christian Voice and Banner of Holiness, of Jacksonville, held a meeting of ten days in the tabernacle owned by the holiness association of Central Illinois. He held meetings in the afternoon and evenings of each day. The afternoon meetings were attended by a small band of earnest and devoted Christians, with others who deeply desired to live more spiritual lives. Evening congregations were largely attended by a promiscuous assembly. The preaching was able, and thoroughly evangelical in doctrine and spirit. I have heard C. G. Finney, Avery, Foot, Lyman Beecher and a great number of others, and never listened to one who exceeded brother Kent. He is a remarkable man. He does not lack culture or talent, and he lives close to the cross of Christ, and is filled with the Holy Spirit. His prayers were an inspiration. They lifted the souls of fellow worshippers from earth to heaven. The secret of his power seemed to consist in a faith like that which called forth the exclamation of Jesus, "I have not found so great faith in Israel," in his childlike simplicity and his deep, unselfish humility. I never saw a Christian whose whole power was applied in Christian work as was his. He prayed as John Knox prayed for Scotland, as Jacob prayed at Peniel, as Jesus prayed for a perishing world. Oh, I wished that the friends of a pure Gospel cleansed from all secret societies were anointed with the spirit of prayer as was he! If they were, the anticipated convention would be aflame with the Spirit of the Lord, and the mighty power of God would set the reformation forward. Come, brethren, let us gird up the loins of our minds and address ourselves to prayer, as did David. He says, "I gave myself continually to prayer." Brother Kent, during his services, gave five distinct testimonies against Freemasonry. Pray for that brother.

New rituals have recently been adopted by the A. O. U. W., Knights of Honor and U. A. Order of Druids.

The Chosen Friends have 29,968 members, distributed as follows: Beneficiary department—males, 20,729; females, 8,068. Social members—males, 534; females, 437.

The present membership of the Knights of the Golden Eagle is over 17,000, divided among 166 Castles as follows: Pennsylvania 109 Castles, Maryland 12, Massachusetts 9, New Jersey 13, Delaware 7, New York 4, California, Iowa, Georgia, Connecticut, West Virginia, Indiana, Michigan, Colorado, and Missouri, one each.

A number of members of the Knights of Labor assemblies and trades unions who are opposed to Henry George met in New York last week and denounced his candidacy for Mayor. The meeting grew out of an order issued by District Assembly No. 49, commanding the members of the Knights to meet Saturday and march in the George parade. A resolution was adopted declaring that Henry George and his socialistic ideas were in direct opposition to all the teachings and ideas of the organization, and repudiating George and his communistic following.

BUSINESS.

SOLITARY SUBSCRIBERS.

We send thirteen hundred papers to different post-offices where we have only one subscriber. Can it be possible that there are no other persons in those places who would be interested in reading such a paper as this? We can hardly believe this, and we can but think that if our solitary subscribers would put forth earnest and judicious efforts they might persuade some of their friends or neighbors to subscribe for the Cynosure.

Doubtless many of these solitary subscribers lend their papers, which is a kind act on their part; but Christians should not live by borrowing if they can possibly avoid it; and those who have for a time read papers that others have paid for, should at length consider whether they ought not to allow those subscribers to lend their papers in other directions, and whether it would not be well for them to subscribe for the Cynosure themselves, and in their turn become helpers in the work of spreading good literature to others who otherwise might not obtain it.

SUBSCRIPTION LETTERS.

The following have made remittances of money to the Cynosure from Oct. 25 to Oct. 30 inclusive:

FIFTY YEARS and BEYOND;

OR,

Old Age and How to Enjoy It.

A most appropriate gift book for "The Old Folks at Home."

Compiled by REV. S. G. LATHROP.

Introduction by REV. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D. D., (Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond," some practical hints and helps as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of the life that now is, and to give comfort and help as to the life that is to come.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors the gray head and refuses to consider the oldish man a burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and healthful draught for every aged traveler to the great beyond."—W. Times.

OF

A Happy Life.

28th THOUSAND.

Baptist Commendation.

"We are delighted with this book. It reaches to the very core of Christian experience, and is eminently experimental in its teachings. It meets the doubts and difficulties of conscientious workers after the bread and water of life, but whose efforts result only in alternate failure and victory. The author, without claiming to be a theologian, sends out the results of a happy and rich experience to help others into a happy Christian life."—Baptist Weekly.

Presbyterian Endorsement.

"The book is so truly and reverentially devoted in its spirit that it demands criticism. It contains so much that is sound and practical, so much that, if heeded, will make our lives better, happier and more useful, that the intelligent reader who really wishes to lead a life lived with Christ in God can scarcely fail to derive profit from its perusal."—Interior.

Methodist Word of Praise.

"We have not 20 years and a book with more delight and profit. It is not a theological book. No effort is made to change the theological views of any one. The author is a rich experience that fits him a plain and delightful manner."—Christian Advocate.

United Brethren's Approval.

"We have seldom met with a more interesting volume, abounding throughout with apt illustrations; we have failed to find a dry line from title-page to final."—Religious Telescope.

Congregational Comment.

"It contains much clear, pungent reasoning and interesting anecdote. It is a practical and experimental lesson taught out of God's word, and is worthy of universal circulation."—Church Union.

This enlarged edition is a beautiful large 12mo volume of 240 pages.

NATIONAL SUICIDE,

AND

ITS PREVENTION.

BY OSCAR F. LUMRY, PH. D.

Prof. Lumry's book, "National Suicide and its Remedy," will be read with profit even by those who do not accept its doctrine, that taking interest for money loaned, one or more per cent, is sin, taking something for nothing. For, as Goldsmith said of his Vicar of Wakefield,

"Even his fallings lean to virtue's side."

—Cynosure.

Dr. Lumry is a man of ideas and never fails to make his readers understand just what they are. Every sentiment he writes has such an air of honesty that it will in a measure disarm those who read of criticism. It is a good book to set people to thinking, whether they believe his theories or not. The book is well worth a careful reading and study.—Inter Ocean.

On all the points named they differ radically from those which prevail in the organization of society. Either they are true or false. It is a curious fact that all of them have been stigmatized as crazy, and yet nearly all of them have been for some years steadily gaining the adherence of men of intellectual ability.—Times.

HOME HINTS.

TO CLEAN WOOLEN FABRICS.

The Leipziger Muster-Zeitung fur Faerberei, which is likely to be good authority on such subjects, expresses its views on cleaning woollens as follows:

Opinions on the best methods of cleaning woollens are so infinitely different, and so various and contradictory are the statements of practical papers on this point, that it appears to me, says the editor, a remunerative and interesting task to examine the matter thoroughly. I tried the various degrees of heat, from the hottest to the coolest temperature, and I employed all the favorite cleaning materials one after the other—soap, borax, ammonia, benzine, and mixtures of these articles. The results were so decided, and so plainly marked, that the following conclusions must be regarded as definitely established:

1. The liquid used for washing must be as hot as possible.

2. For the removal of greasy dirt, sweat, etc., borax is of so little value that its application would be mere waste. Soap lye alone is better, but the preference must be given to soap lye along with ammonia. This mixture works wonders by quickly dissolving dirt from particular parts of underclothing which are hard to cleanse. It raises and revives even bright colors, and is altogether excellent.

3. On the other hand, for cleaning white woollen goods there is nothing which even approaches borax. Soap lye and borax, applied boiling hot, gives white woollens a looseness and a dazzling whiteness which they often do not possess when new.

4. If shrinking is to be entirely avoided, the drying must be accelerated by repeatedly pressing the woollens between soft cloths. In no case should woollens be let dry in the sun, as in this case they become dry and hard. They are best dried in a moderate current of air, and in cold weather in a warm place, not too near the stove.

For colored goods there should be prepared a lye of seven quarts of soft water and two ounces of the best soft soap, the quantities being, of course, modified according to the judgment and the dirtiness of the articles. The soap is dissolved over the fire, and the lye, properly stirred up, is divided into two vessels, to one of which is added a teaspoonful of ammonia for each quart of lye. The woollens must be entered at a heat which the hand can not bear, and the fabric must consequently be turned and pressed with smooth wooden stirrers. They are then pressed out as far as possible, and transferred to the second lye, containing no ammonia, and which by this time has become so cool that the articles can be pressed by hand, but no twisting or wringing must take place. They are then pressed between three or four soft, dry towels, till the latter no longer become wet.

For white woollens there is added, instead of ammonia, a teaspoonful of powdered borax to each quart of soap lye, and the operation is otherwise conducted exactly as above described. If the second lye is too soapy, it may be diluted with a little hot water.

After two or three lots of woollens have thus been washed, the lye must be heated again—the first lot being put aside to settle, the second, being made first—with the addition of ammonia or borax, as the case may be, and fresh lye made for the second.

Mothers—place this book in the hands of your sons. It treats of

The Devil's Printing Press,
Etc., Etc., Etc., Etc.

A book that is sensational, not from excited rhetoric or florid figures of speech, but from the facts that flow like melted lava from the pen of the writer. It is a book of timely warnings, where sin and crime are shown in their naked, robbed of the glamour with which they have been surrounded by the purblind literature of the day, and pointed in living, true colors. The life of the profligate is here shown in its true light, not as a life lived, though wicked, but as a life that, as a thing of death, now and in future life will be abhorred. —WESTERN CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

BETWEEN TWO OPINIONS.

BY E. E. FLAGG.

Author of "Holden with Cords," "A Sunny Life," "Little People," etc.

The Best Story of the Reform.
Price, only $1.00.

Published by THE NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

This latest and best of Miss Flagg's works is now ready in handsome print, neatly bound. The story begins in a quiet New England home, and paints its homely joys with a delicacy and truthfulness worthy the hand of Harriet Beecher Stowe. The scene then changes to a thriving, growing, palpitating young Western city, and with great power and startling accuracy the writer leads us behind the scenes that we may see the machinery that works the liquor traffic and labor troubles. The story of the strike, the mob, the attempted assassination, the saloon-keeper's wiles, the curse of his trade, the power of the Christian faith to change him to a messenger of mercy, the criminal and the hidden power that shields him from justice, the land robbers tricks, the dark and secret conspiracies of the lodge—these and all the incidents of the book are portrayed with rare tact and great power of description. It is emphatically a book for the hour. And what is better and yet more striking, the incidents are facts, and every one a powerful and convincing argument against the lodge and the saloon.

Every temperance man and woman should read this book. No temperance story like it was ever planned, much less ably executed. A wonderful light is thrown upon the difficulties in the way of prohibition. Learn how they may be avoided.

Every one who loves to read a good story, chaste and elegant in expression, in thought, true in incident, deeply interesting in its narrative, should read this

READ THESE NOTICES FROM THE PRESS:

The Free Methodist, Chicago.

"Between Two Opinions" is a story, its incidents founded on fact, which presents a powerful argument on these questions and must attract thousands of readers among our thinking and observant people. The plot of the story is neither startling nor novel, but it develops a wonderful strength in following the experiences of people in the common, everyday walks of life.

The Free Press, Birmingham, Iowa.

It differs from the popular story, "The Bread-winners" of a year ago. It greatly differs from that book in that it is written from the Christian standpoint, and its beautiful and touching descriptions of home life and home duties and heroic self-denials will awaken a responsive echo in every heart, that has not by dissipation lost the taste for the pure joys of home.

The Religious Telescope, Dayton.

The author, Miss Flagg, is a brilliant writer. The stirring questions in American politics are uncompromisingly presented, and the labor movement as championed by the secret unions of working men, which direct the strikes that with more and more frequency occur in our cities. "Between Two Opinions" is a story, its incidents founded on fact, which presents a powerful argument on these questions, and must attract thousands of readers among our thinking people.

The Christian Conservator, Dayton.

This is a charming book, written in an attractive manner. It is so full of sunshine and so radiant with light that one is enlightened, warmed, and, before they are conscious of it, set against the lodge. The style gleams, glis and sparkles. It is dignified and simple. It is the right book to place in the hands of your wife or daughter to superinduce co-operation with you in anti-secrecy work. Every minister's wife should read it, and then, if her husband is not an Anti-mason, he should take his turn next and become one.

The American, Washington.

We are reading, in spare moments, Miss Flagg's new book, "Between Two Opinions," and the estimate we have thus far put upon it is that it is masterly both in style and argument. One is insensibly made to feel that he is reading facts, not fiction; that the book is not a play upon the imagination but an unravelling of mysterious circumstances which have an important bearing upon current events.

Law and Order, Boston.

The book takes high ground for prohibition of the liquor cure, for woman's hall of home protection, and for a better and more honest brotherhood than is forced by their obligations upon the members of secret orders. It is, therefore, a valuable book for several large classes of American readers.

Christian Instructor, Philadelphia.

There are important questions pressing upon American politics to-day: two of them are prohibition and the labor question as connected with the secret unions of workmen. This work is an expose of the twin evils, secret societies and the saloons. The truths are given in the form of a story; not startling, but thrilling experiences of home life that are vouched for as facts. The evidences presented of the impossibility of reaching the saloon keeper so long as he and the officers of the law are sworn brothers in the den of some secret society, are conclusive enough to awaken the most careless and obtuse member of society. It is a valuable book for the masses to read.

Evangelist, Berea, Kentucky.

The object of the volume is to illustrate the practical workings of Secret Societies, and especially to show how the Lodge upholds the saloon, and this very important design is wrought out with much skill, clearness and power. By reading it temperance people may learn much about the difficulties in the way of prohibition.

The Standard, Chicago.

It is written in the interests of reform, more especially temperance and Anti-masonry. The third of the story suggests the special aim of which is to protest against all "halting between two opinions;" in other words, is a plea for radicalism. The story is vigorously written, and will interest even readers who do not altogether believe in its doctrine.

The Pacific, San Francisco.

It is a story intended to do service against the saloons, and in favor of Women's Christian Temperance work, and especially against the secret orders—Freemasons, Odd-fellows, the Knights of Labor, etc. No reflecting man can doubt that any combination of picked classes and individuals is liable to great abuse. It is obvious, also, that secret orders are especially capable of being used in a selfish and unprincipled way.

REVISED ODD-FELLOWSHIP

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

COUNTRY.

Bartholdi's statue of "Liberty Enlightening the World," erected on Bedloe's Island, New York Harbor, was unveiled Thursday with fitting ceremonies, the street parade and naval display being of an imposing character. President Cleveland, with other dignitaries and the French guests, reviewed the street procession. At the island Count de Lesseps delivered an address in behalf of the Franco-American union, after which Senator Everts made the presentation speech. The President accepted the statue in the name of the people, and the ceremonies closed with prayer by Bishop Henry Potter, D. D., and a national salute from all the batteries in the harbor, afloat and ashore. In the evening a dinner in honor of the French guests was given by the Chamber of Commerce.

At Rio, Wis., early Thursday morning the limited express on the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul road, composed of a baggage car, a mail car, one passenger coach, and three sleepers was wrecked by an open switch, and the passenger, mail, and baggage cars were telescoped. The wreck caught fire and some twenty persons (the names and exact number are yet in doubt) were burned to death. Eleven charred corpses were recovered next day. Bishop Whipple and his wife escaped without injury, and the venerable prelate worked manfully in endeavoring to rescue the victims penned in the blazing passenger coach. The disaster is said to be the worst that ever occurred in the Northwest.

The best evidence attainable fixes the number of the lost in the Rio (Wis.) railway horror, at twenty. C. H. Wells, the brakeman alleged to be the cause of the disaster, has surrendered himself. He throws all the responsibility upon Conductor Hankey.

A passenger train on the Wabash collided with a freight at a curve near Edwardsville, Ill., early Thursday morning, the engines being wrecked, the baggage and express cars telescoped, and several box cars dented. The express messenger was crushed to death, and a brakeman was fatally injured. The conductor of the freight train disobeyed orders and caused the disaster.

In a curve near Pine Bluff, Wis., Tuesday afternoon, a wild train and a passenger train dashed together, the engines being wrecked, and the baggage and mail cars, with their contents, burned. One man was killed and five others seriously hurt. Martin Kelly, engineer of the wild locomotive, was arrested at Madison on Thursday on a charge of manslaughter and held in $1,500 bonds.

The first section of a freight train on the Louisville, New Albany and Chicago road broke in two at the grade near Cedar Lake, Ind., early Wednesday morning, the released cars dashing down the incline and into the second section. An engine and seven loaded cars were wrecked and burned. Two drivers were killed, and four other persons received fatal injuries.

At Murfreesboro, Tenn., early Wednesday morning, fire destroyed the Jordan Block, the Stone and River National Bank, the opera house, Belmont's warehouse, the telephone and telegraph offices and the armory of the Sparks Rifles. The loss aggregates $100,000, with about $75,000 insurance.

A special gives details of the horrible burning of eight people in a log cabin near Flat Rock, Knox county, Ky. On Tuesday William Poe, a farmer, went away from home on business, leaving his wife, five young children and two young ladies of the neighborhood. During the night the house burned and all the inmates perished and their remains were found next day by the husband on his return. It is not known how the cabin caught fire, but the mother's remains were found clasping those of the baby, and the bed clothing near showed that an effort had been made to extinguish the fire. The remains of the others were found in the ruins.

It is believed that Henry Peters, a missing witness in the Haddock murder at Sioux City, was killed by the assassins to prevent his revealing their names. A decomposed body found on the 4th inst. at Crescent, Iowa, and interred in the Pottery field at Council Bluffs, was exhumed Tuesday, and an examination of the clothing led to the almost complete identification of Peters.

A crowd of ruffians, who boarded a passenger train at Tipton, Ind., Tuesday night, began a free fight in the smoking car. Two or three men are reported to have been fatally cut, one had an arm broken, and a number of others had eyes and noses damaged.

The Adams Express messenger on a St. Louis and San Francisco train, which left St. Louis at 8:25 Monday night, was bound and gagged near Mincke, Mo., and the safe rifled of $50,000 in money and valuables. The robber, who escaped, got on the express car at St. Louis by means of a forged letter to the effect that he had been engaged as extra man on the route, and instructing the regular messenger to teach him all the details of the business.

The rolling mill of the Old Colony Iron Works at East Taunton, Mass., was burned Wednesday morning, entailing a loss of $150,000. The Case School of Applied Science at Cleveland, Ohio, was also destroyed, the loss being placed at $200,000. The structure was completed and opened a year ago.

County Treasurer Ward was accosted at Little Rock, Ark., Tuesday night, by two men who threw a sack over his head, knocked him senseless, and then taking his keys robbed his office of over $11,000.

Rev. R. T. Pierce, a Methodist pastor of Butler, Mo., was beheaded at Kansas City, Wednesday, by the street cable cars.

A poisoned well at Battle Creek, Mich., caused the death of Mrs. G. Winters, and the serious illness of her three children and of a neighboring family. An investigation is being made.

Sixteen structures, including two hotels and the principal business houses, at Pochahontas, Va., were destroyed Wednesday by an incendiary fire. One man perished in the flames and other persons are reported missing. The financial loss is placed at $50,000.

An extensive and disastrous fire broke out on Madison street near Clark in this city Sunday morning. A member of the Fire Patrol was crushed by falling floors and several others were injured severely.

FOREIGN.

Though the cholera in Japan is somewhat abating, the mortality is still enormous. From Sept. 27 to Oct. 7 there were 6,014 cases and 4,435 deaths. In Tokio 483 new cases occurred and 409 deaths. Returns for the four weeks ending Sept. 27 give 34,908 cases and 23,774 deaths, an average mortality of over 68 per cent.

General Kaubars has notified the Bulgarian regency that if the conspirators against Prince Alexander be punished, the Russian Government will have recourse to extreme measures. The regents, suspecting that it is Kaubars' intention to assist the Zankoffites in Sofia to form a new ministry, have taken the precaution to cause the arrest of all suspected persons, and have ordered the troops to be in readiness to suppress a revolt. A state of siege will be proclaimed in the event of a coup d'etat being attempted. Another Russian warship is going to Varna. A protocol has been signed renewing diplomatic relations between Serbia and Bulgaria. It provides for a treaty of commerce, and for the reference of several disputes to a joint commission.

Bulgaria, though discouraged by the indifference of Europe is yet making some resistance to the Russians. The government has ordered that the Russian language no longer be taught in the public schools, substituting German therefor. In Pesth there is a feeling that Russia will occupy Bulgaria. General Kaubars has told the Bulgarian regency that if Russians in Bulgaria do not cease to be maltreated and terrorized he shall sever all of Russia's official relations with the government, and leave Sofia.

There is war again about the packing houses at the Chicago Stock Yards. Last week the workmen in one of the houses where beef is killed, struck because a Knight of Labor was discharged. He was taken back, but they wanted more pay. Pay was increased and then they insisted on eight hours a day, and dragged out nearly all the men from the beef houses. Finally the lodge managers gave an order calling out all the men from both beef and pork houses. Over 20,000 men were interested, but not all obeyed, and many non-union men were engaged, so that work has not been entirely suspended. The only demand is for eight hours. This the proprietors will not grant until they conclude to quit business or remove. The strike seems to have been ordered, not because of any lodge rule, but because the secret organization gave the power. The executive committee of the lodge denies the order, and Barry, of Michigan, one of Powderly's aids, who seems to be cool-headed, has come on again to affect a settlement. Sheriff Hanchett applied to Governor Oglesby for the militia, Saturday, believing that it would be impossible for anything but a brigade of troops to quell a riot, should it once break out among the turbulent butchers. Two regiments were marched to the scene Monday. On the same day several workmen were nearly killed by strikers who were arrested and fined.

An important conference has just been held in Baltimore by the Roman Catholic prelates on the Knights of Labor lodge. Bishops Ireland of St. Paul, Keane of Richmond, Spalding of Peoria, Williams, Kendrick and Ryan, with Archbishop Feehan of Chicago, went to Baltimore on the 26th ult. to meet in conference with Cardinal Gibbons. Cardinal Tascherau of Canada having decided against the order, and being supported from Rome, made the position of the American prelates somewhat unpleasant. The conference was to determine the attitude of the church in the States. The result of their deliberations was not made public, but borne to Rome by Bishops Keane and Spalding for the approval of the Pope. Some conjecture that the result will be favorable to the lodge. Powderly journeyed hastily from New England to use his utmost effort as a devoted Catholic to save his order. But it is reported by lodge organs that Bishop Spalding is unfriendly, and that nearly all the bishops sympathize with him, believing the Knights of Labor, as an organization, to be contrary to the principles of the church. The preacher in Notre Dame Cathedral, Montreal, is denouncing the order as a trap for workmen, and opposing the revised rules, made for Canadians. The end will be awaited with some anxiety.

GEORGE F. PENTECOST.

[See page 8.]

John Bright, the sturdy Quaker in the galaxy of British statesmen, stands on his own feet in politics, as well now as when he retired from the advisory council of his friend Mr. Gladstone, because of his objection to the last brief war in Egypt, and to war in general. Though esteemed in America as highly as ever for his private virtues and adherence to principle, our confidence in his judgment was somewhat shaken for his opposition to Irish home rule; but he is correct in refusing to blindly follow party leaders. He says in a late published letter: "We (the Liberals) have not yet had an infallible leader, and until he appears I must preserve my liberty of judgment. The Liberal party will not be destroyed. It will be instructed and become more competent for future work."

John G. Finch, the head of the Good Templars, has issued a proclamation, by virtue of his position at the head of the National committee of the Prohibition party, in which he says: "Prohibitionists should help the Good Templars, W. C. T. U., Sons of Temperance, National Temperance Society and other organizations which are the primary schools of our party. Our work must be as broad as the reform." Mr. Finch may not intend it, but his statement will not endure examination before the mirror of truth. The W. C. T. U. is sandwiched between the lodges, which is a false position. Those who believe in prohibition do co-operate with the W. C. T. U. and honor it; but they do not care to see the lodge standing by to steal such favors of the National Temperance Society it is a pity that little can be said while it is under the control of the lodge. It is not true that these lodges are the primary schools of the party. If it was understood that tactics or principles of the Prohibition party were borrowed from the lodge, Mr. Finch would directly find himself without any followers. It is true that "our work" should be broad as the reform and for that reason the Cynosure calls on the Good Templars and on other temperance lodges to give up their secret worship and come out like men on Christ's side of this great reform.

The anarchists of London are engaged in a bitter feud in consequence of the disclosures of the strength, distribution, and nomenclature of the anarchist societies of England, printed last spring in the New York Sun, and furnished to the correspondent of that paper by Theodore Reuss. The league promptly expelled Reuss and the executive committee of the anarchists held secret sittings to decide as to the best method for "removing" Reuss and punishing the correspondent who made the revelations. Reuss, fearing for his life, made known all the correspondence in the case, showing that the president of the anarchists' society, Victor Dave, had sanctioned his publishing the details, and that afterward, seeing what importance the police attached to the disclosures, Dave had sacrificed Reuss, and even went so far as to move for his expulsion from the order. A secret committee was appointed on Dave which sat for three months, and ended its work by securing his acquittal. This divided the anarchist camp, part demanding expulsion and its consequent punishment, that is, assassination. The English courts may soon have to decide another Carey case.

THE VERDICT THAT CONDEMNED THE ANARCHISTS.

BY ALEXANDER THOMSON.

"No seers were they, but simple men,
Fast results the future hid,
The meaning of the work they did,
Was strange and dark and doubtful then."

It is in this fine manner that Whittier speaks of the men who stood embattled on Lexington Common, to fight the first battle of the Revolutionary War. The same might be said with equal truth of the men who condemned the Anarchists in Chicago. Brave men they must have been, for none but fools could have been ignorant of the danger of rousing against them an organization that permeates the whole civilized globe with its savage power. But it cannot be supposed that they grasped the full meaning of that far-reaching verdict. The sentence of death that hangs over the heads of the Anarchists, is because they have been the advisers of, and conspirators in crime, and this same verdict has caused the penitentiary with its gloomy walls, its armed guards, its cells with barred windows, and its host of task-masters to rise up before every Master Mason of the United States who is a thoughtful man. While the gallows with all its gloomy finality hangs over the head of every Mason who has attained to the sublime elevation of the Royal Arch.

Let us consider this matter further. These Anarchists, it may be, fired no shot, threw no bomb, or even a stone, but they did advise organized resistance to the law. And does not the Master Mason when he enters into an engagement to give his brother Mason notice of all danger, become a conspirator against the law; and when he further promises to keep the secrets of his brother "when committed to him as such, murder and treason excepted," is he not a conspirator against the law of the United States, yes, and against all well-organized society? And when the whole lodge advises each initiate to sacredly keep his unhalloved vows, with their solemn "So mote it be," is it not an adviser of, and conspirator in crime? If one Mason has secreted a horse thief or a burglar, and defeated the ends of justice by contriving his escape, and if he has done this in obedience to his Masonic obligation, then in the light of the Chicago verdict, since every Master Mason in the United States has advised such action, they should all be arrested and incarcerated in the same cells that hold the burglars and the thieves. And if in the history of our country one Royal Arch has connived at, or contrived the escape of one murderer or traitor (and Mrs. Walker, herself a Southern sympathizer, plainly states in her history that the bloody Border Ruffianism of Kansas, was originated in the Blue Lodges of Missouri); then since every Royal Arch Mason in the United States has counseled and approved such action, over every neck of them the Chicago jury has placed the noose of the hangman.

Truly that was a far-reaching verdict, and shows that if the two governments, Civil and Masonic, have existed side by side so far, and if the darker system has seemed to be the most powerful, it is not actually so, but the other has in it the strength of divinity; and Justice, when she occupies the Judge's seat or sits in the jury-box, has in her hand the hammer of the eternal God, and some day will strike a blow that will go through all the defenses and bulwarks of her dark antagonist as if they were paste-board.

But God works through men. Who among us will be his willing instruments to seize this soul-enervating power with the arms of the civil law—and set its soul-drunk millions free?

LIFTING UP THE SOUL.

Psa. 25:1.

BY ELDER N. CALLENDER.

David lived long before Darwin. He believed, he knew that he owned a soul and was not afraid to call his soul his own—"I lift up my soul," not our soul, as the common property of lizards, baboons and men.

Despite modern elevators the average man of ordinary activity, lifts daily, at least, seventy-five tons weight. Multiply this by 365 days, then by seventy years and you see he has "moved mountains" by faith in mere muscle and will. Such body-lifting "profiteth little" while "godliness is profitable unto all things," etc. Godliness is soul-lifting up to God. All devotion, recognized by God, has in it a soul, "worshiping God in spirit and truth."

There is a ponderous force in the unsanctified soul, impelling it as by gravity, away from God, its rest, down to the center of perdition, and it requires an untold power to propel it all the way from earth up clear to God in heaven. Rituals and forms of prayer, however well framed, will not carry souls up to God. Should God analyze many a long "beautiful prayer," "splendid prayer," he could find in it no soul, for the reason there is none there. Omnipotence cannot see a soul where nothing is, but solemn sounds and sentences. Much of our sacred song, grandly rendered by godless leaders, is as soulless as Darwinian theology.

David did lift up his soul to God. He knew it by a divine intuition, by consciousness; and could present his soul to an all-seeing Father. He is no invalid who can wield his body with agility and ease: who cannot do it is. So he who cannot "lift up his soul" is a pitiable invalid. What of a minister who cannot lift his own soul?

What of churches which have not the spiritual force to "draw near to God," not enough spiritual muscle to lift themselves? An ordained invalid, congregated cripples, fit for the poor-house. Sooner let us have a body or a soul ever so small that we are able to wield, even from earth up to God.

A man with a soul he can wield and lift, at any moment, from this earth up to heaven, to God, is a grander sight than revolving worlds and shining suns. Gabriel would turn his sight away from the glory of the material universe to mark the upward flight of one soul heavenward. Were all temporalities, known and unknown, put on one grand exhibit on the left, and one David on right, lifting up his soul, I would look steadfastly to the right, to the sublime scene of a soul worth more than all "the things which are seen," ascending up to its God. Such an event has more meaning in it than the revolutions of all worlds.

"THE BLOOD OF THE MARTYRS."

We expect martyrs when men go into a heathen land and tell its people that they are worshipers of false gods. The cry is raised, "Great is Diana," and the preachers of truth are scorned and punished. Christianity has had to make its way through the prejudices of men. Imprisonment and death were the rewards of its advocates. Our recent slavery system compelled our heroes of liberty to suffer in the same way before the war of emancipation. Nothing inspired our soldiers more than the song of John Brown, whose "soul went marching on," although he had been hanged as a malefactor.

Many regarded tectolators as soldiers in the good fight against the drinking habits so popular and fruitful of crime. But they had not realized the fact that the saloon was a rebel as truly as slavery, and that Lovejoy must have a successor. George C. Haddock is the man. Can it really be a fact, or are we in a dream, that in this free country the honest advocacy of reform of the drinking usages of society, and of the honest observance of the law of a State exposes a man to martyrdom? Are we in the heart of Africa, or Asia, or America? What can be worse under a Turkish despotism than we have just seen in our so-called "free, enlightened" State of Iowa?

The fact as a prophecy would have been incredible. Now it covers every true American with shame and confusion of face, and the only good we hope to arise from it is the reaction which attends such crimes. The prohibition army will doubtless be vastly increased. The murder of Haddock is like the first gun at Fort Sumter. It will awaken the American people from their sleep of over-security against the fearful dominance of the saloon—a demoniacal spirit as foreign to our Puritan inheritance of freedom, as the red flag of the anarchists or their godless assemblages on the Lord's day. FREEMASONRY AS A HANDMAID.

I believe that Freemasons claim, as a virtue, that they do not urge, or even invite, people to unite with the fraternity. Now, if the institution is a handmaid to religion, and has a divine origin, as the members generally, if not universally, claim for it, why not employ all the arguments that can be furnished and all the power of eloquence to induce the doubting and hesitating to become members of this heavenly brotherhood? Why not "compel them to come in," like the invitation to the Gospel feast? Luke 14: 23. Surely such apparent or professed tolerance, whether "those who are ignorant and out of the way," in reference to the claims of Masonry, as a divine institution, is not "a zeal which is according to knowledge."

A handmaid should help her mistress in doing her work, but not usurp her place. The church is "the bride, the Lamb's wife." Now, we would like to be informed what service the handmaid renders this heavenly bride in the conversion of the world to Christianity, in reforming society, and making people "meet for the inheritance of the saints in light"? The inconsistency of calling Masonry a handmaid to the church, when compared with the arrogant airs and language of the handmaid toward such a mistress, is perhaps more apparent than real. To do the handmaid justice, she does not claim to be a handmaid to the church; it is to religion that she professes subordination and subserviency. How the handmaid employs her time in the interests of religion, and whether religion is satisfied with the service rendered, the records are not so full and satisfactory as could be desired.

If it is the Christian religion that is spoken of in the statement referred to, certainly the mistress is no more satisfied with the service and behavior of the professed handmaid than Sarah, Abraham's lawful wife, was satisfied with the insolence of Hagar, the Egyptian handmaid, who attempted to supplant her mistress in the affections of her husband and the control of the house. The Christian religion, after trial of the handmaid for a sufficient length of time, may justly adopt the language of Sarah in requesting her husband to dismiss from the family one whose presence in it embittered its joys and threatened its existence. Says the injured Sarah, "Cast out the bond-woman and her son; for the son of the bond-woman shall not be heir with the son of the free." Gen. 21; Gal. 4. Doubtless the mistress thought that, should she perform her household duties without such assistance as she had for some time been receiving, her happiness would thereby be greatly increased. So we think the Christian religion may fervently petition for the discharge of the so-called handmaid, and thus preserve peace and harmony in her house, the church. But how could Masonry prove a handmaid to the Christian religion, since it takes into its brotherhood persons who profess that religion, and would be ready to seal their love to it with their life-blood, and also readily take into the same intimate relationship those who said respecting its Founder, "Away with him! away with him! Crucify him! crucify him! Not this man, but Barabbas?"

Now, it is well known that persons who approve of the deeds of their fathers in "crucifying the Lord of Glory," and "killing the Prince of Life," are taken into this brotherhood. "Is this thy kindness to thy friend," O handmaid? But since Masonry admits into its membership persons who "blaspheme that worthy name by which Christians are called," and before which "every knee shall bow, and tongue confess," that institution has no just claim to be considered a handmaid to the Christian religion. To what religion, then, we inquire, is this handmaid "bound to service or labor?" Since, according to the preceding remarks, it is not to the Christian religion, Christians, it might be expected, would feel but little concern what religion it is, as they are not to be benefited by it. But as there are many rival religions in the world, and each claiming superiority to every other, perhaps we will find, on examination, who is the veritable mistress to this handmaid. Let them all pass in review before her, and let her name that mistress or religion that she is willing to acknowledge as her superior. Outside of the Christian religion is the modern Jewish, the Mohammedan, the Deistical, the Pantheistical, and the Polytheistical, with its "gods many and lords many." None of these, however, can she recognize as her mistress to the exclusion of the rest, as that would be sectarian and inconsistent with the broad principles of comprehension which she holds.

Now, if the handmaid declines to recognize all the different forms of religion taken singly and severally, she does not appear to have any mistress to whom she "owes service or labor." Perhaps Masonry, in condescending to be called by a term which implies inferiority and subordination, is acting the part which Masons do in wearing little aprons, and hammer, trowel, square, compass, rule, level, etc., not for use in building walls, as operative masons employ them, but for display. So far from Masonry being a handmaid to any actual religions of the world, she dexterously manages them so as to render them subservient to her interests. Thus she in reality becomes the mistress, and in lofty tones she issues her mandates to them. But perhaps the children of this handmaid will take exception to the foregoing representation of their mother, and plead for her that she really performs important service to all religions. If this plea is presented that "she does not eat the bread of idleness," but labors for all religions—well, if this plea is founded on truth, she must have ample employment in serving so many mistresses at the same time, and that at services that are mutually destructive.

Of old, it was said that "no man can serve two masters; for either he will hate the one and love the other, or else he will hold to the one and despise the other." Should not these children, if they possess any filial affection, expostulate with their "ancient and honorable" mother to endeavor to obtain a release from the service of so many different mistresses, whose commands are sometimes unreasonable and incompatible? Oh, ye sons of Masonry, are ye not afraid that your aged mother will break down under such burdens! It may be objected that the foregoing remarks are made under a misapprehension of the application of the terms, "handmaid of religion." Perhaps it will be said that she is a handmaid, not to any particular form of religion, but to those principles in which they all agree. To this statement we demur, as we do not think such principles exist; and it certainly is not reasonable to demand of those who assert their existence to name them. For instance, between Theists and Atheists, and between Pantheists and those who allege that God is a spirit there can be no common belief or principles. The same remarks are applicable to materialists, who are the modern Sadducees, denying the existence of angels, and consequently, any future state of rewards and punishments. Those who allege the existence of such an abstract religion, such an ethereal, amorphous religion as does not take on itself any of the existing forms in which she is embodied in this world, are under the illusions of an ignis fatuus or a chimera. If there were common principles in all religions, these would constitute a common religion held by all men in all countries and ages, as there are common principles in all languages, and which, in the aggregate, constitute a common language. If the handmaid is in expectation of finding a common religion in this world to which she owes service and labor and from which she may justly claim wages, it is to be feared that she will remain long out of service or employment.

But suppose it were true that there is a common religion, including a few articles such as that there is a God, and that the soul is immaterial and indestructible, destined to an eternity of happiness or misery, would such a religion as this be sufficient for any person's salvation? If this question be answered in the affirmative, then we do not see why fallen angels might not be saved since they believe and tremble at the thought of these and many other truths of religion connected with them. It is the glory of the Christian religion that it teaches the nature and perfections of God—"a just God" and yet a "Saviour." His attributes all in harmony, mercy and truth meeting together, righteousness and peace kissing each other in the salvation of men through a glorious Mediator. Every other system of religion utterly fails to show how God could be just while he justifies the ungodly. Let not Christians entertain the delusion of adopting any religion that excludes Christ, the only Mediator between God and men. See John 14:6; Acts 4:12; 1 Tim. 2:5.—David Thompson in United Presbyterian, 1875.

TRUTH SHALL TRIUMPH.

"What folly, now," the faithless critic cries,
With sneering lip, and wise, world-knowing eyes,
"To dream of peace amidst a world in arms,
Of swords to plowshares changed by Scriptural charms.
Still shall the glory and the pomp of war
Along their train the shouting millions draw;
Still dusky Labor to the passing Brave
His cap shall doff, and Beauty's kerchief wave;
Still shall the bard to Valor turn his song,
Still Hero-worship kneel before the Strong;
And Church for State, and State for Church shall fight,
And both agree that Might alone is right!"
Despite of sneers like these, O faithful few,
Who dare to hold God's word and witness true,
Still keep the path which duty bids you tread,
Though worldly wisdom shake the cautious head;
No truth from heaven descends upon our sphere
Without the greeting of the skeptic's sneer.
Still lives for earth, which fiends so long have trod,
The great hope resting on the truth of God,—
Evil shall cease and violence pass away,
And the tread earth breathe free through a long Sabbath-day.

LIFE INSURANCE.

The motive for doing a thing and the method of doing it must not be confounded.

A man desires to provide instant and permanent relief for his wife and children, therefore he opens a saloon for the sale of drinks and the playing of games. Does the end of necessity justify the means considered as an abstract principle?

Then while the motive actuating the assured may be admitted as a proper one, that by no means proves that life insurance is a proper method of securing the object. The insurance business must stand or fall from its own inherent nature. I shall not permit the ground of objection to be shifted from insurance of human life as a specific branch of business, to that of the motives of the individual in taking out a policy.

"Life Assurance," says Chamber's Encyclopedia (reprint of 1880) "in its widest sense, is a contract entered into by the assurer to pay a certain benefit contingent upon the duration of one or more lives."

From the above definition it will be readily seen that life insurance is but a speculation on human life. The death of some person is essential to the benefit accruing to the person or persons in whose favor the policy is issued. Therefore the enjoyment of the benefit is contingent upon the death of the assured, and he must die before the one who is to reap the benefit of the insurance policy is of any avail. Hence the receiving of the benefit is at best a game of chance with some human life. To thus speculate on human life is to degrade its dignity, rob it of sacredness, and prostitute it to the level of an article of common barter.

This view is further proven by the very terms used in tables, formulas, etc., used in bringing the business to definite and fixed ratios respecting "present value," "annuity," "a pecuniary interest in the life" of the insured, "mortality tables," etc.

The Massachusetts insurance commissioner says, "There is no business scheme known among men in which exists so many pitfalls for honest ignorance, or lurking places for designing fraud as that of life insurance." It is stated on high authority that out of 200 life insurance companies in this country, 120 have either failed or retired from business,—100 of them since 1862.

The same authority quoted above is responsible for the assertion that many which became insolvent and went into the hands of receivers, lingered for many years "affording rare opportunity for the robbery of policy-holders by a class of professional shysters."

Statutory laws of the various States respecting insurance are prima facie proof that the men who manipulate the insurance business are not doing it in the interest of the public or policy holders, but in their own interest.

Considered as a business it is unfortunate for its favorable comparison with other branches of legitimate speculation in that the moneyed interest of the insured and insurer do not have a common basis, but are antagonistic. It is to the interest of the party insuring that the insured live, but on the other hand, there is no advantage to be derived from the insurance in many companies according to the terms of the policy, except upon the death of the insured. Hence the sooner the death the sooner the benefit will be enjoyed.

Again the "American experience table" of mortality which is used by insurance companies in the United States is such that it results greatly to the advantage of the companies, especially proprietary ones. The tables used make no allowance for weak or strong, healthy or diseased constitutions, yet the companies are careful to insure only those who are certified by medical authority to be of sound health. In this the unfair high rate of insurance operates greatly in favor of the company.

In the State of New York there were in 1879 thirty-one life insurance companies doing business. The number of policies in force in these companies was 595,486. The total amount insured by these policies was $1,439,661,265; the total income $76,174,954. Excess of income over expenses $9,996,387.

In Massachusetts the number of companies was thirty in 1879. The surplus income over expenses for the year was $9,775,396, making a net income per company of $325,846. The figures show how generous to the policy holders this business scheme is.

Says one authority on life insurance, "There are in the country more than half a million families who have voluntarily subjected themselves to a tax amounting in the aggregate to about $100,000,000 a year and are under bonds more or less in the aggregate amount of about $400,000,000 to continue to pay this tax for life or a longer period." Another writer asserts that "It is believed that the whole number of lives insured is not less than 1,100,000, while the aggregate sum insured is fully $2,705,000,000,—a sum amounting to one-twelfth of the entire capital wealth of the union." Thus it appears that comparatively few men organized in life insurance companies draw from their customers a tax on about one-twelfth of the whole capital wealth of the United States when these customers are only about one-fiftieth of the population of the country. This tax aggregates an enormous sum which, invested at the usual rate of interest, nets the companies or managers an immense income, for which, on the whole, they render no fair equivalent.

What is the inducement to thus pay this tax? The possibility of getting the amount named in the policy as a "benefit," without rendering an equivalent in exchange. It is nothing short of a game of chance for stakes.

Life insurance is not only open to careful examination and protestation from a moral consideration, but it is destined to enlist the careful consideration of political economists, for it involves some of the most profound problems relating to the welfare of the public.

As a people we cannot afford to be lured into the meshes of this speculation with death for filthy lucre. How can a Christian speculate by a business which is founded wholly upon the divine sentence of punitive justice? Let him answer who can.—C. E. Harroun, Jr., in Free Methodist.

ABOUT CRANKS.

Cranks are made of the best material. Spongy, loose-grained, soft, worm-eaten or rotten material of any kind will not do for them. Cranks have a mission. They are made for that purpose. They mean business. They are made to move the world, or a part of it, and they accomplish their purpose. If they didn't they wouldn't be cranks.

Some people like cranks, some people don't; but it is all the same. When the crank turns we all have to move, or step down and out. Cranks are queer things. They assume different shapes and are made of different material, but are not always material in form. Cranks have great pushing qualities. These are what cause some people to dislike them, but they ought not to be blamed. They can't help pushing.

Cranks are of ancient origin. They seem to have multiplied in modern times. Noah was a crank. For one hundred and twenty years he hammered away on the ark. His neighbors poked fun at him, called him names, and tossed their heads in derision; but Noah kept hammering. When the flood came they all wished they were cranks. Moses was a crank, not willingly but almost by compulsion. He gave Pharaoh no rest until he suffered the children of Israel to enjoy their freedom. The Saviour of men was considered a crank. He interfered with the existing order of things. He actually broke up an old party and formed a new one. He was such an awful crank they had to kill him, but somehow he managed to come to life again, and is the most powerful force in existence to-day. Indeed, he seems to be the inspiration of nearly all the cranks of modern times.—Detroit Center.

THE SECRET EMPIRE.

KNOW-NOTHINGISM REVIVED.

THE "PATRIOTIC ORDER SONS OF AMERICA" AND "UNITED ORDER OF DEPUTIES."

[From the Chicago Daily News, Oct. 30, 1886.]

It is not generally known that there exists in Chicago two societies which are directly the outgrowth of the "Know-Nothing" political party, which reached the zenith of its power and entered the decade of its death in 1856. In that year the Know-Nothing party had in the political field a Presidential ticket, Fillmore and Donnellson, and secured the eight electoral votes of Maryland. With the war of the rebellion the Know-Nothing party died.

Out of its ashes have risen in later years the "Patriotic Sons of America" and the "United Order of Deputies." The principle and objects of these orders are the same as those of the old party. They aim to promote the election of native-born Americans to the offices of the government, and oppose foreign interference with State interests; to foster public education through the medium of free schools; to oppose the union of church and state and ecclesiastical interference with public affairs. Both orders declare that there shall be no discrimination against the American in his own land in favor of the alien; urge that every alien shall remain here twenty-one years before being permitted to vote; that the American shall be preferred to the foreigner for such offices as are the gift of the people. The main object, in short, is to prevent the election to political office of all foreigners.

Both orders confer degrees and enjoin secrecy upon their members, who are sworn not to vote for any foreign-born candidate for office. There are nine "camps" of the "Sons of America" in Chicago, claiming a membership of about fifteen hundred votes, and several "councils" of the "United Order of Deputies."

The "Order of Deputies" are taking very active interest in the present campaign, and by means of secret circulars and private meetings are endeavoring to work up a feeling against foreign-born candidates, particularly those of the Roman Catholic faith.

They have issued a circular on which are printed three tickets in the following manner: [The circular shows the candidate on the three tickets, Republican, Democrat and United Labor in parallel columns and against the name of each certain marks which are interpreted by a key.—Ed. CYNOSURE.]

All of the members of the order have a piece of printed card-board upon which is printed the following key:

- †† Enemy.
- ‡ Sympathize with Enemy.
-  Members.
- * Friends.

It will be observed that four of the candidates upon the above tickets—Wulff, Loomis, Williams, and Kleckner—are designated as members.

A reporter of the Daily News who has been investigating the subject learned that one of the chief promoters of the institution is Mr. A. R. Stanley, a watch-maker and jeweler at 941 West Lake street.

Mr. Stanley holds the position of precinct deputy. The order has been in existence for several months, during which time it has rented lock box 637 in the Chicago postoffice. The following taken from its ritual, is the oath administered to candidates for admission:

Deputy—You will repeat after me the following obligation, giving your name in full:
(Persons affirming will raise the right hand.)

I —, in the presence of Almighty God and these witnesses, do solemnly promise, declare, and swear I will support and defend the constitution of the United States and the State where I reside. I will keep inviolate the secrets of this organization; I will obey its constitution and laws; I will use my best endeavors to (No. 1); I will not knowingly vote for, recommend for, nor appoint, nor assist in electing or appointing, a (No. 2), nor any person sympathizing with (No. 3), to any political position whatever; and in all my public and political action will be governed by the principles of this order; I will oppose all (No. 4), and will ever maintain the great principle of (No. 5); I will never reveal any of the signs, grips, words, passwords, or other mysteries of this order, or the names of any of its members or its numerical strength, to the uninitiated; I will hold these principles above my party affiliations; I will always give a brother of this order preference in all matters of business, and also in my act of elective franchise, all things being equal. I will make prompt reports to the State, Congressional, or town deputies of every intimation made by me; I will advocate the principles of this order; I will use my best endeavors to in late all true men, and in this way help spread the order; all this I voluntarily promise, declare and swear (or affirm), without hesitation or mental reservation, or any self evasion of mind in me whatever, so help me God.

Deputy—Then, with clasped and uplifted hands, repeat after me the (No. 6).

"To perpetuate freedom—to preserve the American union—to strengthen and extend (No. 7)—to oppose the (No. 8), and to the future welfare of the American republic, I pledge my life, so help me God."

The charge is invariably to be given by the deputy as follows:

Citizen, Brother: The steady encroachments of (No. 9) o o o upon those institutions of our country which we have so fondly cherished, and which we believe underlie the whole fabric of free government, have impelled us into fellowship in this order, which we trust Divine providence will use as one of the instruments in his hands to effect the overthrow of that terrible power which has so long cursed the world.

In receiving you into our midst it becomes my duty to charge you never to forget the obligations you have here voluntarily assumed. Never allow yourself to be betrayed into any word or act by which the fact of the membership of any brother in this order may be divulged to the uninitiated. For your own security and the public good, let your influence be felt in the advancement of (No. 10) o, rather than (No. 11) o, to positions of political power, trust, or emolument.

In our party organization mere party issues must never be introduced, except so far as they involve the principles of our order. You are at liberty to select for yourself, as a free American citizen should, your political relations, governed only by your own convictions of loyalty and truth. Your political affiliations may, at times, press you severely, but let your obligations ever prevent you from yielding to party clamor. As members of this order seek to control party rather than allow party to trail your honor in the dust.

Deputy—Brother, for such I am pleased to welcome you into our fraternity, known among its members as (No. 12).

We have certain signs and words, and a grip, by which to recognize members of the order. These are to be used with caution and are as follows:

The challenge sign is made thus * * *

To this sign a member of the order will respond thus * * *

In introducing conversation with a stranger you has given the correct response to the challenge we say;

O. * * * A. * * *

The answer being correct and the parties being mutually satisfied with the claim to brotherhood, the grip is exchanged, which you will now receive.

Accompanying this is the following key:

- No. 1. Means, Promote civil and religious liberty.
- No. 2. Roman Catholics.
- No. 3. Roman Catholicism.
- No. 4. Attempts to use the public funds for any sectarian purpose whatever.
- No. 5. One general unsectarian free-school organization.
- No. 6. "Oath of the Shield."
- No. 7. The principles of religious liberty.
- No. 8. Political power of the Roman Catholic church.
- No. 9. The Roman Catholic church.
- No. 10. Protestants.
- No. 11. Romanists.
- No. 12. The U. O. D.

During the day Thursday a notice fell into the hands of the Daily News requesting attendance at a meeting of the order.

Inquiry directed in the proper way disclosed the signs, grip, and password of the order. The hailing sign is the placing of the index finger of the right hand upon the left lapel of the coat. The response is placing the two fore fingers of the right hand upon the left lapel of the coat. The grip consists of locking the small finger of each right hand. The password is, "Gen. Lafayette was a great man;" the response, "Yes, but Washington was a greater."

Thus armed, and in the guise of a deputy, a Daily News reporter mounted the stone steps of Mr. Samuel G. Willard's handsome residence, at 815 Washington boulevard, Thursday evening. A sharp pull at the bell brought Mr. Willard to the door, and in reply to the question: "What do you want?" the mock deputy gave the sign and password of the United Order. He was admitted and shown into Mr. Willard's parlor, where ten gentlemen were seated. Among the number were Mr. A. R. Stanley, precinct deputy; Dr. S. U. Ingraham of 721 Washington boulevard; Mr. J. Burnell of 344 West 12th street, and Mr. M. Walbridge.

Mr. Stanley opened proceedings by an address to the company. In the course of his remarks Dr. Ingraham said: "I am a firm believer in keeping out of office all foreigners where an American born of the proper belief is in the field. I am for 'Americans on guard,' gentlemen, first, last, and all the time." There was a murmur of applause and Mr. Stanley said: "We expected fully forty members here to-night, gentlemen, and I am disappointed at the smallness of our meeting. However, I suppose it is mainly due to the inclemency of the weather." The list of members residing in the precinct was read, and then those present fell into a discussion on the interests of the order.

Mr. Willard asked what the strength of the organization in Cook county was; at which Mr. Stanley looked wise and said: "It goes way up into thousands. But the latest rules of the supreme council are to keep the strength of our organization a secret, even from the main body of our own members. Next spring it will be impossible to estimate where our members or our strength will end. It will surprise not only the people of this city but the entire union. Our strength will be known when it is felt, and can only be understood by its result in the elections."

The names of a number of prominent gentlemen who have become members were suggested for the encouragement of those present. A general conversation ensued, in which there were violent denunciations of the Catholic churches, and particularly of the Sisters of Mercy, who go about begging alms for the various institutions.

A plan of work was agreed upon, the main features being to oppose foreigners at the present election; to organize for the spring campaign; to purge the city government of foreigners, and to secure the election of members to the legislature who will favor the taxation of church property, and extend the laws of games of chance so it will apply to bazars, church fairs, etc.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

There are no sensations here this week. The Congressional districts have monopolized them for the time. Washington is about the only city in the United States which does not resound just now with battle yells and wild huzzahs. The noise of the fray does not reach it. The streets are silent and one can saffly forth on business or pleasure without being over-run by a frantic mob. The people are mostly sober, too—intoxicated neither with spirituous liquor nor with excitement. They do not have hand-fuls of electioneering documents stuck under their doors every hour during the day, and their morning papers are not entirely filled up with denunciations, vindications, flagellations, imprecations, adulations, and defamations.

The political complexion of the Fiftieth Congress is now determined by the election, and public interest and public men will at once turn again towards Washington. In every direction there is busy preparation here for Congress and the coming season. There is a smell of new paint in the corridors of the Capitol, the postoffice of the House of Representatives is filled with scaffolding, and the desks of the members are packed in a heap in the Speaker's room. Order will soon come out of this chaos, but there will be no special difference in the appearance of the Capitol when Congress convenes. Everything will be fresh and clean as usual, but no appropriation was made except for the annual renovation and repair, and there can be no extensive changes.

The Department clerks seem to take less interest in the Congressional elections this year than ever before, and the number who have gone home to vote can easily be counted. Indeed, none of those who live at any great distance went home for the purpose. In every Department, except one, employees who had leave due them had permission to go at this time. The exception was the Postoffice Department. The Postmaster General requires that there shall always be on duty 80 per cent of the working force of each bureau and division of his Department.

Washington is growing now with marvellous rapidity. Hundreds of handsome residences have been built since last spring. The absence of three months sees changes and improvements on every side. Since the long drouth and devastation of the trees by caterpillars, residents think the streets never looked so untidy and ill-kept as now, but visitors insist that it is still the cleanest and most beautiful city in the country.

One of the largest projected improvements is the building to be erected by the Mexican government for its representatives in this country. Thinking men of the community have long predicted that foreign nations would recognize the advantage to be derived from the possession of a legation building in Washington. The British government was the first to take the step, and her substantial structure on Connecticut Avenue has been a source of pride to her ministers, and also to visiting Englishmen. The estimated cost of the Mexican building is $50,000. It will be located on I street, near the residence of Chief Justice Waite, and in architecture it is to be French renaissance. It will embrace the residence of the Minister and the business offices of the legation. Since a lead has been taken in this direction, it is probable that other foreign legations; Russia, China, and Japan, will soon be provided with handsome buildings owned by their respective Governments.

The barbers of the city, or some 200 of the 365 reported in the business, are working through their trade union for a very commendable reform—Sunday closing. In this, and their demand for early closing at eight o'clock every evening, the reasons are so manifest that good citizens are giving them encouragement in their effort. The retail clerks have succeeded in many cases in having their long hours cut down so that the time after 7 P. M. they may call their own. It is but half the battle for the homes and good citizenship of these men, however, so long as the open saloon tempts them to worse than idleness in these hours released from labor. These benefits have been secured through the agency of a secret union, but the same result might easily have been reached by a simple open convention properly managed.

DR. PENTECOST AND THE THIRD PARTY.

This letter from Dr. Pentecost was written to S. A. Keane of Chicago, auditor of the National Christian Association. We copy from the Union Signal:

BROOKLYN, N. Y., Sept. 30, 1886.

MY DEAR SIR:—No one could be more reluctant in breaking away from the Republican party than I was. Naturally it is the party of both ideas and morality, but the unhappy thing is that the party has lost its courage or its conviction. It stands before the Goliath of the Philistine saloon power, trembling and afraid as Saul did before his enemies. Nothing can be hoped from the party. It has become coward as well as corrupt, and for fear of losing office and power it has made an alliance (most shameful) with the saloon interest. It is fighting for power, and not for principle, therefore it is really more dangerous than the Democratic party. The Democratic party are the open and pronounced supporters of the liquor interests. We expect nothing naturally from them. The Republican party has betrayed our expectations for votes. The Republican saloonkeepers are Republican only for the purpose of preventing the Republican party from taking decided ground against their iniquity. The light that is in the Republican party has become darkness on this question, "And how great is that darkness!" Worse than if it had no light.

In the two or three States where they have done something in the direction of suppressing the traffic, they have done it hesitatingly and haltingly, because they have been driven to do something for fear of losing more Prohibition votes by not doing something, than they would lose saloon votes by doing that something. We may hope for nothing until the young David (Prohibition) comes forward with sling and smooth stone, and in the name of the Lord God Almighty strikes this giant evil down. Speed on the good work in the West, nor stay thy hand until the victory is won. God and conscience are with us because we are with him, and nothing shall ultimately stand before us.

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE OLD REFORM GROUND IN SOUTH-WESTERN IOWA.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—From Ringgold county where I preached twice and lectured once I went on to College Springs, Page county, where I preached twice and lectured twice; once in the Wesleyan Methodist, and once in the United Presbyterian church. The second lecture was delivered in the U. P. church to a large audience of appreciative listeners. Dr. Wm. Johnston, pastor of the U. P. church; Rev. Henry Avery of the Congregational, and Rev. Heminyaw of the W. M. church, are all thoroughly committed against the lodge. I did not have the pleasure of making the acquaintance of the M. E. and Free Methodist pastors of the place. Amity College is located here. I was present one morning at chapel exercises, and, by invitation of Pres. Kennedy, conducted their morning devotions.

At College Springs I renewed my acquaintance with Rev. Ami Smith and R. E. Adams, two veteran reformers, whom I first met at Wheaton, Ill., more than thirty years ago. Bro. Adams has a desirable stock farm, located one mile and a half from the College that he will sell cheap to some Christian reformer, who wishes to avail himself of the Christian and educational advantages of College Springs.

While at the Springs I made my home with that dear old saint, Rev. Wm. Leuty. He and Dr. Johnston, Pres. Kennedy, Rev. Avery and a number of others, members of all the various churches, cheerfully subscribed in aid of the Iowa Association reform work.

I also visited Blanchard, Coin, and other points in the vicinity, and lectured in the U. P. church of Coin. While at Blanchard I visited Rev. M. A.

Gault, who is laboring as an agent of the National Reform Association. I also visited Rev. Mr. McKee, pastor of the Covenant church, four miles from Clarinda.

I have agreed to return again to Page county when a plan of appointments in Page and adjoining counties shall be decided, when I hope to visit also the Swedish Evangelical Lutheran churches in that part of Iowa.

I had the pleasure of dropping into the office of the Western Crank repeatedly, while at the Springs. I can heartily recommend the editor and the paper to the favor and patronage of the people. It is an encouraging fact that we have, in Iowa, two such papers as the Free Press of Birmingham, and the Western Crank of College Springs.

From Page county I came to Clearfield, in Taylor county, where I lectured to a full congregation in the U. P. church. There was no service in the M. E. church that Sabbath evening, and so many of the people were present to hear my sermon, or lecture, on the religion of Freemasonry. A leading Mason was asked by the pastor of the U. P. church what he thought of the lecture. He replied it was a strong presentation of the Anti-masonic side of the question. What this Mason of Clearfield said encouraged me; as did also the remark of a veteran reformer, a layman of the Congregational church of College Springs, who said that my lecture, delivered in the U. P. church of that place, was the strongest argument against Freemasonry, as a religious system, he had ever heard. This aged father in Israel subscribed liberally in support of the reform work, and said that he would arrange to give more largely to support the State work after this year.

Men are beginning to see that the secret lodge system is Satan's organized agency for undermining and subverting Christianity and destroying republican liberty. As soon as we can get the facts before the American people, their verdict will be that the lodge, as well as the saloon, must go. Every Christian minister, and every church, as soon as they understand the relation of Freemasonry, as a religious system, to Christ and the Christian religion, will take a stand against it.

Not to do so, when one knows the true character of the religious philosophy of Freemasonry, is to be guilty of treason against Christ. To profess to be a friend of Christ, when one knows the true character of Freemasonry, as a religious system, and not take a stand with Christ against it, is to be guilty of hypocrisy. He who does not deny himself, and take up his cross daily and follow Christ, cannot be his disciple. The cross of Christ is the reproach and suffering that comes of faithfully testifying, as he did, against the evil works of the world. There will be a cross to take up, if, knowing the deceitful wickedness of Freemasonry, you testify against it.

But as those skulking cowards, who will not come up to the help of God against the mighty, are forewarned that they can not be the disciples of Christ; is it not better to put on the whole armor of God, and follow the Captain of our salvation, and bear our testimony against the evil works of the world as Jesus did? C. F. HAWLEY.

THE WISCONSIN REPORT.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Since I last wrote, my work has been as follows:

Oct. 24. A. M. preached in U. P. church eight miles south of Waukesha, and in the evening preached on reform in the same place.

25. Lectured in Covenant church, same vicinity.

26. Lectured in Opera House, Waukesha.

27 & 28. Visited West Bend, Washington county.

29 & 30. Visited Sussex, Waukesha county, and Rochester, Racine county.

31. Preached in Free Baptist church, Rochester, in the morning and talked on lodgism in same place in the evening.

Nov. 1, 3 & 4. Lectured in United Presbyterian church, near Sussex.

5. Lectured in Waukesha.

These meetings have been, on the whole, successful, though audiences and collections have not been large. I have been very kindly treated by friends; specially by pastors Galloway and Faris of Vernon, (south of Waukesha), J. Y. Wolf of Milwaukee, Marshall of Rochester and Turner of Lisbon, (near Sussex); by brethren Holt and Hamlyn of West Bend, Orvis and Icke of Waukesha, and many others not "too tedious to mention," but too numerous, whose names, I trust, are in the Book of Life.

I am to lecture, by invitation, on the 11th and 12th, in the Free Baptist church in Rochester, where is located a Free Baptist seminary, A. J. Marshall, Principal.

In the vicinity of the U. P. church of Lisbon, I took seven subscriptions to the Cynosure.

FROM NEW ORLEANS TO MOBILE.

MOBILE, Ala., Oct. 29, 1886.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—The magnificent grove of live oaks that surrounds Emerson Institute, the school of the American Missionary Association, stretch their great arms and are as grandly beautiful as when I last saw them, five years ago, and there are just as warm Christian hearts here now as then. My last two days in New Orleans were eventful. On the 27th I visited the Southern University, went across the river to Algiers, visited the Mint and saw the entire process whereby $360,000 a day are coined; and lastly went to the old Saint Louis Cathedral which is remarkable for its paintings and statuary. A good many silent worshippers were present and an abundance of wax candles were burning.

Next morning at 8:45 I was at the Southern University, a colored school under the patronage of the State. It is under the direction of Rev. Dr. Bothwell, formerly connected with Straight University and pastor of Central Congregational church. At his request I conducted the devotions of the morning and addressed the 200 or more students for twenty minutes on the evils of the lodge system. At the conclusion Dr. Bothwell said that he approved of what I had said, and that some of the students belonged to secret societies and were liable to be fined for non-attendance at their meetings. He could excuse them from school duties whenever family or religious duties required it, but he could not excuse them to attend any of their societies. Privately he told me that he had read most of our publications and was well aware that Masonry was a fraud. I gave him some books for the College library and he said he would call the attention of the students to them. This institution at present occupies contracted quarters, but is awaiting the completion of a fine large building which they hope to occupy by mid-winter. It is one of three prosperous institutions for the education of the colored youth of that city.

I hastened back to Straight, and spent the day in attendance on the recitations in the various studies, and was greatly pleased with the thoroughness of the instruction and the admirable manner with which most of the pupils acquitted themselves. Surely a great work is being done, and deserves a better support than it receives.

By request of President Hitchcock I addressed the students from 6 to 7 p. m. on Africa and its missions, in which I had most earnest attention, and many questions to answer.

With gratitude for most kind and hospitable entertainment I left New Orleans this morning for this city. I had passed over the road several times before but always in the night. The immense marshes east of New Orleans, the little patches of cotton or sugar cane that find an occasional spot of ground that rises above the all-pervading water, the beautiful expanse of Lakes Pontchartrain and Brogue, as they stretch out on either hand, the channel between them, with its needless fort and custom house, the many views of the broad Gulf, and the pretty little villages that dot the pine woods of Southern Mississippi and Alabama,—all constitute a panorama that must be seen to be appreciated.

I have found here friends, and I am sitting by an open fire in the house of a well-to-do colored family whose son is a student in Harvard University. My work is planned for several days to come, and I hope, D. V., to do a week's efficient service. Yours for Christ, H. H. HINMAN.

OHIO ORGANIZATION.

COLUMBUS, O., Nov. 3, 1886.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I receive letters quite frequently from parties inquiring about our State organization, and others asking if we cannot organize more thoroughly. To-day I received a letter from a gentleman in Muskingum county, inclosing the Illinois State president's article which appeared in the last Cynosure. I will copy this letter and my reply, hoping that it may be the means of inducing many to organize in their several counties:

FREELEAD, Ohio, Nov. 1, 1886. I send you this article (Rev. Barlow's) I clip from the Cynosure. It expresses my sentiments. If there is no other one to take this county, please give it to me, with full instructions to organize, as it will be new business to me. I have suffered worse than death at the hand of these secret societies. I know our county can furnish three or four thousand men of age opposed to secret societies. Yours truly, WM. N. WILSON.

To this I reply as follows:

Your sentiments, Rev. Barlow's and my own are nearly the same on the organization question. We have lost much in many ways because we have not been able to better organize. The reason why I have not done more in this line is because in a majority of places there have not been enough pronounced opponents of the lodge to make organization possible; or if possible, successful. I have spent my time endeavoring to get the people where they need to be to make such organization possible in our State.

If there are, as you think, three thousand, or even as many hundred men in your county, who are opposed to the lodge, no time should be lost in organizing.

Call a meeting in the school house of the district known to be the most favorable to our sentiments. When the people gather, appoint your chairman, open with religious exercises; give the reasons for organizing; read Rev. Barlow's letter in the Cynosure; call on others to make speeches, and appoint committees on organization, resolutions, finance and constitution, etc. It would be well to write to the Cynosure office for the general form of your constitution, or get some of your best men to draw it up.

All in sympathy should join the Association by signing their names to the constitution, and endeavor to get others to do the same from time to time. Meetings should be held as frequently as possible; the different phases of the question discussed; subscriptions secured for the Cynosure or other anti-secret papers; tracts distributed, and enlightenment generally given.

I wish every one who will help organize in their several counties throughout the State, would write me at their earliest convenience, so I may know who to rely on to help in this great work. If the anti-secretists see fit to sustain me as their State agent, I shall expect in the near future to have an organization in every county. In this way our opponents gain much of their strength. If we organize thoroughly, so that we can stand as one man against the powers of darkness, we may expect great results. Who will put their shoulder to the wheel and help push? Let me hear from you, friends.

W. B. STODDARD.

GOOD REPORT FROM WISCONSIN.

SUSSEX, Wis., Nov. 5th, 1886.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Elder J. F. Browne has been among us here in Waukesha Co., Wis., for a few days, taking subscriptions for the Cynosure, and lecturing against the lodge system. He lectured on Monday night to an interested audience, although not a large one. Then again on Wednesday evening, 3rd inst., to a very fair audience, and again last evening, Thursday. I believe much good has been done in the way of enlightening our people in "the dangers and evils" of the secret lodge. Few, if any, of the members of secret orders were present at any of the meetings, as many were occupied looking after election matters. Individuals expressed themselves as highly pleased with brother Browne's manner of lecturing on this great reform. They believed him to be very fair and honorable in his arguments against the systems of darkness. Our only regret is that we did not have a general turn out of all classes to hear the truth in respect to secret orders, and that our circumstances enabled us to do so little for the cause represented by the brother. Yours truly, T. E. TURNER.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A TIMID PASTOR.

WAUPUN, Wis.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Lately Bro. Browne, agent of the Wisconsin Christian Association, wrote to a Free Will Baptist clergyman asking the privilege of preaching in his pulpit. He (the clergyman) supposed, evidently, that Bro. B. wanted to speak on Masonry, refused to allow the subject discussed in his pulpit. This minister was not Bro. Cools. He has gone home to heaven; and may God raise up more like him, noble, far-seeing, wise, devout, and effective Christians, to fill the pulpits of our nation and the world. The clergyman's letter to Bro. Brown has these sentiments:

"Yours received to-day, and in reply would say that my pulpits are not open to an attack on secret societies. I am no friend to secretism, neither am I to a mission which introduces discord and breaks up churches. Personally I would be glad to meet you and renew old acquaintance, and hear you preach the Gospel, the Gospel of Christ."

As if our dear brother Brown intended to preach any thing else but the Gospel of Christ.

"While I am satisfied that you make your attacks on Masonry a matter of conscience, it is as much a matter of conscience with me to protect the churches from dissension and discord and build them up in Christ."

I would ask how can churches be built up in Christ, who denounced sin, without also denouncing sin, or raising a warning cry against that which would destroy the very foundation of the church, a belief in the divinity of our blessed Saviour? A spurious religion is trying to lead all down to perdition.

"I very much regret your going to the Waupun church, which has suffered so much it is ready to die."

Now Waupun church was not large enough to accommodate the people who came to hear the discussion. Brother Browne, with the blessing of our Lord and Master, spoke when the largest hall in the city was filled with hearers, many of them appreciative hearers; and as to the Waupun church, it breathes yet, and not like the dying Zouave either, and the pulse indicates gaining strength and vigor. Not quite so ready to die.

"You have a perfect right to attack secretism, but why not do it in a more manly and Christian way. Take the responsibility upon yourself, brother; if you wish to become a martyr, hire a hall and strike out; but leave the struggling churches, they have burdens enough already. I haven't a secret society man in my church. I am a Good Templar."

Pardon me for intruding a few of my own thoughts on the Good Templar's letter. I would advise him, if he is a temperance man, to "strike out," "hire a hall," and let the public hear him. Don't hide away in secret, and fear that some poor drunken Irishman will throw a rotten egg at you, or your audience. Are churches broken up by opposing all unrighteousness openly, and in houses erected for the true worship of a pure and holy God?

I am not alone in thinking that good has been accomplished here. Those that I have conversed with are pleased with the result of the State meeting.

MRS. L. C. ANDREWS.

THE CONGREGATIONAL COUNCIL.

YORKSHIRE, N. Y.

DEAR EDITOR:—You express the belief that the readers of the Cynosure will thank you for giving large space to the Chicago Congregational Council, and for sending copies to the members thereof. I wish to be counted as one of the grateful ones. Being a son of one of New England's Congregational ministers, I became a lover of Congregationalism. I very highly respect and esteem many able and devoted Christian men who belong to that body.

That Mr. Quint, a man avowedly belonging to a Christignoring or rather Christ-rejecting system, having in its formula a blasphemous mingling of prayer to a god of its own creation—a god having no plan of redemption and no forgiveness for penitents; a much worse than childish folly in its halter-breaking initiation ceremonies and accompanied with savage, barbarous and blasphemous oaths,—I say, that such a man, so debased in morality, should be placed most prominently as an officer in a National Congregational Council, was, at the time of his appointment, an inexplicable mystery to me and I doubt not to many good Christian men and women of that denomination and to other Christians also.

It would seem that no worshiper of the God of the Bible would be willing to endorse by fellowshiping or promoting a man, who, in reference to his connection with a Christless institution, should, in an un-Christian manner and defiantly, say, "If any man don't like it, he may help himself." Such fellowshiping of iniquity by Christians who belong to the Congregational churches affects not merely them but also the whole Christian brotherhood. As a humble private member, of more than sixty-three years standing, I protest against such fellowshiping.

With yourself, Bro. B., I rejoiced when Mr. Quint was succeeded by Mr. Hazen, the former receiving but two votes. At the time of such action in 1883, I received it as a condemnation of the infamy of Freemasonry. It is matter of astonishment and regret that that crime against God and humanity is re-endorsed in the person of the un-repentant Mr. Quint.

What does my dear brother, the editor, intend to urge when he says, "let us not criminate?" The latter word, as defined by a standard lexicographer, signifies, "to charge with crime." Surely you would not withdraw the charge, and "love as brethren," unrepentant offenders against God and humanity! "If thy brother repent forgive him."

R. W. LYMAN.

PITH AND POINT.

THE OUTLOOK IN THE SOUTH.

A well informed man assures me that there is already in Memphis a decided change of thought and feeling. Men who may not be willing to take position against secretism, are yet frank to admit the great evils which our people suffer from the influence of the lodges, abounding and superabounding and ruling with shameless audacity. I have no doubt that a wise and patient effort will at least greatly modify the influence, if not break down much of the popular prestige of the lodge. It may be some time before these results will be clearly manifest; everything that can be done will be done to keep up appearances; the ignorance and prejudice of the people will be played upon to defeat the tendency toward independence of thought and action, and yet I have no doubt the leaven of truth is working, and the Holy Spirit will enlighten deceived minds.—REV. B. A. IMES, Memphis, Tenn.

A FRIENDLY LETTER.

I have often to regret that thy paper has so few subscribers. I have long believed that it ought to be in every Christian family throughout the length and breadth of our land. It has been to me the best educator of any paper that I have taken. I am anxious to help increase its subscription list, and will work to that end. I claim to be a life subscriber. If I do not get the American ticket I shall vote the Prohibition; but do not like it as well as the American. For I had rather suffer affliction with God's people, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season. We have quite an encouraging increase on the Prohibition ticket.—W. B. WALTHALL, Quaker Hill, Ind.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND PARDONS MORMONS.

The President has pardoned Amos M. Terr, J. C. Kemp and J. R. Christopher, the three Mormon bishops who were sentenced to imprisonment at Detroit. He thus arbitrarily wipes out the decisions of our courts of justice, and prostitutes the whole country by giving undue preference to Mormon bigots, who are the open and avowed enemies of free moral government. Mormonism is near akin child of Freemasonry, and both are of the devil. I used to vote as a Democrat, but now I must vote for true principles. Both of the old parties are only striving to perpetuate themselves, hence their usefulness is ended.—JAMES SPRINGER, Galena, Kan.

A QUESTION FOR CANADIANS.

Will not some of your friends in Sarnia, Ont., find out if Judge O'Connor, the lawyers and the jury which acquitted Handy in the late dynamite trial, were not nearly all Masons.—JOHN TROTTER, Warton, Ont.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE WRITINGS OF JOHN.

LESSON VIII.—November 21, 1886.—Walking in the Light.

—1 John 1:5-10; 2:1-6

GOLDEN TEXT.—If we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin.—1 John 1:7.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The Object of John's Writing. vs. 1-4. John as the beloved disciple could write with peculiar appropriateness on the subject of Christian fellowship. He who leaned on Jesus's bosom could say with a most beautiful force and meaning, "Truly our fellowship is with the Father and with his Son Jesus Christ." But he plainly states that it is for no purpose of self glorification that he writes; but that others, including all Christians to the latest generation, may share the like glorious privilege, and experience the full joy which comes of such blessed fellowship. The communion of saints is not for one age or period, but for all time.

2. Holiness of Life Necessary to Fellowship with God. vs. 5-10. No amount of profession will take the place of holy living. God is light, and to walk in darkness is proof in itself of an infinite distance from him. We notice that in the natural world, the children of light, the birds and bees and even the buzzing house-flies seek the light. They joy in it as their natural element. So redeemed souls, whose fellowship is with the Father and his Son Jesus Christ, can have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness. That the works of Freemasonry are such can be proved. (1) By the fact that it dreads nothing so much as the light. (2) Its ceremonies, as Masonic writers take almost unnecessary pains to inform us, are all copied after the ancient heathen mysteries, of whose secret abominations St. Paul said it was a shame even to speak. "If we confess our sins," etc. When the Ephesian Christians confessed and showed their deeds, burning their heathen amulets at the expense of ten thousand dollars in our money, "the word of God grew mightily and prevailed." The world always has respect for testimony to the truth borne at personal cost to the witness. Prohibition never wins a greater triumph than when a converted rumrunner confesses his sin and destroys the contents of his bar. Had the Ephesian converts burned their magical writings secretly in the privacy of their own homes, it would have been the same silent, neutral course adopted by many in regard to their lodge vows. But such a silent withdrawal from the lodge will never convince men that its oaths are sinful and its spirit anti-Christian, and thus it fails of one of the chief ends to be gained by confession.

3. The Test of Christian Assurance. vs. 1-6. The saved soul naturally longs to be assured that it is saved. To be without such assurance is to be always under the bondage of fear, a prisoner in Doubting Castle. Such a spiritual condition saps all faith and hope and courage.

A prime condition of saving souls is that the workers should feel that they themselves have a firm footing on the Rock of Ages. John gives an unflinching test. If we keep his commandments and walk as he walked we are his. Feelings of religious emotion are nothing—a holy walk everything. A walk means a settled purpose of heart from which there may be occasional deviations, but no permanent lapse. It is the will fully set to do right. This fixed principle is the mark of what Scripture calls "the perfect man;"—not a man who never sins, but a man to whom sinning is hateful; who feels continually towards a higher and more Christ-like standard of being. "In him verily is the love of God perfected."

LIGHT FROM THE WORD.

How should we treat a brother who sins? Gal. 6: 1. How is keeping Christ's commandments the love of God perfected? John 14: 21; 1 John 4: 11-13. How do we deceive ourselves when we say we have no sin? 1 Kings 8: 46; Job 25: 4; 2 Cor. 6: 14; Eph. 5: 11.

From Peloubet's Notes.

"That God is light." Not, as Luther, "a light." Light is purely predicated, indicating the essence of God, just as when it is said in chap. 4: 8, "God is love." There, it is true, the predication is purely ethical, and thus literal, when used of God who is a spirit, whereas here, light being a material, not an ethical object, some amount of figurative meaning must be conceded. But of all material objects, light is that which most easily passes into an ethical predication without even the process, in our thought, of interpretation. It unites in itself purity and clearness and beauty and glory, as no other material object does,—it is the condition of all material life and growth and joy. And the application to God of such a predication requires no transference. He is light, and the fountain of light material and light ethical. In the one world, darkness is the absence of light; in the other darkness, untruthfulness, deceit, falsehood, is the absence of God.—Alford.

"But if we walk in the light." Walking in the light may include the three following things: (1) leading lives of holiness and purity; (2) walking in the truth, that is, embracing the truth in opposition to all error of heathenism and infidelity, and having clear spiritual views of truth, such as the unlearned never have (see 2 Cor. 4: 6; 1 Cor. 2: 9-15; Eph. 1: 18); (3) enjoying the comforts of religion, that is having the joy which religion is fitted to impart, and which it does impart to its true friends (Psa. 94: 19; 2 Cor. 1: 3; 13: 11).—Barnes.

"Cleanseth us from all sin." By keeping us from known sins, and by atoning for sins of ignorance.—Binney. And by taking away the disposition to sin, removing the old nature, and replacing it with the new. Nothing will do for a Gospel that leaves any trouble incurable, any sorrow uncomfirmed, any sin beyond forgiveness. The blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sin, all its kinds, and all its degrees.—Bp. Huntington.

"If we say we have no sin." If we say that we are absolutely sinless, and need not the application of Christ's cleansing blood.—Biblical Museum. St. John is writing to persons whose sins have been forgiven them; and therefore, necessarily, the present tense (we have) refers not to any previous state of sinful life before conversion, but to their now existing state and the sins to which they are liable in that state. And in thus referring, it takes up the conclusion of the last verse, in which the onward cleansing power of the sanctifying blood of Christ was asserted, as if it were said, this state of needing cleansing from all present sin is veritably that of all of us, and the recognition and confession of it is the very first essential of walking in the light.—Alford.

"These things write I unto you, that ye sin not." This is the great and blessed end,—sinlessness, like that of the sinless One. "This," says Calvin, "is not only a summing up of what goes before, but, o s to speak, a recapitulation of the whole Gospel, that we should cease from sin." And this agrees with what he said in chap. 1: 4, that he wrote these things that their joy may be full; for only as we are free from sin can we be full of joy.

"And if any man sin." If any one falls and slips in his efforts to be without sin, if he is wounded in the battle, if he is conscious of his imperfections and errors.

"We have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous." The word here translated "Advocate" was translated "Comforter" in John 14: 16, 26; 15: 26; 16: 7. It sometimes means one who takes up his client's cause to carry it through by pleadings and acts,—an advocate; sometimes one who goes forth to make peace between two parties, beseeching for an offender,—an intercessor; sometimes one who stands by the sinking sufferer, uttering words of consolation and strength,—a comforter. All these offices concur in Jesus Christ, who is our Advocate to urge our cause, an Intercessor to make our peace, our Comforter to fill us with joy.—J. W. Alexander.

"But whose keepeth his word, in him verily is the love of God perfected." The commandments of God are the expression of perfect love, what perfected love would naturally do. Therefore, when our lives, in thought and word and deed, are in perfect accordance with God's Word, we know that our love to God is perfect, is complete. We cannot claim perfect love till we have a perfect life in every respect conformed to God's Word. Then, too, God's love to us has perfected its work in us.—P.

"Hereby know we that we are in him." Not by spiritual enjoyments, not by ecstatic absorption into the divine abyss, such as later and degenerate mysticism delighted to describe, but by the power to do his holy will in absolute self surrender and consecration, do we know that we have union with God.—Rev. W. B. Pope.

BY GREAT MEN IN THE STATE.

George Washington, in a letter written a year before his death: "I preside over no lodge, nor have I been in one more than once or twice during the last thirty years."

Charles Francis Adams: "A more perfect agent for the devising and execution of conspiracies against church and state could scarcely have been conceived."

Thaddeus Stevens: "By Freemasonry, trial by jury is transformed into an engine of despotism and Masonic fraud."

President Millard Fillmore, J. C. Spencer and others: "The Masonic fraternity tramples upon our rights, defeats the administration of justice, and bids defiance to every government which it cannot control."

Chief Justice John Marshall: "The institution of Masonry ought to be abandoned as one capable of much evil and incapable of producing any good which might not be effected by safe and open means."

William Wirt: "I view it as at war with the fundamental principles of the social compact, and a wicked conspiracy against the laws of God and man, that ought to be put down."

John Quincy Adams: "I am prepared to complete the demonstration before God and man, that the Masonic oaths, obligations and penalties cannot by any possibility be reconciled to the laws of morality, of Christianity, or of the land."

Charles Francis Adams: "Every man who takes a Masonic oath forbids himself from divulging any criminal act, unless it might be murder or treason, that may be communicated to him under the seal of fraternal bond, even though such concealment were to prove a burden upon his conscience and a violation of his bounden duty to society and to his God."

Charles Sumner: "I find two powers here in Washington in harmony, and both are antagonistical to our free institutions, and tend to centralization and anarchy—Freemasonry and Slavery; and they must both be destroyed if our country is to be the home of the free, as our ancestors designed it."

Thurston Weed: "I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the Anti-masonic excitement by a sincere desire, first to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of secret societies."

William H. Eward: "Before I would place my hand between the hands of other men in a secret lodge, order, class, or council, and, bending on my knee before them, enter into combination with them for any object, personal or political, good or bad, I would pray to God that that hand and that knee might be paralyzed, and that I might become an object of pity and even the mockery of my fellow-men."

Wendell Phillips: "I wish you success most heartily in your efforts to arouse the community to the danger of secret societies. They are a great evil; entirely out of place in a republic, and no patriot should join or uphold them. Considering the great forces which threaten the welfare of the nation in the next thirty years, and how readily and efficiently they can use any secret organizations, such should not be allowed to exist."

George Washington's Farewell Address: "The very idea of the power and the right of the people to establish government presupposes the duty of every individual to obey the established government. All obstructions to the execution of the laws, all combinations and associations, under whatever plausible character, with the real design to direct, control, counteract, or awe the regular deliberation and action of the constituted authorities, are destructive of this fundamental principle, and of fatal tendency."

Daniel Webster: "All secret associations the members of which take upon themselves extraordinary obligations to one another, and are bound together by secret oaths, are naturally sources of jealousy and just alarm to others; are especially unfavorable to harmony and mutual confidence among men living together under popular institutions, and are dangerous to the general cause of civil liberty and just government. Under the influence of this conviction it is my opinion that the future administration of all such oaths and the formation of all such obligations should be prohibited by law."

Edward Everett: "A secret society so widely diffused and connected as this puts a vast power, capable of the most dangerous abuse, into hands irresponsible to the public."

George Washington (to Gov. Trumbull): "Masonry is a benevolent institution, which may be employed for the best or worst purposes."

Richard Rush: Hooker, personifying law, eloquently exclaims, "her seat is the bosom of God, her voice the harmony of the world; everything on earth does her homage, the highest is not beyond her control, the least as claiming her protection." Masonry has oversteered this primordial system. She has dethroned this image of God upon earth. To reinstate it over so insolent a victor, we must have a political organization. There is no other way of assaulting, there is no other hope of vanquishing, there need be no other dream of humbling such a foe. It fights with desperation.

Wendell Phillips: "History shows them perverting justice, stopping at no crime to protect and conceal their mummeries; controlling politics for selfish and personal ends, and interfering with great danger in national emergencies. Every good citizen should make war on all secret societies, and give himself no rest until they are forbidden by law and rooted out of existence."

John Hancock: "I am opposed to all secret associations."

James Madison: "From the number and character of those who now support the charges against Masonry, I cannot doubt that it is at least susceptible of abuse, outweighing any disadvantages promised by its patrons."

Berea College History

PP. 87, CLOTH, 40 CENTS.

The establishment of a College for the education of colored children and the white children of the mountaineers in a slave State at a time when the whole country was shaken by the discussion of abolition, was a sublime act of faith in God who "hath made of one blood all nations of men."

This is what REV. JOHN G. FEE did at Berea, Ky., and the friends of reform cannot spend 40 cents better than to send for this

HENRY L. KELLOGG.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 11, 1886

THE OLD PARTIES.—S. W. Packard, Esq., of Oak Park, Ill., in a late speech in Wheaton, gave the following just and forcible description. He said:

"I believe the Democratic party will never die; for it is made up of elements already dead to living issues, and only alive to dead ones. But when living issues become dead, as slavery for instance, then the Democrats stand up to them. So the Democratic party is like a man on horseback, with his face to the horse's tail. He sees nothing till he gets by it. The Republican party is like the same horseman, looking forward indeed, but with his eyes shut, so he need not see anything he thinks will injure his party and deprive it of the offices. As parties, both are supremely selfish."

REV. J. LEONARD CORNING, pastor of the Congregational church, Terre Haute, Ind., read a paper before the late Council in favor of "relaxation in the customary tests for admission to [church] membership," which he has printed, and is circulating in sheets. It is one of those vague and vicious papers, calculated to break down all difference between the Church of Christ and the world which crucified him, which affects Christianity as a relax affects the human body, except that it carries off its health and leaves the disease. This writer designates revivals as "freshets of epidemic religious emotionalism;" and urges the churches to "gain the good will of the great outside world" by "a relaxation of what may be called the moral or practical conditions of admission to church membership." It is truly pitiful that the church of Terre Haute, or any other, should be fed with such weak stuff; and more pitiful that it should consume the time of a National Council.

THE DEATH OF A PATRICIDE.—The New York Herald correspondent says: "Frank H. Walworth died at his home here (Saratoga) of day of pneumonia, after a short illness. He was thirty-one years old." This is the young man who, thirteen years ago, shot his father for abusing his mother. He was sentenced to prison for life, but pardoned out by Gov. Robinson. He leaves a wife and one child.

Forty years ago, Chancellor Reuben H. Walworth, the grand-father of this young man, was a most popular member of the A. B. C. F. M., which then represented the popular Christianity of the United States. When Masonry fell in the free States, Walworth saved the Grand Lodge of New York, by advising them not to disband as the others did, but to be strictly clandestine, keeping the lodge-room entirely secret, and entering but one at a time. Though a Presbyterian elder, he married a Roman Catholic, the widow of Gen. Hardin, and married his son, father of Frank, to Mrs. Hardin's daughter. One of his sons is a Romish priest; the other, Mansfield, became intemperate and brutal, and was shot by his son Frank, who was but eighteen years old.

In 1847 the writer moved and supported, by a speech on the platform of the American Board at Buffalo, that slavery should not be allowed in the schools and families of the missionaries to the Cherokees and Choctaws. Chancellor Walworth attempted by a quibble to suppress the motion, but failed, and the speech was heard and treated with respect. Little did the mass of American Christians know that Masonry, which was then loathed and excluded from the churches in western New York, was at that time in the person of Chancellor Walworth among the leading counsellors of that great mission Board. The fate of his family is mournful.

GEORGE F. PENTECOST.

It would be a good work if some writer would give us a book on influence of poverty in the production of great men. General Jackson went from a cabin of logs with nothing between them to keep out the wind. Clay was too poor to get a common school education. Lincoln resembled Washington in everything but his wealth. Garfield worked on a canal. And of men now on the stage, S. V. White, the New York banker just elected to Congress, earned his first dollar trapping minks; and St. John, like Lincoln, hewed his way into life with his axe. If distinguished Americans, dead and living, from the first were placed in two columns, it would be interesting to see how much the longer would be the column of those born to poverty than those born to wealth.

Dr. Pentecost, whose name and features are given in this number, is one of those who make their own boats and row them; and as he is still a young man, his record is not yet written. Without a college education, he is a superior writer; and without a theological course, he is an eminent pastor, sound theologian, and successful evangelist; and his sermon before the late National Congregational Council on the diversity of gifts sent down by Christ in the golden tongues which fell on the Pentecost disciples in that "upper room," whence the Holy Ghost "sat upon each of them," is a powerful production, which would do credit to the head of a theological school.

We incline to think that great men, like poets, are "born, not made." There is enough in the most ordinary human mind to make a great man, if only that mind has courage and tenacity to hold its course against head winds. Washington had to breast the opposition of the leading empire of the world; and Lincoln, the mightiest obstruction to human civilization. Every man's power is measured by what he overcomes. A weak man will go down, though backed by wealth and friends; and a strong man will attain success, though poverty rocked his cradle, and he is compelled to fight alone.

George F. Pentecost's early life in Kentucky was a struggle with poverty, and without the privileges of education. He was endowed, however, with great native energy, and was happily married to an excellent and pious young woman, a member with himself, of the Baptist church. After a term of service in the Union army, he settled after the war in Indiana and engaged in business with some relatives. They prospered and the income of the establishment soon amounted to $3,500 per year. A small Baptist church in the vicinity enlisted his sympathies, and he began to speak occasionally for them. A call to become their pastor at $300 a year soon followed. The question of giving up his business might have been given a negative, had it not been for the faith and devotion of his wife, who gave her voice for the church. "When my husband has a call to preach the Gospel," said the noble woman, "I do not want the difference between $300 and $3,500 a year to cause a moment's hesitation." To the church they went and began the new work, living in a single room. He began to study, and has been ever since a devourer of books that would assist him as a preacher of the Word. From the West, in a few years he was called to the Hanson Street Baptist church, Brooklyn, and from there to the Warren Avenue church, Boston. Here his labors were appreciated and blessed for five or six years, until, in 1878, he was persuaded to begin the work of an evangelist by Mr. Moody. Several years were spent in this work until he again settled over the Tompkins Avenue Congregational church, Brooklyn, where he is giving a noble solution to the problem, How to reach and convert the masses. He has a working church full of enterprise, and unshrinking from any sacrifice for Christ, whose Spirit blesses their labors abundantly in the salvation of the perishing multitudes of a great city.

Like thousands of good enterprising young men, Dr. Pentecost was drawn by curiosity and desire of advancement into a Masonic lodge, being assured it did not conflict with his religion. He used the name of Christ in prayer and was reprimanded for it. Thus finding the lodge an anti-Christ he forsook it; and regardless of its myrmidons and terrible power to harm a public man, he has borne a fearless testimony against it. Eight years ago, in Connecticut and Rhode Island, he bore public testimony against Masonry, telling his hearers he had been a Mason, but thanked God he had left the lodge.

For a young evangelist to act thus in the surrounding sepulchral silence of pulpit and press, is as admirable as it was unusual. But his course has been steadily onward and upward. He is now pastor of an important church in Brooklyn, N. Y., and in the late large Council of some three hundred members, he was primus inter pares, equal to the best.

In Union Park church, Chicago, 1879, he contrasted true and false worship: "the one secret, the other open; the one full of candor, the other of cunning; the one free, the other hedged, hidden and guarded by mystery." "Christ," he said, "was master of the one; the devil of the other," and he warned his hearers against whatever would not bear daylight. This was in January. Two months later he was greeted more warmly than ever on his return to Chicago. Grace M. E. church became too narrow, and he went into the great Chicago Avenue church (Moody's), and preaching from the text: "Ye must be born again." He gave his own wonderful experience against the lodge. When about the age of twenty-four he was persuaded into a Masonic lodge. In the ceremony he "found himself hoodwinked, tied up with a rope, and his clothing nearly all taken off. He was in the depth of moral darkness. As soon as he could extricate himself, he abandoned such a system forever."

His discourses were reported by the Chicago press, omitting what he said against the lodge. It was taken down, however, by a friend present. The least that can be said of such a course in a daily press, is that it is infamous. The press has since improved, and we hope will improve still farther. The reporter who undertakes and professes to give a minister's discourse, and suppresses a part in favor of the lodge, is guilty of fraud; and, by implication, of falsehood.

The above facts occurred some seven years ago. But the prominence conceded to Mr. Pentecost in the great Chicago Council the other day shows that it is always safe to do right; and we hope to hear from many Pentecosts in the future conquests of the truth against the lodge; and that the stream of intelligence, dammed up by a cowardly popular silence, will flow on with a power like the Mississippi, when a winter gorge of ice has broken away.

THE ELECTIONS OVER.

The press will have given the results of the elections (except what they suppress,) before this paper reaches its readers, so we have only to give a brief explanation of them.

The Prohibitionists have done bravely, but their vote has been un-reported in many cases. We have waded through the long columns of the dailies and other papers and, at this writing, we are in utter ignorance of the vote cast for Gen. Fiske of New Jersey, for governor. We heard the popular president of the Presbyterian College of New Jersey make a speech for prohibition, at General Fiske's meeting in the rink at Princeton. We met twelve clergymen, at a reception-dinner given the General that day, and learned that in several counties the Methodists were largely for him,—and Presbyterians and Methodists can carry New Jersey; but we cannot yet learn from the papers that Gen. Fiske received a vote. This proves the following things:—

1. The old parties are alarmed by the new.
 2. The rank and file of the political parties are bewildered as they were by Birney's 67,000 votes in 1844, and suppress Prohibition as they did Abolition votes then, for fear of their bread.
 3. The Prohibitionists who have voted their ticket this time will vote it every time. They are Gideon's three hundred.
 4. The great majority of Prohibitionists who have voted with the old parties this time, are the thirty and two thousand hid in Mt. Ephraim, who will join the rout when the battle is turned.
 5. There is a general impression that these Prohibition voters are as bad as Anti-masons; as the border ruffians hated Free State men worse than they hated Abolitionists. The lodge has no argument, as slavery had none, and hence pro-slavery men knew every man of principle was bound to oppose slavery when the issue came. So Masons and Mason's jacks now distrust and hate the present Prohibition voters.
 6. The inference from the election is that it is wisdom as well as principle for the prohibition leaders to come out square against the secret temperance lodges, as wearing lodge-livery. They will lose nothing by doing so. Gen. Fiske, St. John, Dr. Funk of the Voice, and Miss Willard have uttered themselves against secret lodges; and the Masons do not and will not trust Prohibitionists led by good men.
- The Prohibitionists have elected two members to the Illinois Legislature; and when a few more are in office the Mt. Ephraimites will come over in swarms. But the Americans will not work with secretists, who have two barrels to their guns, one secret and one open.

Dr. Funk of the Voice said to the writer that, "Secret societies do not belong to American politics;" and he was understood to say that he would suggest in his paper a divorce of the political question from secret lodges, leaving the moral question to churches and reformers. Now the election is over, will Dr. Funk explain? The secrecy of the temperance lodges is trivial and ought not to be insisted on. Let us hear from Gen. Fiske, St. John, Dr. Funk, Emory Potter of Saratoga, Miss Willard, Narcissa White or other tried and true Prohibitionists. Our hearts and houses in Chicago and Washington are open, and our hands stretched out to Prohibitionists, but not to men sworn to stand by Masons, a multitude of whom are distillers, brewers, and saloonists. Speak, brethren!

—Joseph Cook has a new lecture on "Law and Order, Property and Poverty." He is now on a Canadian tour, opening at Quebec. He is expected to return to begin the Boston Monday lectureship at the first of the next year. A number of distinguished persons have been his guests at Cliff Seat, Ticonderoga, during the past summer.

POLITICAL LODGERY.

The inquiries of the Daily News of this city have informed the public of a remarkable secret political movement which has its branches here. We reproduce the article in another column and call attention to it in connection with another secret political movement engineered by the Knights of Labor, and including in its tri-partate alliance that order, the grange and the trade unions. The ticket of this "United Labor Party" (should be United Lodge Party) is headed with the names of the three lodges concerned and with other lodge insignia as the Odd-fellow three links and Masonic five-pointed star.

Says General Grant in his auto-biography: "All secret, oathbound political parties are dangerous to any nation, no matter how pure or how patriotic the motives or principles which first bring them together." This judgment is approved by every wise and patriotic American. The Columbian order in New York in the last century, grown with its record of corruption into the Tammany society of our day; the Know Nothing movement of 1856 with its long catalogue of disturbances, rioting and bad blood; the KuKlux lodges, White Leagues and Rifle Brigades of the South, ought to be proof enough to reasonable men that the secret lodge in politics is like the same influence in the church, ever corrupting, disturbing the peace of society and preventing the course of justice among a people. Lodges representing a class or a business interest entering politics provoke counter organization and involve hostile interests more bitterly; but they are especially unjust to their own members who must vote as the lodge dictates or suffer all its malign persecution. Will not the voters foresee this evil and hide themselves behind the bulwarks of justice, by abolishing the lodge curse.

—Rev. Dr. S. Collins writes from a sick bed, cheering on the Cynosure to shine more brightly and clearly upon the darkness of the sons of men. We pray that he may be raised up to take his place at the head of the national convention proposed to be held in Tennessee this winter.

—Ocean Grove, N. J., says the Midland, has become a popular place with United Presbyterians. Dr. Samuel Collins has made it a resort for a number of years. He now likes the place so well that he would like to form a colony of men of like precious faith who would enjoy the annual visits with him. Men of means who sing Psalms and who favor the idea should communicate with him.

—Dr. Noble, of the Union Park church in this city, objects to the imputation of wrong motives by the Cynosure in respect to the omission of the name of President Finney from those of eminent Congregationalists about the gallery of the church during the late National Council. We said his name would have appeared "but for his book and bold stand against the lodge"; to which Dr. Noble objects as not being the fact. There are many old friends of President Finney who read the Cynosure, who would be pleased to know what were the facts.

—In his last report, the evangelist Davis, of Chelsea, Mass., notices thus his visit to Chase, Mich.: "Two teachers in the public schools, one hundred and fifty children, and persons of various ages and both sexes professed to accept Christ. Three gave up the tobacco habit. In Chase it was claimed that Satan had drawn every man into one or several of the oath-bound secret lodges. Even the pastors of the churches have fallen into these snares, and one consequence is that while the lodges have money out at interest, the beggarly pittance paid the ministers for their preaching are raised almost entirely by the women of the rival parishes, who get up suppers, and sales, and festivals, giving fifty cent meals for twenty-five cents, and in every way they can strive; to persuade the ungodly to give them a little money to help support the churches. Compare Israel's condition in the days of Saul as described in 1 Sam. 13: 19-21.

—The Ohio agent spoke in the pulpit of Rev. E. H. Scott in Columbus, on the last Sabbath in October. Last week he attended a grand lodge performance at Mansfield, where the lodge laid the corner stone of a penitentiary building. This Masonic service probably signified that Masonry has triumphed over prisons, and no faithful Hiramite need fear incarceration so long as the law of the Masonic oath prevails over the law of the land. Bro. Stoddard prepared a pointed tract for distribution at Mansfield. Handbills in Columbus stated: "His excellency, J. B. Foraker, Governor of the State, will be present, and in conjunction with Grand Master S. Stacker Williams, will conduct the Masonic services usual upon such occasions. For co-operation in these services, the members of the General Assembly of Ohio, and other State officers have been invited, together with municipal bodies and representatives of the press from all parts of the State. All local and country organizations are expected to be present, comprising Masons, Odd-fellows, Knights of Pythias, fire companies, Grany Army posts, and other civic military and benevolent associations."

THE NATIONAL CONFERENCE.

The efforts to secure this meeting continue. The conference which appointed the committee of seven at Farwell Hall parlors last July meets again this week. Meantime the following endorsement of the congress has been signed by some of the best names in the country as below:

SECRET SOCIETIES.

We learn with pleasure that by a Conference recently held at Farwell Hall Parlors, Chicago, it was Resolved, That a Congress of Christians be called to meet in Chicago to discuss the Secret Lodge system"; and that Dr. W. C. Gray of The Interior, Dr. E. P. Goodwin of the First Congregational Church, Dr. Ranssee of the Augustana (Luth.) Synod, [C. W.] Pritchard of [the Christian Worker] Friends' Church, Dr. Meloy of the U. F. Church, Mr. Revell of the Y. M. C. A., and Dr. Lawrence of the Baptist Church, were appointed to prepare for and call such a Congress. We, the undersigned, give our voice decidedly in favor of calling such a meeting late in the present autumn or in the early winter. The history of secret societies in this and other lands and the present state of our country brought about and managed by secret orders, seem to us to make the calling of such a congress important and desirable, and the high character and standing of the committee are a sufficient guarantee for the wisdom and the conduct of such a meeting. We hope the call will issue and the meeting be held.

THE SOUTHERN FUND.

Do not forget the fund for sending the Cynosure to pastors in the South. Bro. Hinman's letters last week and this, should make every reformer's heart warm with enthusiasm, and his lips to sing hallelujahs. The Truth is marching on; and with the blessing of God, we shall yet see her most wonderful triumphs in the South. How better can our brethren of the reform invest $1.50 for Christ, than by sending the paper a year to a colored pastor.

PRESS COMMENT.

Mrs. I. Fanny Withey writes from the interior of Africa concerning Bishop Taylor's Mission Band in Africa. Mrs. Withey is with her husband, of the former firm of May & Withey, of Lynn. She was obliged to travel for five days in a hammock borne by two men to reach her husband, who had been taken violently ill with a fever 100 miles from the dwelling place of his family. Mrs. Withey states that they are surrounded by thieves, and the natives have stolen everything they could lay their hands upon. Only fear restrained them from stealing all that the missionaries had. They had stolen the sheep and goats, dug up their crops, pulled up their fences for firewood, and most of that which was left by the natives was destroyed by the hogs and ants. "Truly," she says, "we live in a country where moths corrupt and thieves break through and steal."

But the Good Templars and other such orders claim to be organized in the interests of temperance, to be the allies of Prohibition. The question then arises in regard to them, does their secrecy aid them in their work? We need to discriminate between privacy and secrecy. There may be an advantage, in many cases, to use private means to reach and convince the erring, especially those who have not gone the full length of drinking in public, or those who are young and thoughtless; but we can all see that we do not need to gather in an upper hall at night, shut off from the gaze of the good as well as the bad. We need not learn any grips or pass words. We need not be officered by men with absurd titles. We need not bind ourselves by any obligations to keep secret all the workings of the order? There is no virtue in these trifles in promoting temperance. Examine any of the orders and you will find that a small amount of temperance is covered over by a huge pile of form, show, ritual, nonsense, and fraternity paraphernalia. The huge display of symbol, initiation, and ritual, is a hindrance and not a help. A man might as well expect to do effective work in his field or garden wrapped up in his bed clothes, as Good Templar to advance temperance by lodge, grip, and password.—Birmingham, Iowa, Free Press.

Organizations are springing up here and there based on the old Know-Nothing idea of "America for Americans." They are an indication of a great series of problems that are facing us in the future. These problems are the outgrowth of the vast influx of foreign-born citizens, with their foreign ideas and customs. The immigration in five years just past has outnumbered the entire foreign population of thirty years ago. Steam and its developments have brought the two halves of the world twelve times as near as they were a generation ago. As a result the saloon, the brothel, the godless Sabbath, the laxity of marriage relations, and socialism have been bred, and some of them are now dominating in the field of politics. The problems of the future revolve around this question—Shall America Americanize the foreign born or be foreignized by them? The key to the solution of the problem is to smash the saloon—the greatest propagator of foreignizing tendencies in the nation and the lever which gives to them political power.—Daily Voice.

The question of whether organized labor is to play a more important part in politics than it has done, is a question not easily answered. The one thing against any increase in its influence is the fact that the direction of a political party by secret societies is un-American, and has always been antagonized by a great majority of the voters of this country. There is good reason for this. On the plan adopted by the labor unions and the Knights of Labor, if they go into politics, a majority of an assembly or a union or a lodge may compel all the members of that union or assembly to vote as the majority dictate. There were scores of men on Tuesday, good Republicans, who excused themselves for voting the United Labor ticket by saying that their oath compelled them to do it. If this is true, then the Labor party can not hold the balance of power between any parties. If by this secret organization they should succeed in compelling Republicans and Democrats to support independent or Democratic candidates, and should succeed in making the demands of labor an issue, then they would invite the combination of business men, professional men, and laborers outside of the organizations against them. It is because of this that Mr. Powderly has deprecated the introduction of politics into the Knights of Labor assemblies. The combination of a class on a class issue simply leads to combination of other classes against the one class, and no one class can ever succeed against the several others.—Inter Ocean.

LITERATURE.

The November Century begins the promised life of Abraham Lincoln with the good wishes of every patriot; and the trusted friends of the nation's martyr begin their work well in their first installment, "Lincoln as a Pioneer." For fullness of interesting detail of all those incidents and particulars of family life and hardship on the frontier, which have by a wise and wonderful providence been worked into the life of the nation, this work opens with surpassing interest. An excellent portrait of Lincoln, after a photograph by Heiler of this city, taken about 1860, accompanies the opening chapters, together with full-page portraits of his step mother and of Daniel Boone. Theodore Roosevelt, Republican candidate for mayor of New York, writes of "Machine Politics" in that city. Since his defeat last week he may now wish to write a supplementary paragraph from Europe, where he has suddenly gone. The war sketches are of unusual interest as the critical field of Gettysburg is approached. The change from Hooker to Meade and the first day's battle are embraced in this number.

The English Illustrated Magazine continues its sketches of historical places in England and on the continent, accompanied with fine engravings. Bristol, Clifton, Coventry, Nimes, Carcassonne, and Marseilles are portrayed this month.

Those who appreciate thorough Bible-study are finding in The Old Testament Student some very valuable aid. The number for November completes a paper by Prof. Denio on "The Kingdom of God in the Old Testament." Dr. Francis Brown of Union Theological Seminary gives a resume of "Commentaries on Exodus." The views of Prof. Franz Delitzsch on an important question of Old Testament Interpretation are an interesting feature of the issue.

THE HOME.

AUTUMN.

Shorter and shorter now the twilight clips
The days as through the sunset gates they crowd,
And summer from her golden collar slips
And strays through stubble fields and moans aloud;

Save when by fits the warmer air deceives,
And stealing hopeful to some sheltered bower,
She lies on pillows of the yellow leaves
And tries the old tunes over for an hour.

The wind, whose tender whisper in the May Set all the young blooms listening through the grove,
Sits rustling in the faded boughs to-day,
And makes his cold and unsuccessful love.

The rose has taken off her tire of red;
The mullein stalk its yellow stars has lost,
And the proud meadow-pink hangs down her head
Against earth's chilly bosom, withered with the frost.

The robin that was busy all the June
Before the sun had kissed the topmost bough,
Catching our hearts up in his golden tune,
Has given place to the barn cricket now.

The very cock crows lonesomely at morn;
Each flag and fern the shrinking stream divides;
Uneasy cattle low, and lambs forlorn
Creep to their strawy sheds with nettled sides.

Shut up the door; who loves me must not look Upon the withered world, but haste to bring
His lighted candle and his story book,
And love with me the poetry of spring.

"THE LOVE OF GOD WHICH IS IN CHRIST JESUS OUR LORD."

Several summers since I was preaching in a little school house on the south shore of Massachusetts, where I was spending a part of my vacation. At the close of one service, held on a week night, at which there were about one hundred and fifty persons present (a large portion of whom were summer guests residing in the neighborhood), a lady came up and spoke to me, and in a very patronizing manner told me that she had "quite enjoyed" my discourse. To which I replied expressing thanks that she had been pleased, and then in turn asked her a question which is common with me under these circumstances.

"And are you a Christian, madam?"

"I believe in God," was her reply.

"Yes; but are you a Christian?" I again asked.

"Well, I suppose not in your sense."

"Never mind my sense," I replied. "Are you a Christian in any sense?"

"Well, I have no doubt that Jesus Christ was a very good man, and that he lived and died perhaps as you have said; but then I do not believe that he was the Son of God."

"Then you do not believe the record which God has given of him in the Bible?"

"No, I do not believe the Bible is a divinely inspired book. I can not believe that the accounts of the birth and resurrection of Jesus Christ are true. I believe them to be mere delusions, born of the enthusiasm of the early disciples of Christ, and probably invented or written about the second century; and the historical records, so-called in the Old Testament, are too absurd and improbable to be taken any serious thought of except as allegories or religious fables."

"Then," I replied, with a surprised tone, "you are an infidel."

"Oh! no, I am not an infidel; for I believe in God with all my heart and soul."

"Indeed," I replied. "And in what God do you believe?"

"Why, in the God of Nature; in the God of Love."

"And is the God of Nature the God of Love?"

"Why, certainly," with much surprise in her tone.

"But, madam, pardon me, how and where did you find out that the God of Nature is the God of Love? Who informed you of that truth? In what ancient religious book or modern philosophical treatise did you come across this discovery? I ask you this question not out of captiousness, but very sincerely; for you must know that the question of the disposition of the God of the universe toward his creatures has been a matter of speculative controversy since men began to make inquiry into the being and attributes of God. So far as I know, the Bible alone, among all books, has clearly taught us this sublime truth, and Jesus Christ is the complete revelation and embodiment of the love of God."

"Oh!" was her prompt reply, "I do not need to consult books, either religious or philosophical, to teach me that God is Love. Nature is my teacher. I am an artist, don't you know, and I spend my summers by the sea and in the woods sketching; and all Nature speaks to me of the love of God. The music of the sea as it laps the shingles on the beach, the sighing of the evening zephyrs, the moonlight on the water, the beautiful foliage of the trees and the lovely green grass that carpets the earth, the beauty and the fragrance of the flowers, the twinkling of the stars in the clear heavens above, the glinting of the sunbeams through the leaves and branches of the trees, the singing of the birds and—oh! everything in Nature reminds me that God is Love. I think it is a horrid doctrine which you ministers preach that the love of God is revealed and manifested in the awful story of the crucifixion of Jesus Christ. I can not believe in such a cruel God. For if he were Love he would never have allowed his Son to be murdered as the Jews murdered Jesus Christ, and especially would he never have deliberately given him up to such a death, and refused to answer him when he called out, 'My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?' No God of Love would ever have acted in that manner toward his Son."

And so she went in a kind of poetical rhapsody over Nature and in a polite tirade against the story of the cross. I let her talk on until she stopped, almost out of breath, and then replied to her somewhat as follows:

"My dear madam, all that you say about the sea, and the flowers, and the sunlight, and the voice of birds is very beautiful; but last month, just over there in sight of land there was a noble ship dashed to pieces on the rocks, and more than fifty sailors who had been away from home two years ago on a whaling voyage were sent to the bottom of the ocean, almost in sight and hearing of their wives and children. Tell me, what does the frightful and merciless fury of the ocean, when lashed by storm and tempest, teach you? If the flowers tell of the love of God, what do the poisonous weeds and ivy teach you? If the song of birds teaches you that God is Love, what does the hiss of the rattle-snake teach you? If the sunshine glinting through the trees and falling in lines of silvery light upon the green carpeted earth, teach that God is Love, what does the blasting lightning and the desolating tornado teach you?"

She looked almost dazed for a moment, and then, with a shrug of her shoulders which was almost a shudder, she calmly said: "Oh! I never allow myself to think of such awful things. My religion is to look on the bright side and not on the dark side of life. My religion makes me hopeful and glad; yours makes you gloomy and sad." And with this she bade me good night, and left the little school-house, shutting her eyes to storm and rattlesnakes, and thinking blissfully only of the glinting sunshine and the song of birds.

Now, as a matter of fact, this good lady had plagiarized the doctrine of the Bible which teaches us that God is Love in Jesus Christ, and then had thrown the Bible overboard, rejected Jesus Christ, and tacked the truth she had filched from God's Book onto her system of unbelief, and supposed that she had gleaned this truth from Nature. This is the religion of sentimentalism which so many are deluding their souls with. A half truth stolen from the Bible, but which has no force or power separated from Jesus Christ, is their "stock in trade."

God is Love and God is a heavenly Father; but these truths are not discovered out of or apart from Jesus Christ; nor can we come into the blessing of them except through him who is at once the revealer and embodiment of them. The love of God is in Christ Jesus our Lord, and is found nowhere else. We shall never weary proclaiming the blessed truth that God is Love, and that "he that dwelleth in Love dwelleth in God and God in him; but we can only proclaim it or even know it in Christ. All saving truth is "in him." "In him we have redemption, through his blood the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of his grace, wherein he hath abounded toward us in all wisdom and prudence." "In him is life," "in him" God is well pleased with us; "in him" we are seated together in the heavenly places; and without or apart from him we neither know God nor have any part in his eternal saving Love. This is a truth so important that it can not be urged too intensely, or too frequently.

WHAT TWO BLIND MEN COULDN'T SEE.

There was a friend of mine preaching on Glasgow Green a few years ago, when some one from the crowd called out, "May I speak?" After getting permission, he pushed his way through the crowd, until he was standing on the platform beside my friend.

"Friends," he exclaimed, "I do not believe what this man has been talking about. I do not believe in a hell, I do not believe in a judgment, I do not believe in a God, for I never saw any of them."

He continued talking in this way for a while, when another voice was heard from the crowd, "May I speak?" The infidel sat down, and the next man began:

"Friends, you say there is a river running not far from this place, the river Clyde. There is no such thing; it is not true. You tell me that there are grass and trees growing around me where I now stand; there is no such thing; that also is untrue. You tell me that there are a great many people standing here. Again I say, that it is not true; there is no person standing here save myself. I suppose you wonder what I am talking about; but, friends, I was born blind. I never have seen one of you, and while I talk, it only shows that I am blind, or I would not say such things. And you," he said, turning to the infidel, "the more you talk, the more it exposes your own ignorance, because you are spiritually blind, and cannot see. Dear friends, try the life that Christ lived. There you will find life and love and everlasting joy."—R. B. Stewart.

SUNLIGHT ALL THE WAY.

Good-by, Jennie, the road is long,
And the moor is hard to cross;
But well you know there is danger
In the bogs and the marshy moss.
So keep in the footpath, Jennie,
Let nothing tempt you to stray,
Then you'll get safely over it,
For there's sunlight all the way.

The child went off with a blessing
And a kiss of mother-love;
And the daisies were down at her feet,
And the lark was singing above.
On, on the narrow foot-path—
Nothing could tempt her to stray;
So the moor was passed at nightfall,
And she'd sunlight all the way.

And I, who followed the maiden,
Kept thinking, as I went Over the perilous moor of life,
What unwary feet are bent,
If they could only keep the foot-path,
And not in the marshes stray,
Then they could reach the end of life
Ere the night could shroud the day.

THE FAMOUS BELLS OF THE WORLD.

It is not improbable that Tubal Cain, the sixth in descent from Adam, "an instructor of every artificer in brass and iron," may have known something of the art of making bells. Church bells originated in Italy, being formed by degrees out of the symbols and small tinkling bells used in the religious ceremonies of the East as a means of honoring the gods. Although first introduced in the fourth century, it was not until the sixth century that they were suspended in the roofs of churches.

The hours of the day were first ordered to be struck by Pope Sebastian in 605, to announce to the people the time for singing and praying. Bells were often baptized and consecrated with great pomp, the priests anointing them with oil, washing them with water, and making the sign of the cross in the name of the Trinity. They were named as early as 968, the great bell of the Lateran Church at Rome being named by Pope John XIII. in honor of himself.

The largest bell in the world is in Moscow, the city of bells. It was cast, by order of the Empress Anne, in 1653. It is twenty-one feet four and a half inches in height, twenty-two feet five and a half inches in diameter where the clapper strikes; its circumference at the bottom is sixty-three feet, its thickness twenty-three inches, and its tongue fourteen feet long.

Fifty men were required to ring this monster bell, twenty-five pulling upon each side. In 1837 the Czar Nicholas caused it to be disinterred from its bed of sand where it was lodged during the conflagration of 1737, and placed it on the granite pedestal where it now rests. It was then consecrated as a chapel, the entrance being through a large fracture caused by falling timbers in the fire of 1737. The value of the metal is $330,000. It is said that at the casting of this bell nobles were present from all parts of Europe, who vied with each other in the value of the silver plate, gold jewelry and other votive offerings which they cast into the furnace.

There are 5,000 large bells in Moscow, alone, thirty-seven being in one tower. Whoever has visited Russia recalls the sound of the great bells which form a part of the religious worship, and are regarded by the Russians with such superstitious veneration.

The bells of China are next in size to those of Russia. In the suburbs of Pekin is the largest suspended bell in the world. To ring it a huge beam is swung against its side. There are in Pekin seven bells, each weighing 120,000 pounds. At Nankin is a bell the weight of which is 50,000 pounds. The tone of these bells, however, is discordant and "pan-ny," like that of the Chinese gongs.

The bell of St. Paul's, London, weighs 11,500 pounds, that of the Cathedral of Paris 38,000, and of Vienna 40,000 pounds. The bell of St. Peter's, at Rome, weighs 17,000 pounds. Notre Dame Cathedral, Canada, has a bell larger than any in England, its weight being 29,400 pounds, while that of the House of Parliament in London weighs 28,000 pounds. When it is remembered that the largest bells heard in our American cities rarely weigh more than three or four thousand pounds, some idea may be had of the volume of tone which belongs to the monster bells above described.

The heaviest bell ever made in the United States was the alarm bell formerly in the City Hall in New York. It weighed 23,000 pounds. In 1867 it was broken, and re-cast in smaller fire bells.

The most celebrated bell in the United States is that known as the "Liberty Bell" in Philadelphia. It was imported from England in 1752, cracked by a trial stroke, and recast in Philadelphia by Isaac Norris. On the 4th of July, 1776, the bell announced the signing of the Declaration of Independence. It was again cracked while being rung in honor of Henry Clay's visit to Philadelphia, and since then has been on exhibition in Independence Hall. It bears the following inscription, taken from Leviticus 25th chapter, 10th verse, "Proclaim liberty throughout the land unto all the inhabitants thereof."

The "Great Tom" of Oxford, weighing 17,000 pounds, bears the following curious inscription, whence its name:

"In Thomae laude resono Bim-Bon, sine fraude."

On the largest of the three bells placed by Edward III in the Little Sanctuary, Westminster, are these words:

"King Edward made me thirthe thousand weight and three; Take me down and wey me, and more you shall find me."

On a bell in Durham Cathedral is inscribed:

"To call the folks to church in time,
I chime;
When mirth and pleasure's on the wing,
I ring;
And when the body leaves the soul,
I toll."

On a bell at Lapsley, in Staffordshire, England:

"I will sound and resound to thee, O Lord,
To call thy people to thy word."

In Meivod Church, Montgomeryshire:

"I to the church the living call,
And to the grave do summon all."

The following motto may still be seen on some of the bells that have swung in their steeples for centuries:

"Men's death I tell by doleful knell;
Lightning and thunder I break asunder."

The motto of Schiller's ever memorable Song of the Bell was common to the church bells of the Middle Ages, and may still be found on the great minster of Schaffhausen, and on that of the church near Lucerne:

"Vivos voco—Mortuos plango—Fulgura frango"—(I call the living—I mourn the dead—I break the lightning.)

In the belfry of old St. Michael's Church, Charleston, South Carolina, there is a chime of bells with which there is quite a bit of history connected, and which have had a more romantic career than many more famous bells.

These bells, eight in number, were imported from England in 1764, at a cost of £581. On the evacuation of Charleston, in 1782, Major Traill, of the Royal Artillery, took them down under the pretense that they were a military perquisite, belonging to the commanding officer. The vestry of the church applied to Lieutenant-General Leslie to have them restored, on the ground that they were paid for by subscription, and private property was secure under the terms of the capitulation. No answer was returned. Sir Gny Carleton, at New York, however, anticipated the wish of the vestry, and ordered the bells to be restored. Meanwhile they had been shipped to England. The vestry then applied to the Secretary of War of Great Britain, but without success. They were sold; and being purchased by a Mr. Rhinew, were generously reshipped by him to Charleston in 1783. They chimed their hallowed music thenceforward until 1863, when, Charleston being in a state of siege, they were removed to Columbia, South Carolina, and deposited in the State-house grounds. Here they were destroyed in the burning of Columbia, February, 1865. After the war they were again sent to England, and, strange as it may appear, recast by the descendants of the original founders, and returned to their old Revolutionary home, where they still mark the footsteps of the hours, and link with every tone the present with the tenderest associations of the past.—Harper's Young People.

TEMPERANCE.

THE LIQUOR POWER AND OPEN AIR PREACHING IN BOSTON.

From the report of the evangelist, William F. Davis of Chelsea, Mass., the following account of the attempt to break up preaching on the Boston Common is taken:

It is getting to be well known that Boston liquor-sellers, not content with robbing the workingmen and their families, emptying churches, shutting up schools, crowding to repletion tenement houses, alms houses, houses of correction, police stations, jails, courts of justice, prisons, insane asylums, and streets, with imbeciles, ruffians and idiots, turning the Lord's day into a howling pandemonium, enslaving the Republican party, corrupting the ballot, and killing outright about 7,500 Boston citizens a year, has at last deliberately undertaken the suppression of the free public preaching of the Gospel in Boston. Nevertheless, the rum power could have no power at all but by the consent of the people.

The saloonocracy of Boston, Haman-like, has daringly, yet stealthily, attempted the subversion of the free public preaching of the Gospel, by a perversion of the civil government to that end in all its functions, legislative, executive, and judicial.

Must Mordecai therefore prostrate himself before Haman?

Twenty years ago, Wendell Phillips, our incorruptible tribune of the people, asserted before a mammoth audience in Tremont Temple that for twenty years the mayor and aldermen of Boston had been chiefly a standing committee of the grog-shops and brothels. But it is doubtful whether even he was then aware how large a "job" that standing committee had already undertaken.

On the 4th of January, 1862, four years before Phillips's speech, the drink-dragon slyly threw a coil around Boston in the form of a city ordinance which was numbered among the by-laws, "Sec. 11." [Chapter 37] and reads: "No person shall deliver any sermon, lecture, address or discourse on the Common, Public Garden, public squares, or common lands of the city without permission of the mayor or aldermen." That ordinance was not only couched in language opposed to the express command contained in our Gospel commission, but was also in daring defiance of the most sacred guaranties of the United States Constitution, and of the Massachusetts Bill of Rights. Did it therefore take the lawful precedence of the everlasting Gospel of God and of the world-venerated constitutions of the United States and of Massachusetts?

But when enacted, that ordinance was not published to the people, nor recorded in the clerk's office of the superior court as required by statute law. Snuggled into the city hall by these enemies of all righteousness, it lay, silent and passive, like a dynamite bomb, yet ready to be exploded whenever the saloon conspirators decided to act.

Because these conspirators were in the city council, shall their treason against our government go unchallenged?

But a whispered rumor of the existence of this nefarious by-law got abroad.

Early in the fourth month of 1882, the writer called on the chief of Boston police and asked, "Does the city of Boston construe the free public preaching of the Gospel on the public grounds of the city as a breach of the peace?" The chief referred me to the police commissioners. The police commissioners, when asked the same question, desired time to consult the city solicitor.

After thrice postponing their answer promised for a given time, the commissioners replied, "We have conferred with the city solicitor and find we have no authority to grant you a permit to preach on the Common or on any other public grounds of the city." To this the writer replied, "Gentlemen, you evade my question. You are not asked for a permit to preach; but whether the city of Boston assumes an attitude of hostility towards the free, public preaching of the Gospel on the Common and public parks, where the people have the right to freely assemble."

After some further parleying, the missionary asked, "Will you be kind enough to tell me whether you construe the free public preaching of the Gospel in Boston as a breach of the peace or not? Will you, or will you not, instruct the policemen to break up an orderly Gospel meeting on public grounds, which does not obstruct any thoroughfare of the city nor trespass on private rights?"

"Oh, no!" promptly responded the chairman, "we should never do that."

The missionary withdrew and held open-air meetings during the five ensuing months on public squares and commons in Boston nearly every Lord's day, and no policemen interfered with any of the meetings, nor intimated that a seditious city ordinance was in existence, which demanded such interference.

The police of Boston, as a rule, have greatly desired to spare the city the disgrace and the demoralization of attempting to enforce an essentially wicked and unconstitutional ordinance. But the liquor power was shameless and insatiate.

Why should the whisky ring doubt its power to throttle Gospel ministers? Burrowing night and day, it has tunneled its roads from the saloons to the city hall, undermining numberless homes, and even dispersing public schools in its progress.

Its horrible party sorceries, transforming our earlier democracy and republicanism into our modern democracy and rumppublicanism, and driving both the corrupted old parties in one span, yoked to its monstrous beer-wagon, left little else besides the ministers of Christ to be conquered.

When God is ready to set Boston as Sodom and Gomorrah, as Admah and Zeboim, then the saloon will silence the free, public proclamation of the Gospel in Boston, and not till then. Meanwhile Satan cracks the whip over his team with varying results.

On the twentieth day of the 7th month of 1884, a patrolman, acting under orders from the lieutenant of station 4, broke up a Gospel meeting which the writer was conducting on Boston Common, similar meetings having been addressed by him on the two previous Lord's days on the same spot, without interruption.

At the station, the lieutenant quoted to the missionary in defense of the assault which he had ordered to be committed upon him, sec. 11, chapter 37, of the revised by-laws of Boston printed in 1883. That section declares that, "No person shall, except by the permission of the said committee, deliver a sermon, lecture, address, or discourse on the Common or any other public grounds." (Italics mine.) It will be noticed that the weapon which the city council of Boston had previously framed against the Word of God, is here committed to the custody of the "said committee," a joint committee from the aldermen and city council, whose chairman was a wholesale and retail rumrunner of Boston.

As a law-abiding voter of Massachusetts, a loyal citizen of the United States, and a preacher of the Gospel of God, it was my bounden duty to continue preaching Christ publicly and freely until convinced that our commonwealth is hopelessly given over to destruction.

Accordingly I returned to the Common, on the first Lord's day of the eighth month, just two weeks after the police had broken up our meeting, and preached at the same place as before. Seven policemen were reported on the ground, but they ranged themselves under the national and state Bills of Rights and statute law, and not under the insurrectionary ordinance against preaching.

During the remainder of the summer, large and attentive audiences gathered every Lord's day to listen to the word preached, and the police were as peaceable as any persons on the ground.

On the 17th day of the fifth month of 1885, the summer campaign of open-air preaching began on Boston Common quite vigorously. Several meetings were held. The liquor oligarchy at once assailed the preachers through the agency of the courts, and brought cases against ten ministers for daring to preach the Gospel in public without a permit from the common committee. The judge promptly condemned and sentenced us to pay ten dollars apiece. Some paid, others appealed to the Superior Court. Bail was offered for your missionary's appearance by strangers, and on the following Lord's day it was my privilege, in company with Bro. H. L. Hastings, to read and comment on portions of the New Testament, again on the Common.

For this act we were brought before the court and fined thirty dollars. Praise the Lord! We appealed from that decision, and friends gave bail for our appearance to justify the appeal. Lawyer J. F. Pickering freely gave us his valuable services in defense of our case.

Meanwhile the writer continued to hold Gospel meetings on Boston Common every Lord's day until near the close of the tenth month. These meetings were often baptized with the heart-searching power of the Holy Spirit. At the last meeting but one, about three hundred souls in the great assembly yielded to Christ's claim and asked prayers for his guidance. It was a joy to hold up the Saviour before these thousands of un-churched people, and see the wistful faces of bronzed laboring men, jaded women, and children of all ages, eagerly drinking in the Gospel message.

On the afternoon of the thirteenth day of the first month of 1886, the Superior Municipal Court of Boston called the case of William F. Davis, convicted of twice preaching the Gospel on Boston Common, during the previous summer, without a permit from the common committee. The defendant stood up, was told that the Superior Court rejected his appeal, and he was fined ten dollars and costs for the first offence and thirty dollars for the second. The "costs" connected with the first fine were forty-one dollars and thirty-five cents. Therefore the sum of both fines and costs was eighty-one dollars and thirty-five cents, and the defendant was ordered "to stand committed until paid." Accordingly he stood committed, and took a seat indicated by the sheriff until that officer should be ready to conduct him to jail. [Against the remonstrance of Bro. Davis Pastor S. P. Cook of the Third Congregational church, Chelsea, raised the money and paid the fine.—ED. CYNOSURE.]

Learning that no services had been held on Boston Common this season [1886] I walked into the city the following morning, which was the Lord's day, attended the meetings of the Society of Friends at half past ten A. M. and at two P. M. preached on that part of Boston Common known as Flagstaff Hill, where I have conducted free Gospel meetings every summer but one since the first Lord's day of the sixth month of 1882. While preaching a policeman commanded me to stop. But the Lord had commanded me to go on. Accordingly I stopped long enough to give my name and address to the policeman, and then went on with the preaching.

The services, lasting an hour and a half, were attentively listened to by about five hundred people, a few of whom testified their acceptance of the Saviour by uplifted hands at the close.

During the three ensuing summer months, it has been my privilege to preach the Gospel out-doors and in-doors every Lord's day, and on many week-days besides. Eight Lord's days I have held meetings on Boston Common.

The first two of these meetings were the only ones in any way disturbed by those set to be the defenders of the peace. All were well attended, and were orderly, with the slight exception just mentioned.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—The evangelist Moody, says the Y. M. C. A. Watchman, has held a series of meetings at Auburn, N. Y. He goes next to Wheeling, W. Va.; then to Harvard College. Major D. W. Whittle is following up the meetings at Auburn; Alexander Patterson will follow up the meetings at Wheeling. Mr. Sankey has returned from England and will probably soon join Mr. Moody.

—A census of the attendance of the churches of London was taken Nov. 2. It showed that 460,000 persons attended the services in the morning, and 410,000 at night. The largest established church, St. Paul's, had an evening attendance of 3,403. Mr. Spurgeon's church was at the head of the dissenting churches, having a morning attendance of 4,519, and an evening attendance of 6,070.

—The proposed union between the United Presbyterian Church and the Associate Reformed Presbyterian Church of the South has failed, for the present at least. The Synod of the South withholds its consent. A basis of union had been proposed by committees appointed by the two bodies, and it was very largely favored by the United Presbyterians, to whom the vote in the South will be a disappointment.

—During the past year the New York City Mission has provided 3,000 Gospel meetings, 75,000 visits have been made among the poor, and 500,000 tracts, leaflets, and books have been distributed among a half-million men, women, and children. The churches for the people under the care of the mission have increased in membership and usefulness, and the Sabbath-schools have in many instances outgrown the buildings provided for their use.

—The annual meeting of the Inter-Seminary Missionary Alliance was held during the last week in October in Oberlin, Ohio, with over one hundred delegates in attendance.

—The South Carolina Synod, in session at Cheraw, has requested Professor Woodrow, who is accused of teaching the doctrine of evolution, to resign his chair in the Theological Seminary.

—Rev. Jeremiah O'Hearn, a priest of the Roman Catholic church, has been received into the Baptist church at Dallas, Texas. He had spent three years investigating and studying the Baptist faith.

—Jones, the Georgia revivalist, finished a three weeks' revival in Toronto, Oct. 27, in which he was assisted by Mr. Small. While Jones was the most popular man in Toronto among a very large number of his admirers, in no other city has he met with such severe criticism. Clergymen, mostly of the Church of England, and prominent citizens have attacked him in the newspapers most violently, charging him with being blasphemous, and by his peculiar conduct in the meetings creating more infidels than Christians. He was also severely censured for his habit of smoking.

—A convention in defence of purity of worship was held in the United Presbyterian church at Ainsworth, Iowa, Oct. 19. Rev. William Wishart, D. D., was chosen president, and Rev. George Warrington secretary. Rev. James Brown, D. D., addressed the convention on the subject of Psalmody. Dr. Wishart opened the discussion of the subject of instrumental music with an able address. In the evening Mr. Warrington opened the discussion on secret societies. It was decided to organize permanently, and a committee was appointed for this purpose.

—In the last fourteen years 700 Protestant chapels have been built in the Island of Madagascar, making the present number 1,200. There are 8,000 Protestant communicants, and all the churches are self-supporting.

—A congress of evangelical workers is soon to be held in Mexico, representing all denominations now engaged in that fiercely contested field of labor. The Presbyterian, Methodist Episcopal, and Methodist Church South constitute the nucleus of the movement.

—A Free Church of Scotland paper says: "Not long ago in Nyanza, in Africa, three lads suffered martyrdom. They were bound alive to a scaffolding under which a fire was made, and they were slowly roasted to death. Their persecutors taunted them, bidding them pray to Isa Mayisa (Jesus Christ) and see if he would rescue them. The lads clung to their faith, singing their hymns in the fire. One of their tormentors was so impressed by their Christian fortitude that he has determined to become a Christian also."

—The Lutheran Standard observes respecting the effort of the United Brethren church to maintain foreign mission work in Germany: "No wonder the representatives of the German church do not care to fellowship with the sects at the meetings of the Evangelical Alliance, where professions are so easily made only to be flagrantly broken by such missionary enterprises. Germany has at the present day no small part in the missionary work of the world. There are twelve German societies laboring in India, China, Africa, the East Indies, Australia, and Palestine. They are represented by 517 missionaries at 342 stations, are employing 2,560 native agents, and have in charge 193,975 native Christians. Of these, 72,000 are communicants, while, 40,643 children are taught in their 790 schools. The total contributions of these societies last year were $1,276,800. The record of Scandinavia is equally honorable."

—The subject of probation after death has been brought up in the State Synod of the Presbyterian church, at Alleghany, Pa. Rev. Arthur T. Pierson, of Philadelphia, presented resolutions stating that the gradual departure from orthodox beliefs was alarming in its extent, and calling upon the ministers to exercise vigilance and oppose the spread of any false theology. The debate which followed showed that the so-called New Departure was referred to. At the latest accounts no positive action had been taken on the subject.

OBITUARY.

WILLIAM K. GUILD, of Wheaton, Ill., who, October 27, 1886, passed away to his reward, was born in Brookfield, Mass., July 4th, 1819. His parents were very poor, and when he was ten years of age he began the struggle of life for himself. He worked for his board winters and went to school. In the summer he earned what he could at various forms of manual labor, diligently economizing so that in 1839, when the family came west, he had not only supported himself and paid one hundred dollars for his time, but had laid aside so much money as was required to defray the expenses of the family on the journey to Illinois.

His parents located in Wayne, and he aided in supporting the family, giving his entire wages for that purpose until 1844, when he married Miss Lydia A. Ford, whose family had moved from New York to Wayne. After his marriage he settled upon his own claim at Wayne Center, where he was a successful farmer until he removed to Wheaton in 1867. Here he has been, as all know, a public spirited citizen and an enterprising business man. He has been a successful lumber merchant during most of his residence here. He has served several times on the Town Board; was for years a director in our public schools; was a benefactor to the College, and now, after a short illness, he has "fallen asleep in Jesus."

His religious history is quite as interesting as this account of his business career. He was converted when about fifteen years of age and immediately united with the Methodist church. When he came west, at twenty, he at once professed his Christian faith in the Congregational church at St. Charles, and for years drove regularly the eight miles between his home and the church. He was one of the original members of the church at Wayne; was one of its deacons for almost twenty years; read sermons when there was no pastor; was superintendent of the Sabbath-school, and his home was the recognized headquarters of all the ministers, evangelists, Bible agents, and colporteurs who labored in that region. When he removed to Wheaton he, as usual, at once identified himself with the people of God. He united with the College church; was elected one of its deacons, and had the same intelligent interest in the cause of Christ which he had ever manifested.

Since Mr. Guild came to years of manhood three great religious movements have agitated the American mind; the temperance awakening, the abolition of slavery and the abolition of secret societies. On each of these questions he stood for the truth. He saw very clearly that after devils were cast out, Christ must enter the soul or the man could not be saved. It was in consequence of the perception of this truth that he valued the church so highly that he at times seemed to disregard other agencies which God has appointed for the help of men in their warfare with evil. He above all things "believed in the Gospel of Jesus Christ," and was anxious that nothing should even appear to take its place.

Of him happily it can be said that those who knew him best loved him most, and mourn most deeply his departure. Yet they have a great blessing in the happy recollections which are their possession and the glorious hope which is the lasting possession.

HOME HINTS.

THE VALUE OF FRUIT AS FOOD.

Few people are aware of the value of fruit as an article of food. Many persons look on fruit as a luxury, whilst some shudder at the idea of it, and conjure up internal tortures at the name. Children, on the contrary, will eat fruit at any time, and undergo much discomfort to get it. It is elderly people, or those past their first youth, who cannot eat fruit and enjoy it. Cooked foods, highly seasoned meats, and alcoholic liquors have spoiled their taste, and in many instances a ripe strawberry or plum would inconvenience them sadly. But the person who values health, and who knows a little of the value of fruit, will make it a point to eat it daily, and even on occasions to make a meal almost entirely of it. Another cause why ripe and wholesome fruits are given a bad name is because they are eaten at the wrong end of a meal. After many courses of heavy foods and strong drinks, a few harmless strawberries are indulged in, and then when these rich foods and stimulating drinks upset the stomach the blame is put on the innocent strawberry. The real place for fruit is at the beginning of a feast, and not at the end. A better plan still is to make a meal of bread and ripe fruit. The best meals to make thus are breakfast, lunch, or early tea. The bread should be brown and dry, and the fruit ripe and raw. Dry brown bread cleans the tongue and brings out the flavor of the fruit. Butter on the bread would give its own flavor, or even the salt in the butter would destroy the pure taste of the fruit.

Many people—a good number of whom are doctors—are of opinion that autumnal diarrhoea is due to fruit. This is an idea not borne out by facts. I inquired into the subject, and found that in every case the diarrhoea was due to meat or fish, but never to fruit alone. I have experimented on myself, and got other friends to test the result of free fruit eating on themselves, but in no case as yet have I got a report of diarrhoea from it. I lived one day last summer on strawberries, managing to eat seven pounds during the day, but I had no diarrhoea. Other times I have lived on plums and milk, and have eaten freely of cherries and other fruits in their seasons, but never had looseness of the bowels in consequence. The true explanation of autumnal diarrhoea lies in the fact that in hot weather flesh putrefies very quickly, during putrefaction alkaloids called ptomaines are formed; these are emetic and purgative, and give rise to distressing symptoms. These alkaloids are found in meat at all times, but more especially during hot weather.

Fruit has the composition of a perfect food, containing all the substances required by the body. Here is the composition of strawberries:

	per cent.
Water.....	87
Sugar.....	4
Free Acid.....	1 1/2
Nitrogen.....	1/2
Insoluble matter (1/2 per cent of which is ash).....	7
	100

From this table we can see that fruit is a perfect food, as it contains everything needed, including water.

Fruit used daily by all there would be less gout, rheumatism, gall stones, degeneration in the bladder, and calcareous deposition than there is now. In connection with the curative power of fruit, we must mention the "Grape cure." This is practiced in France and Germany in the autumn, and is a cure for many diseases due to high feeding. The patient is given a pound of grapes to eat the first day. This amount is added to until the person can eat five or six pounds a day. The other food is gradually lessened, and the diet at last consists entirely of grapes. It cures obesity and many other complaints, and starts the person off on a new lease of life. In this country we may partly eat out this cure, using strawberries, gooseberries, cherries, and plums in place of grapes. Fruit is thus seen to be a necessity in a rational diet, and of immense value in dietetic medicine. — Vick's Magazine.

The police are now making a specialty of the small boys with rubber slings who haunt the parks and suburbs in pursuit of small birds. The carriers of gin slings remain unmolested. — Inter Ocean.

BETWEEN TWO OPINIONS.

BY E. E. FLAGG.

Author of "Held with Cords," "A Sunny Life," "Little People," etc.

The Best Story of the Reform.

Price, only $1.00.

Published by THE NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

This latest and best of Miss Flagg's works is now ready in handsome print, neatly bound. The story begins in a quiet New England home, and paints its homely joys with a delicacy and truthfulness worthy the hand of Harriet Beecher Stowe. The scene then changes to a thriving, growing, palpitating young Western city, and with great power and startling accuracy the writer leads us behind the scenes that we may see the machinery that works the liquor traffic and labor troubles. The story of the strike, the mob, the attempted assassination, the saloon-keeper's wives, the curse of his trade, the power of the Christian faith to change him to a messenger of mercy, the criminal and the hidden power that shields him from justice, the land robbers' tricks, the dark and secret conspiracies of the lodge—these and all the incidents of the book are portrayed with rare tact and great power of description. It is emphatically a book for the hour. And what is better and yet more striking, the incidents are facts, and every one a powerful and convincing argument against the lodge and the saloon.

Every temperance man and woman should read this book. No temperance story like it was ever planned, much less ably executed. A wonderful light is thrown upon the difficulties in the way of prohibition. Learn how they may be avoided.

Every one who loves to read a good story, chaste and elegant in expression, in thought, true in incident, deeply interesting in its narrative, should read this

READ THESE NOTICES FROM THE PRESS:

The Free Methodist, Chicago.

"Between Two Opinions" is a story, its incidents vouched for as facts, which presents a powerful argument on these questions, and must attract thousands of readers among our thinking and observant people. The plot of the story is neither startling nor novel, but it develops a wonderful strength in following the experiences of people in the common, everyday walks of life.

Free Press, Birmingham, Iowa.

It differs from the popular story, "The Bread-winners" of a year ago. It greatly differs from that book in that it is written from the Christian standpoint, and its beautiful and touching descriptions of home life and home duties and heroic self-denials will waken a responsive echo in every heart, that has not by disposition lost the taste for the pure joys of home.

The Religious Telescope, Dayton.

The author, Miss Flagg, is a brilliant writer. The stirring questions in American politics are undoubtingly prohibition and the labor movement as championed by the secret unions of working men, which direct the strikes that with more and more frequency occur in our cities. "Between Two Opinions" is a story, its incidents vouched for as facts, which presents a powerful argument on these questions, and must attract thousands of readers among our thinking people.

The Christian Conservator, Dayton.

This is a charming book, written in an attractive manner. It is so full of sunshine and so radiant with light that one is enlightened, warmed, and, before they are conscious of it, set against the lodge. The style gleams, glows and sparkles. It is idyllic and simple. It is the right book to place in the hands of your wife or daughter to superinduce co-operation with you in anti-secrecy work. Every minister's wife should read it, and then, if her husband is not an Anti-secrecy man, he should take his turn next and become one.

The American, Washington.

We are reading, in spare moments, Miss Flagg's new book, "Between Two Opinions," and the estimate we have thus far put upon it is that it is masterly both in style and argument. One is insensibly made to feel that he is reading facts and not fiction; that the book is not a play upon the imagination but an unravelling of mysterious circumstances which have an important bearing upon current events.

THE BROKEN SEAL;

By Samuel D. Greene.

One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper covers, 40 cents; per dozen, $4.00.

This deeply interesting narrative shows what Masonry has done and is capable of doing in the Courts, and how land men control the good men in the lodge and protect their own members from the guilt of great crimes. For sale at 221 W. Madison St., Chicago, by THE NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

"THE WHOLE IS BETTER THAN A PART," AND YOU HAVE IT HERE IN A "NUT-SHELL."

SECRET SOCIETIES ILLUSTRATED.

Containing the signs, grips, passwords, emblems, etc. of Freemasonry (Blue Lodge and to the fourteenth degree of the York rite), Adonite Masonry, Revived Odd-fellowship, Good Templars, the Temple of Honor, the United Sons of Industry, Knights of Pythias and the Grange, with full index, etc. 200 pages, paper cover. Price, 25 cents; $2.00 per dozen.

For sale at 221 W. Madison St., Chicago, by THE NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION, at Headquarters for Anti-secrecy literature, 221 W. Madison St. Chicago.

Law and Order, Boston.

The book takes high ground for prohibition of the liquor curve, for women's built for home protection, and for a better and more honest brotherhood than is forced by their obligations upon the members of secret orders. It is, therefore, a valuable book for several large classes of American readers.

Christian Instructor, Philadelphia.

There are important questions pressing upon American politics to-day; two of them are prohibition and the labor question as connected with the secret unions of workmen. This work is an expose of the twin evils, secret societies and the saloons. The truths are given in the form of a story; not startling, but thrilling experiences of home life that are vouched for as facts. The evidences presented of the impossibility of reaching the saloon keeper so long as he and the officers of the law are sworn brothers in the den of some secret society, are conclusive enough to awaken the most careless and obtuse member of society. It is a valuable book for the masses to read.

Evangelist, Berea, Kentucky.

The object of the volume is to illustrate the practical workings of Secret Societies, and especially to show how the Lodge upholds the saloon, and this very important design is wrought out with much skill, clearness and power. By reading it temperance people may learn much about the difficulties in the way of prohibition.

The Standard, Chicago.

It is written in the interests of reform, more especially temperance and Anti-masonry. The title of the story suggests the special aim of it, which is to protest against all "balancing between two opinions;" in other words, is a plea for radicalism. The story is vigorously written, and will interest even readers who do not altogether believe in its doctrine.

The Pacific, San Francisco.

It is a story intended to do service against the saloons, and in favor of Women's Christian Temperance work, and especially against the secret orders—Freemasons, Odd-fellows, the Knights of Labor, etc. No reflecting man can doubt the very combination of picked classes and individuals is liable to great abuse. It is obvious, also, that secret orders are especially capable of being used in a selfish and unprincipled way.

REVISED ODD-FELLOWSHIP ILLUSTRATED.

IN BRIEF.

The relatives of Miss Carrie Welton, who was frozen in an attempt to climb Pike's Peak two years ago, are trying to invalidate her will, which bequeaths all her estate, valued at $300,000, to Henry Bergh for the use of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. Insanity is alleged.

A calf was killed in Zionville, Pa., one morning, the skin was at the tannery by noon, was tanned and turned over to a shoe-maker that evening, and by the next morning was made into a pair of boots which were worn by the man who owned the calf that had worn the skin the day before.

In New York the arrival of M. Sedelmeier, the Parisian art dealer, with Munkacsy's great picture of "Christ Before Pilate," which it is said he intends exhibiting throughout the country, has caused a flutter of excitement among the foreign art dealers, as he wishes to have it admitted free of duty as "an educational work."

During the cholera epidemic in Nashville, Tenn., the late Dr. Bowling attended an old blind negro, who eked out an existence by playing the flute at the street corners. He recovered, and with a heart overflowing with gratitude he took his flute and sat under the doctor's bed room window and played it the whole night long. Of all the large fees he ever received, the doctor said this was the largest.

Medical Record.
Willie Brough, a boy living with his parents near Turlock, Cal., is reported to be so charged with electricity that the snapping of his fingers causes sparks to fly. It is also stated that hay, straw, wall-paper, and other light substances burst into flame at a mere gaze from the boy, and that he had to be sent away from school owing to fire breaking out in the structure in a mysterious manner. An insurance agent will take no further risks on property in the neighborhood as long as Willie remains.

Secretary Lucius Quintus Cincinnatus Lamar is not the only big-named man in the Department of the Interior. There are also Lucius Quintus Cincinnatus Lamar, Jr., Private Secretary; William Andrew Jackson Sparks, Land Commissioner; Martin Van Buren Montgomery, Patents Commissioner; John De Witt Clinton Atkins, Indian Affairs Commissioner; Nathaniel Harrison Randolph Dawson, Education Commissioner; and John James Jones Scipio Hassler, Appointment Clerk.

The Chicago & Alton railroad takes many apprentices in its shops on a three months' novitiate. If the boy has mechanical aptitude he is registered for three years and three months as an apprentice, getting fifty five cents a day for three months, fifty-eight cents a day for a year, seventy-five cents a day for the next fifteen months, and one dollar a day for the last year. No indentures are required, and the right of suspension or discharge is reserved. Apprentices must have an order from parents or guardians to enable them to draw their wages.

What though, as Mr. Atkinson estimates, the annual loss of property in the United States by fire amounts to $100,000,000; the cost of maintaining fire insurance companies to $35,000,000, and of fire-extinguishing appliances to $35,000,000, making a total fire tax of $160,000,000, equal to $125 on each $100 worth of annual product, or between 10 and 15 per cent of the annual savings of the nation, the people of the United States—notwithstanding the example set them by early Spanish architects, the builders of Europe, and the dictates of experience and reason—will continue to erect for dwelling, manufacturing and commercial purposes, structures sometimes called "fire-proof" or "slow burning," which the flames lap up as readily as a cat does milk, and which when once on fire, become traps for human life; from which, in spite of warning and haste, it is generally very difficult, and too often impossible, to escape.

The old barbaric Moorish bull fights are still the chief amusement of the Spanish people; but the costliness of the pastime seems to check the too frequent recurrence of the exhibitions. From 3,000 to 4,000 horses are annually destroyed in encounters with bulls. The horseman, or "picador," usually escapes injury, as the attention of the infuriated animal is drawn off by "chulos," men provided with crimson banners. These are in turn supported by the "banderilleros," who are armed with darts with fire works and flags attached. Thus bleeding and scorched, the animal is despatched by the "matador," who plunges his long straight sword into the body, up to the very hilt. All classes in Spain delight in this sport.

ALL-NIGHT INHALATION!

"A positive revolution in the treatment of Air-Passage Diseases of the Nose, Throat, and Lungs, and for the purpose designed, as valuable a discovery as vaccination."

THE PILLOW-INHALER.

A Speedy, Positive and Permanent Cure for Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Incipient Consumption.

It is a hair pillow, with reservoirs of evaporating liquid, the fumes or vapor of which is inhaled all night long, whilst sleeping as usual, and without any discomfort. It is used only at night, and is perfectly safe to the most delicate. There is no stomach-dosing, douching or snuffing; but just as a smoky lamp will leave a deposit on a whitened wall so the PILLOW-INHALER, after a few minutes' use, spreads a powerful healing halm or salve on the inflamed inner coating of the diseased air-passages, from the nostrils to the bottom of the lungs, and hence into the blood. Old-fashioned inhalation, through a tube, for a few minutes a day, sometimes cures. Think of eight hours constant action, on the same principle, but intensified a hundred-fold! There are no pipes or tubes. The medicine is breathed in, not swallowed, and goes right to the diseased parts.

Box E. L. HANES, Dispenser of the Pillow-Inhaler, says: "I take pleasure in stating that the PILLOW-INHALER has been of the greatest relief, and I believe of permanent benefit to my wife, who has been a great sufferer from Bronchitis and Catarrhal Troubles, accompanied with distressing Asthma. I recommend its use to all persons afflicted with such troubles."

Mr. H. G. TARR, 50 Bryan Block, Chicago, Ill., says: "I suffer fifteen years from a severe case of Catarrh; cough incessantly day and night, and have no sleep, and no more strength. My lungs are no longer weak and sore, and I am in better health than I have been for years."

During the six years of its existence the PILLOW-INHALER has wrought cures of Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Consumption, that have been more miraculous than the treatment of any disease. It is not expensive, and is within the reach of every one. Send for Explanatory Pamphlet and Testimonials, or call.

The Christian's Secret

A Happy Life.

28th THOUSAND.

Baptist Commendation.

"We are delighted with this book. It reaches to the very core of Christianity, and is so admirably and experimentally in its teachings. It meets the doubts and difficulties of conscientious seekers after the bread and water of life, but whose efforts result only in alternate failure and victory. The author, while presenting a theological and philosophical analysis of a happy and rich experience to help others into a happy Christian life."—Baptist Weekly.

Presbyterian Endorsement.

"The book is so truly and reverentially devout in its spirit, it discards criticism. It contains so much that is sound and practical, so much that, if heeded, will make our lives better and more useful, that the intelligent reader who really wishes to lead a life 'hid with Christ in God' can scarcely fail to derive profit from it."—Inquirer.

Methodist Word of Praise.

"We have not for years read a book with more depth and profit. It is not a theological book. No effort is made to change the traditional views of any one. The author has a rich experience, and tells in a plain and delightful manner."—Christian Advocate.

United Brethren's Approval.

"We have seldom met with a more interesting volume, abounding throughout with apt illustrations; we have failed to find a dry line from title-page to tail."—Religious Telescope.

Congregational Comment.

"It contains much clear, pungent reasoning and interesting incident. It is a practical and experimental treatise, taught out of God's word, and is worthy of universal circulation."—Church Union.

This enlarged edition is a beautiful large 12mo volume of 200 pages.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree. By Prest. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monitorial quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition and show the character of Masonic teaching and doctrine. This book, written by the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a revered Freemason; and their very able defense presented by Mrs. G. C. NEWS OF THE WEEK.

COUNTRY.

Fifty buildings were burned at Southampton, Ontario, Thursday morning, rendering thirty families homeless. Twenty-two wooden buildings in the business portion of Dalhousie, N. C., were destroyed, creating a loss of $80,000.

Dr. W. H. Palmer, physician of the penitentiary at Jackson, Mich., has been dismissed on charges of assisting convicts to secure pardons by sending to the governor false statements as to their health.

Four children, ranging from 3 to 7 years, were suffocated at Scranton, Pa., Monday evening, by the sand bank under which they were playing caving in.

It is reported that the United States steamer Manhattan foundered about 9:30 Sunday morning, two and one-half miles off the harbor of New Haven and sank immediately, carrying with her all on board. The cause of the accident is not yet known. It is supposed that the crew of the steamer Manhattan numbered twenty-five.

The celebration of the 250th anniversary of the founding of Harvard University was inaugurated Friday by a meeting of the Law School Association, which elected James C. Carter, of New York, president. Among the vice presidents are Hon. William M. Everts, Hon. Robert T. Lincoln, of Illinois, and Hon. Rutherford B. Hayes. President Cleveland attends a grand reception in Faneuil Hall, Boston, Monday evening.

FOREIGN.

In the Austrian and Hungarian delegations Prime Minister von Tisza and Herr Smoika declared that the interests of Eastern Europe should be defended with the sword.

John Bright has written a letter on the foreign affairs of England, in which he derides English fears and jealousy of Russia. He says: "England seizes Burma, yet she menaces Russia if she approaches Afghanistan. England has denied Russia's right to enter the Mediterranean from the Black Sea, and has treated her always as an enemy. It is not unnatural then that Russia should retaliate. No country in Europe would more readily respond than she to offers of friendship from England." Mr. Bright, in conclusion, expresses the hope that no Minister will again be able to drag England into another war.

The British Cabinet has decided to instruct Sir. William White, the British Ambassador at Constantinople, to insist upon an immediate conference at Constantinople to consider the Bulgarian question, and to demand the suspension of Russian intervention, diplomatic and active, pending the decisions of such conference. The Porte is renewing its entente cordiale with England, and is in favor of the proposed conference. Italy concurs, while Russia and France oppose the project. Germany and Austria remain neutral.

A great meeting of the Liberal party federation at Leeds, England, resolved to stand by Gladstone. Where the Liberal party, says the London Standard, stood last session there it still stands, on the unalterable basis of an Independent Parliament for Ireland. This determination to abide by the principle of home-rule at any cost partakes, it must be allowed, of the heroic, whatever we think of its wisdom. It shuts the door of office to the Liberals for an indefinite period.

Inquiries have elicited the information that three-fourths of the sergeants recently dismissed from the army were members of secret Spanish societies. Zorillas admits that the dismissal of the sergeants was a serious blow, but they boast that there are still 10,000 men in the army in their confidence, and that they could at any moment cause one important garrison to declare for a republic.

During heavy earthquakes on the morning of September 10, on the island of Ninafou, one of the Tonga group, a mountain 300 feet in height emerged from a lake 2,000 feet in depth, and has become a volcano, throwing out hot stones and sand in such quantities as to destroy two-thirds of the cocoanut trees on the island. Shocks have become so frequent in Saranda that they are no longer noticed by the inhabitants.

NATIONAL SUICIDE, AND ITS PREVENTION.

BY OSCAR F. LUMRY, PH. D.
Prof. Lumry's book, "National Suicide and Its Remedy," will be read with profit even by those who do not accept its doctrine, that taking interest for money loaned, one or more per cent, is sin, taking something for nothing. For, as Goldsmith said of his Vicar of Wakefield, "Even his fallings lean to virtue's side."

—Cynosure.

Dr. Lumry is a man of ideas and never fails to make his readers understand just what they are. Every sentiment he writes for himself, and air of honesty that it will in a measure disarm those who read to criticize. It is a good book to set people to thinking, whether they believe his theories or not. The book is well worth a careful reading and study. —Inter Ocean.

On all the points named they differ radically from those which prevail in the organization of society. Either they are true or false. It is a curious fact that all of them have been stigmatized as crazy, and yet nearly all of them have been found to be correct, reading the adherence of men of intellectual ability. —Times.

The National W. C. T. U. convention report in the Signal tells of the message of the Good Templars sent by Mrs. John B. Finch. She brought greetings from the secret lodges over which her husband presides, and told of their work. Mrs. Finch was at the Good Templar general meeting in Richmond, Va., last May, and is near enough related to the "Grand Worthy Chief" to be able to speak truthfully concerning it. Why then did she need to talk that the membership of the Good Templar order is 600,000, when the official report of her Grand Lodge puts the number at 270,105?

Doubtless the Convention listened with patience to Mrs. Finch, wondering meanwhile how many dozen Prohibition voters those 600,000 Good Templars represented. There was not wanting sentiment of another kind. Mrs. Josephine C. Bateman, of Ohio, superintendent of the department of Sabbath Observance, in her able report, refers to lodge abuse of the Lord's day. She said: "There are sometimes, though rarely, good reasons for these gatherings on the Sabbath, but usually they are a kind of Sunday dissipation, involving work for many, which should be avoided. They are most urged by secret societies who wish to make a display, and are a severe tax upon ministers, who would rejoice at a change, but are seldom consulted. We are glad the undertakers or funeral directors and carriage drivers of New York and Philadelphia are issuing an appeal to the public for their discontinuance. Let us urge upon all Christians to set their faces against Sunday funerals, and appeal to ministers, undertakers, and cemetery directors to refuse to assist on the Sabbath except where special necessity requires."

The International Conference of the Y. M. C. A. twenty years ago first appointed a week of prayer for young men. The present week is the anniversary of this interesting season, and many revival awakenings may be expected to follow the effort of churches and associations. There are in the world 3,372 organizations of the Y. M. C. A. In America there are 1,071, with an aggregate membership of 140,000. The annual current expenses are $785,000 and there is a total net property, consisting of ninety buildings, 365 libraries of 250,000 volumes, seventy-four building funds, etc., of $5,040,178; 592 report young men's Bible classes, and 555 report young men's prayer-meetings, 579 have educational classes. While there is in this organization, as in the churches, an unhappy tendency to machine work, to formalize, and to neglect the true spiritual power which should above all things characterize them, yet it is evident that they are a means of infinite blessing in all our large cities.

The grange, which has for some ten years been kept alive by the immense fund which it had collected from the toiling farmers, held another national meeting last week in Philadelphia and showed that it still has power to deceive and defraud. In ten thousand communities, East and West, it has been tried and voted a useless, a wasteful and deceptive organization, yet at this Philadelphia meeting, it is reported, the sixth degree was conferred upon two thousand "husbandmen from all parts of the country." There is something about this report that looks like a lie. It is most improbable that so many actual farmers would leave their fall work to go to Philadelphia to get a degree. And if the conferring of a degree is the profound business that engages this body, it is a confessed imposition upon the agriculturists of the country.

At a meeting of the strikers at the Chicago Stock Yards Saturday evening the Knights of Labor were ordered back to work by their Masters and Grand Masters. It seems that Powderly sent a dispatch Wednesday to this effect stating that the rules of the order had been violated in both strikes and that the eight-hour day was not yet in issue in his lodge. Barry and Carlton, his lieutenants, kept the order secret and even denied its existence to the press, hoping to get better terms from the packers. They utterly failed and so gave the word to return to work. A few of the younger and rougher class refused to obey, but the strike is over practically. Some of the local labor lodges have voted a boycott on the packers, which in the circumstances is a very desperate and ridiculous piece of revenge.

"If the men refuse take their charters. We must have obedience and discipline." Thus closes Powderly's dispatch. Who are these men whom hundreds of thousands are sworn to obey? Powderly is a devoted Catholic, so is T. B. Barry, his lieutenant from Michigan. Both are young men, well spoken of in their private characters by those who know them. Butler, the district deputy, is the Martin Irons of the Stock Yards strike. He is a local politician who received the lodge vote for sheriff of Cook county. Schilling, another leader, is a loud-mouthed anarchist who has been a great organizer for the Knights of Labor, and sympathizer with the men now under sentence of death for the massacre of May 4th. He is now leading a strong faction in opposition to Powderly's dictation, and may be able to make a split in the ranks of the order.

Professor A. A. Hodge, D. D., of Princeton, New Jersey, passed to his heavenly reward Friday night at his home in that city, after an illness of but a few days. He was a son of Dr. Charles Hodge, the eminent Presbyterian theologian, and was born at Princeton, N. J., July 18, 1823. He was graduated from Princeton College in 1841, was tutor there from 1844 to 1846, was graduated from the Theological Seminary in 1847, and went as a missionary of the Presbyterian Board to Allahabad, returning three years later. He was then successively pastor at Nottingham, Md.; Fredericksburg, Va.; Wilkes-barre, Pa., and Alleghany City, Pa. In 1864 he was appointed Professor of Didactic Historical and Polemic theology in the Western Theological Seminary in the latter city. He was elected Professor of Didactic and Polemic theology at Princeton Theological Seminary in 1877, and has ever since held that position. While in Alleghany Seminary he was a friendly acquaintance of Dr. Milligan and Prof. Sloane, and through them sent a cordial letter to National N. C. A. convention held in Dayton in 1877, approving of the effort to suppress the lodge, and informing us that Dr. McCosh agreed with him in this approval. He had before this time assisted our General Agent, Bro. Stoddard, in securing a number of his students to man an open lodge in one of Bro. Ronayne's expositions. His name was freely given lately in approval of the proposed national conference on secret societies. The Presbyterian denomination and the whole Christian world meets a great loss in his death.

NEW MEXICO AND HER INDIAN SCHOOLS.

BY PROF. ELLIOTT WHIPPLE,

Principal of Ramona Indian Industrial Department of University of New Mexico.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—In compliance with your request I send some of the impressions produced upon my mind by a two months' sojourn in the "City of Adobes."

The central and northern portions of New Mexico are the most desolate regions I ever saw. Territorial papers and circulars issued in the interests of land-owners give glowing accounts of the agricultural resources of the territory, and ingeniously arranged tables of comparative rainfalls. They are whistling to keep up their courage. Most of the rain comes not in fertilizing showers, but pours down in sudden storms and rushes sea-ward through the beds of mountain torrents that are dry during the larger part of the year. Much of the land consists of bare mountains of rock or is cut by impassable canons and is almost absolutely worthless.

A few streams fed by mountain springs and snows afford a basis for the only apparently reliable industry, namely, cattle and sheep raising. Along the streams, where water can be had for irrigation, the fertile soil produces abundantly various farm products, but these fields, small even in comparison with the limited patches cultivated by the farmers of New England, and so cut up by irrigation ditches as to preclude the use of machinery, can never compete with the broad prairie farms of the great central plain in producing cereals even for home consumption. These irrigable lands are well adapted to the production of vegetables and fruits, surpassing those of the east in size and abundance, and those of California in flavor. The prices of these products are now very remunerative, but in a few years it is not improbable that the supply will exceed the demand.

Coal, both anthracite and bituminous, of excellent quality, is abundant and cheap. The other mineral resources of the territory constitute the great unknown factor upon which its future depends. Some mines are being worked with profit, and there are favorable indications of the presence of iron, gold, silver, etc., in many places. These huge, barren mountains may contain deposits of untold wealth, but they can be developed only by wealthy corporations.

Cattle ranches and mines can be managed only by those who have plenty of money; the expense of living here is very great; it is very difficult for persons of limited means to secure a foothold; most such, who come here, must take boarders, starve, or emigrate.

The climate is undoubtedly delightful, and those having a tendency to lung disease can be cured, provided they come here soon enough. There is considerable malaria even in Santa Fe, which has an elevation of over 7,000 feet; but it is probable that this can be avoided by proper precautions as to location, drainage, etc.

The scenery of New Mexico can not be surpassed; the atmosphere is usually clear, and it is no uncommon thing to get a clear view of mountain ranges that are a hundred miles distant, while those that are from thirty to fifty miles away appear to be close at hand.

When we turn from the natural resources of the country to its inhabitants, the outlook is even more dreary and discouraging. The majority of the people are Indians. Of these the most numerous race is that of the Pueblos, who live in adobe houses, cultivate the soil, and are citizens so far as they choose to exercise the rights of citizenship. They are quiet, inoffensive people; but the hopeless thing about their condition is that they are largely under Roman Catholic influence, as they have been for a quarter of a millennium, during which period they have made little or no real progress, while the varnish of Romish ceremonialism, superadded to their essential paganism, renders them impervious to evangelical Christian influences. Their schools are poor affairs, exclusively under priestly control. Long after the territory passed into the possession of the United States, these poor people were compelled to pay tithes to the priests, under the impression that they were required to do so by law. Now they have found out the truth, and some are refusing to pay tithes and sending their children to the Presbyterian school at Albuquerque.

Next to the Indians in number are the Mexican inhabitants, the most of whom are but little higher in the scale of civilization than their Pueblo neighbors. One can not help being astonished at the depth of degradation to which the descendants of the Spanish conquerors have descended. Admixture with Indian races and the blighting influence of Roman Catholicism are probably responsible. There are many people of intelligence and ability among the Mexicans, especially in the cities, and, were it not for the fatal grip of Romanism, something might be done for this wretched race.

The Presbyterian mission schools are bravely attempting the almost desperate task of training the next generation to a better way of living. The Roman Catholic, stimulated doubtless by the opening of Protestant schools, are attempting to do what they should have done long ago, if at all, and are pouring out money like water to build up religious and educational institutions. This is especially the case at Santa Fe, where, in addition to three or four churches and chapels, they are erecting a magnificent cathedral which is to cost $150,000. Here too they have St. Vincent's Hospital, a school for girls, and another for boys, each well supplied with fine buildings and grounds; and now they are building a school building for Indian boys that is to cost $50,000.

Santa Fe, the capital, sanitarium, and educational center of the territory, is evidently regarded by the Catholics as a strategic point, and here they are massing their forces with full purpose to hold in perpetuity their present ascendancy in the affairs of the territory. The public schools of New Mexico, outside of Albuquerque and possibly a few other places are under priestly control and of little practical value.

The American portion of the population, small in comparison with the rest, is mostly of a temporary character, being composed of those who have come here for health or wealth, and, their object being attained, it is their purpose to hasten back to the States. There are plenty of lawyers, traders, bustling politicians, and land-poor, real-estate speculators; but there is a great lack of substantial, public-spirited citizens who feel an interest in building up such institutions as might make the place a desirable home for themselves and their families.

The Protestant churches have but few members and are thinly attended, but nearly every adult male American is a member of some secret society, and Freemasonry and Odd-fellowship flourish apace, while the Penitents, composed of Mexican Catholics, number a thousand or more voters, whose horrid ritual of self-imposed penances and even the identity of whose members is kept a profound secret. It is understood, however, that all will vote, as directed by their secret head-center, the Democratic ticket. The Republican party is run by S. W. Dorsey of "Star-route" infamy. The Prohibition party does not yet exist; saloons abound, and I have seen more drunkenness in Santa Fe in two months than in New England in seven years.

To save the American children from following the Mexicans back toward barbarism, "The New West Education Commission" has established academies with able instructors at Albuquerque and Las Vegas, while President H. C. Ladd, contending almost single-handed against the hosts of Catholicism, is slowly building up at Santa Fe "The University of New Mexico," a school likewise supported by Congregational money.

One department of the University is styled "The Ramona Indian Industrial School." Here are received Indian girls to be fed, clothed, educated and taught to sew, to cook, and to perform all sorts of domestic work, and to be trained to right habits of living in all respects. The resources of the school are derived from three sources. The U. S. Government, through the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, pays $150 per year for the support of each pupil. The American Missionary Association pays the salaries of the teachers. The friends of Christian education for Indians contribute money, clothing, and apparatus to enlarge the accommodations and increase the facilities of the school.

The teaching force consists of the Principal and three lady assistants. One of the ladies has special charge of the school-room work, and it would be difficult to find her superior in skill and success as a primary teacher. Another lady has charge of the dormitory, the clothing, and personal habits of the girls, and teaches them sewing. They call her "Mamma," and she is a mother to them indeed, possessing their affection and confidence to an extent that many white childrens' own mothers would do well to emulate. A dress, cut and made wholly by Apache girls under fourteen years of age, took the first premium for plain sewing at the recent territorial fair at Albuquerque. The third lady has charge of the dining room and kitchen, and it is her business to instruct the girls in cooking and all kinds of work pertaining to this department of the household.

The school is responsible to each of its three-fold sources of support:

1. It must satisfy the government inspector, who is liable to visit it at any time, that it provides suitable accommodations, good fare, and good instruction.

2. It must meet the requirements of the officers of the A. M. A.

3. It is under the constant supervision of a local committee of business men of Santa Fe, appointed by the trustees of the University; and it is visited almost daily by some of the numerous tourists from all parts of the country, who stop at Santa Fe on their way across the continent.

The Apaches are probably the brightest and most energetic of the Indian tribes, and their children make such rapid progress in all departments in which they are being instructed as to surprise all who visit the school. General Atkins, Commissioner of Indian Affairs, who is now on a tour through the West, was so pleased with the work of the school that he pronounced it the best organized Indian school he had yet seen.

A well-founded objection to past attempts to educate Indian children has been that after leaving school they would return to the savage life of their former associates. One reason for this has been that they could find nothing else to do. Few Indians, after receiving an education and becoming accustomed to the comforts and decencies of civilized life, voluntarily go back to the blanket and the wigwam.

The trouble has been they could find no place for themselves in the fierce struggle for existence among the whites, and, if they returned to their own people, living amid all the degrading tendencies of the reservation system of the past, they could do no otherwise than live as the rest did. Captain Pratt of the Carlisle, Pa., Indian school, has found a more excellent way. He secures places for his graduates and keeps them under his supervision until able to look out for themselves.

Again, the conditions of Indian life upon the reservations are rapidly changing. The Indian agents are instructed by the commissioners to settle the Indians upon homesteads as fast as possible, and, as fast as they are willing to take lands in severalty and work them in earnest, they are assisted to build houses and are supplied with cows, wagons, plows, etc. The Indians in many places are responding to this generous policy, and are becoming anxious to take lands before it shall be too late. The parents of the children, now in the "Ramona School," are all prepared and eager to take this step.

The Indian girl who has had from five to ten years of school and industrial training, and who has come to the light of the Gospel of Christ and accepted him as her Master, a result for which the teachers of the "Ramona School" labor and pray unceasingly and hopefully, when she returns, not to a wigwam but to a home capable of being made decent and comfortable, will find a good work ready and waiting to be done, in which she may labor most efficiently for the elevation of her race. Those who have no such home to go to will be provided with situations, which they will be entirely competent to fill, as teachers in Indian schools, as seamstresses, and as domestic servants in Christian families, who will be glad to secure such faithful service as they can render, and to pay good wages for it.

After an experience of twenty-five years in teaching, I am compelled to say that I have never seen a class of white children that manifested, on an average, such aptness, docility, and faithfulness, both in school-work and in the various industrial employments as do these Apache Indian girls.

Santa Fe, New Mexico.

THE SUCCESS OF REFORM.

BY PETER PLOWSHARE.

We need not go far back to gather proofs of the success attending reform work, which work is carried on in the strength God has given to his children. Only a few years have passed since the great Abolitionists began to agitate the slavery question, and some of the persecutions of those noble reformers are well remembered. Behold the slavery demons using their influence and even physical strength to injure or destroy both reputation and body of those who talked and wrote for God and for humanity in "those accursed slavery days." But, while persecutions were severe and long, the work was of the Lord, and success must come. It came. Praise the Lord. He has ever aided his people in the work he put upon them, and how could it be otherwise than to succeed?

The prohibition of the manufacture, importation, and disposal of intoxicating beverages has been called for now for a number of years, and to a large extent has met with success; so much so that the whisky organs begin to say that prohibition is a success, thus admitting their defeat.

The war upon secret societies has been going forward for a number of years, and at times seemingly gaining ground very slowly, but the faithful have never been discouraged, but manfully pressed on, declaring principles of right and truth, and within the last eight months what a stride the cause has made! Scores of local papers, hitherto silent on secrecy, have opened their columns to anti-secrecy writers, and even inserted radical editorials; churches taking higher ground; larger gatherings than usual assemble to "hear the truth of the whole matter," and last but not least, the United States Senate almost "torn asunder" by debates on secret sessions; even Masons themselves making strong statements against secrecy. Praise the Lord, is not our Master's work moving forward? Who says "No." We may not be discouraged, God still reigns. His work still goes on. The time is fast coming when the reformer may lay aside some of his ammunition, and look for other fields of reform; not in your day or mine, perhaps, but at no distant day, nevertheless. Reform moves on much faster now than formerly, just as intelligence moves from point to point more rapidly now than in the days before the electric telegraph was known to science. Let us move forward.

OUR DAY AND GENERATION IN CHICAGO.

Nearest us are labor commotions, instigated by the labor league authorities, and immediately affecting the daily bread of more than fifty thousand people, and the interests of capital to the extent of millions of dollars; whilst confidence is impaired, and capital will seek investment where this danger is not found.

Next come the moral and religious bearing of the interesting questions which have been before the great Congregational, Episcopal, and other conventions of different denominations. Most prominent of all of a general character was the question of union. Some people would be willing to have a union of sects as we have a union of States, each under its own government, but acknowledging allegiance to the great fundamental truths of the Holy Scriptures. Others would recognize the supremacy of some one church as the pattern for all, and they would fortify their arguments by the testimony of tradition. A third class would cast aside tradition and creeds altogether, and see the true foundation for unity in the acknowledgment of Jesus as the Son of God and the supreme Lawgiver of the present dispensation. This and the New Testament as the record of the Divine Will, and fulfillment in a great measure of the Old Testament, would be all that would be required as the basis of unity; and thus opinions would be free on many topics, whilst faith would be one in Christ, and the Gospel would be preached as the power of God unto the salvation of repentant sinners.

Some people imagine that diversity of opinion betokens the downfall of Protestantism, and that the only safety of religion is in superstitious adherence and unreasoning obedience to some one creed or church—a grand mistake alike of skepticism and superstition. For no class of men has so much command of their highest faculties as those who use both their reason and their conscience.

What is wanted to-day is open, bold, honest advocacy of Gospel truth. Its adaptation to the wants of the soul are as conscious and real as light to the eye or food for the stomach.

Scot.

—The Christian Hour says that there was a cunning effort made in Denver to open the Manufactu-riers' Exposition on Sunday. The first vote was ten to two against such opening, when the committee tried to secure their point by delay, but decided efforts were made to prevent this, and the plans of the anti-Sabbath party were foiled.

FIFTEEN CHARGES FROM CHINA.

Another Mason, touched by the grace of God, and the reproachful voice of his conscience, for he had been a Catholic, renounced not long ago, all allegiance to the anti-Christian sect. Mr. W. Doyle, of Shanghai, China, has never ceased since his conversion to point out to his fellow-men the fallacious maxims and moral dangers of Freemasonry. Now he comes out with an indictment in fifteen points against the religion of secrecy and darkness. We give it in full and recommend its perusal to all, and particularly to preachers, who may be inclined to believe that there is no antipathy between Christianity and Freemasonry.

This is the document:

1. Masonry claims to teach the sciences. Where has it ever done so? Where are its seats of learning and training schools for the people?

2. Masonry professes to be a charitable institution. Where are the hospitals, asylums, free schools or other eleemosynary institutions?

3. Masonry professes to be a system of religion. Where are its creeds, its churches, missionaries, catechisms or prayer-books for the people?

4. Masonry professes to teach morality. What morality has it ever taught, and where? Has anybody ever heard of a Mason sending a child to learn a Masonic catechism or sacred history or to be educated for the Masonic priesthood? Does the Masonic oath bind Master Masons beyond the chastity of females of the nearest ties of kindred to brother Master Masons?

5. Whence do they receive their priestly orders—holy or otherwise? May such orders be assumed at pleasure by anybody, and if so, why does Masonry make such an ado about conferring them, and if not, then why are they assumed by Masonry?

6. Where in sacred Scripture or profane history has the power to administer funeral rites and ceremonies of a Christian and religious character been conferred on secret societies, or formally delegated to them by any competent authority?

7. Where, in the law of the land, have the secret societies received authority to administer and enforce their oaths? What civilization can exist without obedience to lawfully constituted authority? and does not Freemasonry proceed in secret defiance of all such authority rather than in submissive obedience to it?

8. Where are their credentials for any of the foregoing functions, secular or religious, governmental or priestly?

9. Did Christ come upon this earth to found and establish a secret sect—and what civilization is there in the world, worthy of the name, in comparison with that which is Christian?

10. Masonry boasts of its antiquity. Where in the whole world is there a single edifice of modern speculative free and accepted Masonry that antedates the last century? And were not the greater part of the Masonic emblems designed by Jeremy L. Cross, of New York, in 1819, and was not the institution itself begun by Elias Ashmole in England in the century before the last?

11. Does not this modern sect of Freemasonry, while acknowledging a Supreme Being in some Orient, erase the very name from the charters and constitutions of others, ignore the Holy Trinity in all, and acknowledge Christ the crucified, in none?

12. Does not Masonry claim the unification of man as its only object, and does it not seek to effect that by naturalism? And to this end does it not strive continually by intrigue and otherwise, and always at the expense of the State where possible—"to regulate the education of the youth, the discipline of marriage, the laws of the realm, and every detail of social and political life, just as if there was no Christian church on earth, or as if Christ had never come down from heaven; to preach and profess a kind of natural honesty sufficient to self-respect and to philanthropic intercourse and to ignore entirely the interests of eternity as if there was no hereafter?"

13. Does it not favor the law of divorce, "a law that degrades womanhood and depreciates it; a law that jeopardizes the education and the welfare of the children; sunders the ties of domestic society and destroys it; sows discord broadcast in families; becomes a source of corruption for public manners, and the principle of a ruinous decay for the civil state."

14. Ought not these stumbling blocks in Masonry be made stepping stones out of it?

15. Who can fail to distinguish between that synagogue of Satan, the abode of darkness, and the temple of Christ, the source of light?

"For every one that doeth evil hateth the light, and cometh not to the light, that his works may not be reproved."

"But he that doth truth, cometh to the light, that his works may be made manifest, because they are done in God." John 3:19, 21.

"Whilst you have the light believe in the light, that you may be the children of light." John 12:36.

"I come a light into the world, that whosoever believeth in me may not remain in darkness." John 12:45.

"Walk whilst you have the light, that the darkness overtake you not. And he that walketh in darkness knoweth not whither he goeth. John 12:35, 36.—Texas Monitor.

THE REFORMER.

This is, O Truth, the deepest woe
Of him thou biddest to protest:—
With men no kinship may he know;
Thy mission hems from worst and best.

The wolf that gauntly prowled the wood
From human kind more mercy got,
Than he who warns men to be good,
And stands alone, yet flinches not.

Thou grantest not one friendly hand
Or heart on which he may rely;
Alone and dauntless he must stand,
Alone must fight, alone must die!

—Paul, Hermes in the Century.

BEWARE OF MEN.

Our Saviour puts us on our guard. He bids us beware of false prophets who are as wolves in sheep's clothing; and he also bids us "beware of men;" for he, knowing what is in man, has said: "Cursed is he that trusteth in man, or maketh flesh his arm."

The experience of the prophets of God taught them to be cautious in this respect. Thus says the prophet Jeremiah: "Take ye heed every one of his neighbor, and trust ye not in any brother, for every brother will utterly supplant, and every neighbor will walk with slanders"—or will go about with slanders, walking up and down and tattling. Jer. 9: 4. This was the experience of Jeremiah among those with whom he had lived in brotherly and neighborly friendship, and who by God's command were bidden to love their neighbors as themselves. He was surrounded with liars and slanderers, and even brothers would utterly supplant one another. "And they will deceive every one his neighbor, and will not speak the truth." They have "taught their tongues to speak lies, and weary themselves to commit iniquities."

There are two species of wrong mentioned by the prophet. First, they will not speak the truth. When a man does right he has nothing to lie about; but when a man does wrong and persists in it, it is the most natural thing in the world for him to lie; in fact it is his only way of defending and justifying himself.

But these falsehoods take two forms; first, they will not speak the truth; second, they teach their tongues to speak lies. If they would speak the truth, they would confess their faults and correct them; if they would speak the truth they would expose the wrongdoing of their fellows; but they will not speak the truth.

In some cases, men enter into contracts, and solemnly promise each other that they will not speak the truth; that their sins, and tricks, and evil-doings shall not be confessed; they will not expose each other; they will not speak the truth. And sometimes men are bound by the most terrible oaths to conceal the faults and secrets of others, no matter how much justice and righteousness may demand that they be exposed.

The complaint made by Jeremiah, it must be remembered, was not a complaint against the outside sinful world, but the charge was made against the professed people of God, against those who offered prayers, who went up to the temple to worship, and who claimed to be in a special sense the chosen people of God, the favorites of heaven.

Doubtless a careful investigation of the condition of things at the present time would show that there are still men, who, while claiming to be in an especial sense the people of God, are guilty of similar wrongs; deceiving and supplanting their brethren, going about with slanders, peddling them from one end of the land to the other, and seeking to injure, and crush, and destroy men who are trying to do the will of God. They have taught their tongues to speak lies. The tongue which God made to speak the truth, they have twisted until it tells lies of its own accord. "They weary themselves to commit iniquity."

It is sad that such things should be among those who bear the name of the Lord, and profess to serve him; but it will be observed that when Satan has any particularly mean work to do, he, for obvious reasons, takes great pains to give the job to some good man, or at least to some man who professes to be good, and who is held in high esteem by his friends and followers. And then if any one like Jeremiah should dare to denounce such iniquities, he would, like that prophet, at once become the object of universal rebuke, suspicion and hatred.

Let us have great care that we are not led astray into such iniquities, but that we cleave to the right, and watch our tongues, and our ways, and serve the Lord with purpose of heart.—The Christian.

AN HONEST CONFESSION.

Soon after I quit the use of tobacco I became much impressed with the fact that God required me to sever my connection with Pacheco Lodge, No. 117, of the Independent Order of Odd-fellows, where I had been a devoted member for seven years. This I very much disliked to do, for I was indeed much attached to the order. I had passed through the chairs and reaped what we were disposed to call its honors, and, like many others, had settled down in the belief that if a man was a good Odd-fellow that he was a good Christian; and I believe that hundreds of good, moral men are to-day laboring under the same delusion. Never was there a greater mistake. Odd-fellowship will save no man from his sins. They may claim to be charitable; they may claim and practice morality; but the religion of Jesus Christ is not taught; and Paul tells us that there is no other name under heaven whereby we must be saved. Nothing but the change of heart, so beautifully described by our Saviour to Nicodemus, in the third chapter of the Gospel by Saint John, will save you or me, dear reader, from our sins.

I became more and more impressed each day that it was my duty to withdraw from the order, which I did on 17th of July, 1877. I have been asked my reasons for withdrawing from the order. My reasons are many; but the one above stated is sufficient, if there was none other, viz.: that hundreds are putting their trust in Odd-fellowship instead of putting their trust in God. For I am fully persuaded that there are very many who believe that if they live up to the teachings of the order, that it is all that is required of them. Dear soul, do not be deceived. Again I say there was never a greater mistake.

What are the promises or the hope of a blessed eternity offered to you by the teachings of Odd-fellowship? I answer, nothing. You cannot put your finger on a single promise of eternal life. Dear friend, if that is your only hope, you are lost. "Except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God." "I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by me." "He that entereth not by the door into the sheep-fold, but climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber." This is what Jesus says. This is the way, and the only way, to eternal life.—G. R. Oliver, Pacheco, Cal., in Earnest Christian.

The armies of the Living God need brave, bold words—words of love, but sharp as drawn swords. It is for the leaders to utter them in trenchant kindness. Soldiers fight well when led well. Hannibal once said he had rather have an army of stags governed by lions, than an army of lions governed by stags. Away with pusillanimity! The path of duty has no place for fear. "Woe to thee, O land, where thy king is a child." "The Lord is a man of war," and "Great Heart," is his general. Courage, ye timid souls! To the front, and in God's strength bear the fiercest blows. "We can't," said ten cowardly spies. "We can," cried two brave hearts. The counsel of the brave prevailed: Israel took the land. "Impossible is the adjective of fools," said Napoleon Bonaparte, to one who betrayed lack of courage. It certainly is, when the eternal God bids men to do a thing. Use brave words, then carry brave souls. Of John Knox it was said, "He never feared the face of clay." Why need we? We have his God. Of Luther it was recorded that "his words were half battles." Engirded with truth, encompassed with Omnipotent arms, the true reformer should be as Jeremiah, "a brazen wall, a defended city, an iron pillar." It is God who says, "Be not dismayed." Therefore, be strong and show thyself a man,

And if thou hast Truth to utter,
Speak! and leave the rest to God.

THE SECRET EMPIRE.

RITUAL OF THE ROYAL BROTHERHOOD.

BY REV. H. H. HINMAN.

This is an appendage of the Knights of Tabor and consists of three degrees, to which are added a fourth, the Arcanum. To receive these degrees the applicant must be a Knight of Tabor, and a member of a Temple for more than six months. A woman to receive them must be a Sealed Daughter of the Tabernacle for more than six months. To perpetuate membership in this order the members must continue in good standing in the Temple, the Tabernacle, or the Order of Twelve. The place of uniting is called the Palatium. The title of the members is Prince or Princes of Media. The government is vested in the National Grand Temple and Tabernacle. The Chief Grand Mentor issues charters; the Grand Scribe keeps the rolls, etc.

Then follows the six conditions on which a Palatium can be organized, and the manner in which it is to be conducted. A description of the dress to be worn is next given. The names of the officers are: Presiding Prince, Vice-Princess, Recording Prince, Assistant Prince, Prince Banker, Prince Norma, Prince Clericus, Prince Revista, Prince Marshal, Prince Gonfalonier, Princess Sentina, Prince Wardship.

The opening ceremonies are elaborate and grandiloquent, and carefully patterned after Blue Lodge Masonry. They describe the duties of all the officers.

When the organization is completed Prince Clericus makes a strictly Masonic prayer which has in it neither confession, invocation, or reference to any Mediator. At its conclusion all the members say, "May the Lord bless the Palatium." Then follow the signs, after which the Palatium is opened in "love, unity and fellowship."

The ceremonies of initiation are presumed to be very grand. The candidates are blindfolded, a scarlet robe is put on, a white cord around the waist, and a staff in the hand. They are said to be "from the land of Ilm journeying to the Royal Country of Media." In their travels they are tested by earth, wind and water." As they march around "the members make music with rattles and little bells." After an entrance obligation they have to pass the "sliding earth." A flat wagon four feet square with bed as near the floor as possible is filled with earth, when the candidates step on this two of the members draw them around the hall three times—music by the bells and rattles while they are going. They come to Prince Clericus, who administers the following obligation:

"I, ———, have been, and am now, a member of the Order of Twelve in good standing. I believe in God, the Supreme Ruler of the Universe, and that an obligation taken in his name is sacred and binding. In the holy name of God, and in the presence of this Palatium. I do sincerely swear to conceal the secret work of the Palatium."

"I further swear that I will not give the Palatium degrees," etc.

"I further swear that I will obey the laws, rules and regulations of the Royal Brotherhood, its constitutions, edicts," etc.

"I further swear that I will answer the hail when it is given, and come to the call of distress wherever or whenever given. I will defend members in danger, and warn them when they need warning. All of which I swear to do; and should I willfully and knowingly break this my obligation, may I be buried alive in the earth, and may God keep me."

The Prince Marshal then takes them in hand and finally presents them to the Vice-Princess, who says that they come from the country of Deborah and Barak and are obligated to the Royal House of Media, and that they will go through water and wind to find the Land of Media. After various instructions they approach the valley and are exhorted to have courage. It thunders, and the wind blows, rain falls, trees roll across the track. The thunder is made by a piece of sheet iron, the rain by a fine syringe which blows water in the candidates' faces, the wind by blowing in the faces with a pair of bellows. The trees are bushes thrown across the path. Amidst this they pass twice round the hall, when they arrive at the station of Princess Norma.

After some further ceremonies another obligation of positive subjection is taken, before which the following scene is enacted: "Each member wears a hooded black robe and a false face (the uglier the better); the men with swords and the women with poniards, pointing towards the candidate. Just after the obligation is taken chains are rattled for a minute or two and the bells are rung. All is still when Princess Norma speaks: 'You are now in position to see the people of Media. If you are ready, make one step forward.' As they step the hoodwink is snatched from their eyes and all the members say in a deep voice: 'These are the weapons we use on those who break their obligations.' They then find their progress impeded, and only after long effort are they able to find a Royal Friend, who can admit them to the object of their search."

They are now instructed in the secret language of Media (signs). They are:

1st. Right hand hand on the breast with fingers pointing towards the chin.

2nd. Right hand closed and laid close to the right side. This is the asking sign.

3rd. The left hand is closed and laid close to the left side. This is the answering sign. The test is to say 8—10—9—2—1—14. The answer is 11—14—11—4—8.

4th. Both hands closed and thumbs locked together across the breast. This is the sign of distress.

The 5th sign is by holding the right hand in front about six inches from the face with palm inward. This is the calling sign, and a member that sees this sign must go the person that gives it.

Then follows the "Token and Double Token," but I forbear. I remark:

1. That it was a great piece of folly for the author of these degrees to suppose that he could put the ritual in print and keep it a secret. Secrets are not so kept.

2. The silliness of the whole plot is only equalled by its immorality and wickedness. To think of men and women swearing under penalty of death (buried alive) to come at each other's call! A drunken profligate, who has none but vicious purposes, makes the "calling sign," and the Christian lady, who would spurn him from her household, has sworn to come at his bidding and asked God to help her do it. This is blasphemy. Then what a grand spectacle for a company of Christian men and women to arm themselves with swords and poniards and point them at the heart of a brother or sister and threaten to use them if he shall break an illegal and wicked pledge! Is this the kind of education that we need for our sisters and daughters in order to make them good Christians, wives and mothers? The heathen character of these mysteries is confessed by the author who shows their likeness to the mysteries of Eleusis, of Mithra and of Odin. Nothing but Satanic influence could have inspired the perpetuation of these mysteries of which the Apostle says, "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness but rather reprove them, for it is a shame even to speak of those things that are done of them in secret." Eph. 5: 11, 12.

It is deplorable that a people that have emerged from the thralldom of a cruel bondage should voluntarily put their necks under the bondage of a system that absorbs their time, their money, and their religion, and that destroys the right of conscience, personal freedom, and true self-respect.

PRESS COMMENT.

The head of the Knights of Labor Association, already rich in titles, is now likely to be rich in money, the recent convention at Richmond having fixed his salary at $5,000 a year. But it is curious how one who is devoting himself to the work of saving the laboring classes from the oppression caused by high salaries given to other men, can agree to take so large a sum himself. For example's sake, if for nothing else, he should have given himself to unpaid service, and looked for his reward in the good he accomplished as a reformer and liberator.—United Presbyterian.

The connection between Jarrett bribing Knights of Labor in south-western Illinois and the wealth of Mr. Jones and his tin-plate associates in Allegheny county is too apparent to need elucidation. Powderly may preach and Carlton may pacify, but so long as the district heads of the order can be reached through such an emissary as Jarrett with the gold of Jones there is a canker of rottenness in the order that must topple it to the ground. The suspicion that the order has been used for political purposes in Chicago and elsewhere was calculated to impair its usefulness as means for the settlement of industrial disputes. But the evidence that its ramifications have been debauched in a political contest to the service of the great iron and steel capitalists of Pennsylvania will make it a by-word wherever the ballot-box is regarded as the symbol of a free, unpurchased expression of public opinion. The public will await with great interest whatever method the order may take to purge itself of the reproach brought upon it by the prostitution of its officers to the uses of Jarrett, and his employers.—Chicago Daily News.

The Knights of Labor propose to set up at the national capital a congress similar to that of the United States, composed, however, of only thirty-eight members. This congress is intended to instruct the Federal Congress what bills it shall pass and what it shall refuse to pass. The proposed plan of its operation is that as soon as a bill has been presented to either House of the Federal Congress it shall be taken up and considered by the Knights of Labor congress. If that body approve it, the bill will be passed; if not, rejected, and thereupon the decision of the Knights' legislature will be messaged to the Federal Legislature. By this means the Congress of the United States will be prevented approving any bill disapproved by the Knights of Labor or of disapproving of any bill approved by them. In short, the Federal Congress is to be subjected to the rigorous supervision of the congress of a trades union, and held continually under the espionage and threats of a secret social organization.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Messrs. Gaunt, Harper, and Dolan have been dismissed from the Knights of Labor because they declined to obey an order which they knew was not just and which was against an agreement made by those who represented the Knights of Labor. These men claim that they acted in accordance with the principles of the order, and that those who have ordered their expulsion have violated the constitution of the order. This is a matter to be settled by the Knights of Labor themselves. And as they settle it they will have public sympathy or public condemnation. The Knights of Labor, as the case now stands, have expelled three men for acting a man's part. Have they expelled Tom Collins, who is charged with a scheme to throw a passenger train from the track? Have they expelled any of the men who have been plotting not only to murder one person but to kill scores and hundreds of innocent men, women, and children riding in fancied security in railway trains? Have they taken any pains to discover who these miscreants are? If they have taken any measures to discover the guilty parties, have they expelled any of them from the order? Have this committee acting in the case of Gaunt, Harper, and Dolan used their influence to have any of the men expelled who have made brutal attacks on other men who had committed no offense? If they have not done so, ought they not in the interests of their order to do so at once?—Inter Ocean.

To the natural outcome of this feeling was mainly due the nomination of Mr. Henry George, a man absolutely inexperienced in the conduct of a great public office like the Mayoralty, or in fact of any public office at all, or of any business concern save the publication of his own writings, for Mayor of New York. He was taken up as "Labor's Candidate," and from first to last conducted his campaign on this line. Instead of making a very legitimate war against corruption in public life, in which all honest men would have been with him, he went to work to create a war of "class," as he put it, against class; in other words, a social war. According to Mr. George the possession of capital, if not actually a crime, is akin to it. Naturally the question occurs, what does Mr. George do with his own capital? To Mr. George, expressing his ideas in the rough, the rich are bad and oppressors of the poor; the money that the rich have acquired has been wrung from the poor; in short, property is robbery. And he used his sudden prominence to air his pet theories, some of which are absurd, others decidedly immoral, granting every concession of innocence of their logical drift on the part of Mr. George.—Catholic Review.

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

WENONA, Ill., Nov. 8, 1886.

There is no discount on the "old guard" at Tonica, where I spent the Sabbath. I could learn of only eight different secret orders in that little town of a few hundred souls! Only one of the churches in the place bears a definite testimony against these secret altars of Baal worship, and that church is like "Micajah the son of Imlah," who was "hated by Ahab, King of Israel." Bros. Morrison, Baird and Bollou, with "honorable and devout women," are holding the fort against human odds, and with sacrifice and heroism truly noble. Surely their prayers are heard and their efforts will meet "with a just recompense of reward."

Brother and sister Howe, of Wenona, had for me a warm welcome and a place at their early morning meal. They are living alone and apparently in better health than when I last saw them. Their hearts are in the Lord's work, and they endorse the Christian Cynosure with a ten dollar bill to extend its circulation among needy ministers in the South. I was much refreshed by their company and greatly blessed as together we knelt at the altar of prayer.

At Dwight I met on the train Frank Holton, an old classmate at Knox, whom I had not seen and from whom I had not heard for years. He is postmaster at Blackstone, and engaged in the book and news business, but knew nothing about our anti-secrecy work and its literature. I furnished him a copy of the Cynosure, a catalogue of our publications and a few tracts, and hope we may receive some order from him. I find everywhere interest centering upon two points, the Southern field, and a national conference of Christians. It is now too late to speak of the conference as probable; an awakened conscience and an intelligent sentiment wide spread among Christians will not be satisfied without it; and if it does not come in our way, it is sure to come in God's way, for that man is blind who cannot see that He is moving by his Holy Spirit upon the hearts and consciences of his people. When the Knights of Labor boast of an aggregate vote of 150,000 in the late elections, and assert that each one of their (K) night lodges is henceforth to be a political caucus, and darkly hint that Powderly and George will head the National labor ticket in 1888, with a backing of not less than a million and a half votes, even "trimmers" are forced to look narrowly to dangers and possibilities of the near future. I am assured by the "old reliables" that the correspondence from Bro. Hinman and from the Ohio State agent are read with deep interest, and also find much inquiry concerning Bro. Arnold's new and novel method of demonstrating the identity of ancient pagan and modern lodge worshipers. So the work goes on, "under the pillar of cloud and fire." J. P. STRODDARD.

FAITH AND WORK IN OHIO.

XENIA, Ohio, Nov. 11, 1886.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Owing to brevity of time and pressure of work I abbreviate my report this week and pass by many things which I should like to mention. Last Thursday I took a flying trip to Mansfield. An excursion was run to that point to accommodate the Masons, I. O. O. F., and K. of P., who laid, or rather poured corn wine and oil on the corner stone of the new Intermediate State penitentiary being erected there. In the car in which I rode were many of the State officials. Governor Foraker and wife sat in the seat opposite. I sat with the warden of the Columbus penitentiary. I received something of an insight into the way that the powers that be control.

At Mansfield I had a short but very pleasant visit with the State Secretary, and distributed over a thousand anti-secret circulars among those who had gathered to witness the secret society palaver and parade. Returning I stopped at Bellville where I met old father Ely, who still lingers this side of heaven. At midnight the train left me at Utica. I proceeded to the home of Mr. John Harvey. Although I had come at the twelfth hour I found the light burning and a cheerful fire in the grate.

In the morning I called on many of our friends. Found Mr. Lyons as strong and hearty as ever. Mrs. Lyons' health was much improved since my last call. Mr. L. pledged his support to our cause. Other friends here assisted the cause financially, all of which will be duly reported to the State Secretary and through him to the Association. Several expressed a desire that the friends organize so that they may work more in unison and therefore effectively. This will be the next step.

After arranging affairs at Columbus, I came on to Cedarville, where I have been treated like a king, a rare event for an Anti-masonic lecturer. Horses and buggies were at my service and every thing done to make my call pleasant. I secured twenty-three readers for the Cynosure and some aid financially. I hope to call again and give some lectures here at some time in the near future.

Last evening I addressed a small but attentive audience in the Friends' church at Selma. At the close a colored man, who was more zealous than wise, arose and stated that he was the poorest man in town, but he would not lie for one hundred dollars. Said he, "I have been Worshipful Master of the lodge, and I know you have not said one word of truth to night." No one offered him a hundred dollars to lie, evidently thinking the temptation might be too great. I found upon questioning that the man was very ignorant, and did not have very clear ideas of anything. He was told to keep quiet by a white brother Mason, who saw he was giving every thing away. I think the audience went home satisfied. Several requested me to return and speak farther on this question.

I hope next week to report full arrangements for the State Convention. Friends in the southern part of the State, and northern as far as possible, should make arrangements to attend. The place will probably be Greenfield, Highland county. The time either the 8th or 15th of December. More anon.

W. B. STRODDARD.

THE CHURCHES IN THE SOUTH.

MOBILE, Ala., Nov. 6, 1886.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I begin to realize that this is indeed the "Sunny South." Every day is cloudless, and the temperature the nearest approach to perfection. Nothing seems to be desired but something to harden the sand which fills the streets and floats in the air. Happily the long drought came too late to injure crops, and is highly favorable to the cotton pickers whose work is more than usually advanced, and the staple in better order.

Since I came here I have preached five discourses, each of which bore largely on the lodge question. Two in the Storm Street Baptist church, where our stalwart brother, Rev. Benjamin Burke, still holds the fort, and defies the adversary; one in the Congregational church, one in the African M. E. church, and one in the St. Louis Street Baptist church. I have also appointments to preach in the State Street M. E., the Zion M. E., and the Congregational churches. I have also seen and conversed with numerous ministers and distributed tracts. Nearly all the churches, both colored and white, are holding revival services, and some report large gatherings. Surely there is need, for profanity, drunkenness, Sabbath desecration, licentiousness, as well as lodge-ry, are exceedingly prevalent.

There is a very general willingness to hear the truth, and a growing conviction of the need of a widespread reformation within as well as outside of the church. A number of ministers who are Freemasons have confessed to me that the whole system was absurd and wicked, and one, at least, has made public renunciation. A pastor who came here from Washington City, a Royal Arch Mason, the pastor of a church of more than a thousand members, invites me to preach, and tells me to "use my liberty. He says he has been preaching against the "abuses of the lodge system." I told him that it was like preaching on the abuses of the slave system, the system itself was a terrible abuse; and he partly believes it.

No one would have known that there was an election here on the 2d inst. I do not think that one colored voter in ten went to the polls, and probably not one white voter in five. In one ward but seven votes were given. There was no intimidation that I knew of, but a genuine indifference. It is probable that the only thing that would arouse popular enthusiasm would be prohibition, of which there is surely great need in this city. After Sabbath I go to Columbus, Miss., and from thence to central and northern Alabama. Yours in Christ,

H. H. HINMAN.

TRUTH ADVANCING ALONG THE LINES.

BEACONSFIELD, Iowa.

Bro. Hawley, on his return from reform work in Page and Taylor counties, lectured in a United Brethren church in Decatur county, nine miles from Beaconsfield. He sowed as much reform seed as could be well done in one lecture. It was listened to eagerly for about two hours, and the tracts were gladly received. The next evening he lectured in a school house near Beaconsfield. Here we hoped much good was and will be done. The notice being short, but few of the holiness people and United Brethren were present. We hope others did not stay away because they "love darkness rather than light" on this subject. We have no right to say by our actions, "Prove all things—except Freemasonry." Ignorance willfully adhered to, on any question, will not entitle us to a home in heaven. There seems to be an indifference among some good brethren which we can only help them overcome by the grace of God.

When Mrs. Reed, a holiness woman of the M. E. church, was holding a meeting in Beaconsfield she spoke plainly on the secrecy question. I am informed that at that time an M. E. brother, who is a Freemason, said, "I will take it (Masonry) to the Lord in prayer." Whereupon a good M. E. minister who had been an Odd-fellow, said, "That is right! Take it to the Lord in prayer, and he will take it all out of you." True holiness is the salt of reform.

So let me say to all Christians, your salt is needed in this reform. "Ye are the light of the world, the salt of the earth." Bro. Hawley is the right worker in the right place. Best of all, God is with him. It is of all importance to have the right spirit, for Jesus says, "Without me ye can do nothing." May we continually serve "the true and the living God," who leads into "every good word and work."

Every organization must have funds or it cannot run any more than a machine without oil, and Christian organizations are needed as much as railroad companies need steam-engines, and farmers mowing machines. All friends who have not responded need to rally on this needed line, and when you hear Bro. Hawley lecture you will be happy to think your money helped to keep him in the field. Every Christian who hears him speak twice will antagonize the whole lodge system as long as they live and have the love of Christ in their souls. CYRUS SMITH.

FORWARD, MARCH! ALL TOGETHER.

I presume there are several hundred ministers of the Gospel who are readers of the Cynosure, and possibly a large number of these have never given a lecture or sermon on the secret Baal-worship that is undermining the very foundations of the churches they are preaching in. Many have said, "Some time I will do so," but are still waiting for a favorable time. Now, without any vote or formal agreement, I propose that every minister reading this notice announce that on Sabbath, Dec. 19, he will preach a sermon on the influence of secret societies on the Christian church.

Let there be a forward movement all along the line and all strike at once. If you feel that you have not the facts you need, send 25 cents to the Cynosure office and get a bundle of tracts, all different; then with the Bible you will be well armed for the conflict. There are many lay members of the church who can do efficient work in this direction. It is not enough for the public to know that we, or our churches are opposed to lodge worship; it should know why, and then we shall get the hearty co-operation of many who are now through ignorance unwilling to co-operate with us. I. R. B. ARNOLD.

No more liquor will go to Alaska by permits of the War Department, except wine for sacramental purposes.

CORRESPONDENCE.

WELL OUT OF A BAD BUSINESS.

SEYMOUR LAKE, N. Y., Nov. 11, 1886.

DEAR EDITOR:—I promised to give the Cynosure the result of my Masonic trial. The lodge met and opened in due form. Contrary to the by-laws of Masonry I was expelled. Masonic law required them to appoint a committee to visit the accused before he is brought to trial, which was not done. They now boast how they have turned me out of the lodge, and they will show to the world what kind of a man I am.

Let us see for a moment how Masonry will lie. The fact of the case is this: In the fall of 1884 I publicly denounced Masonry, and withdrew from the order, which denunciation was published in the Cynosure. Now I ask any candid, thinking person, who has the honor of getting me out of the lodge?

I would like to say a word in regard to Masonic penalties. The question has been asked, whose duty is it to inflict the penalties? In our State laws the officers are compelled to execute the penalties of the laws. State law is changeable; Masonic law unchangeable; hence it is the duty of Masonic officers to inflict the penalties or cause them to be inflicted. If this was done it would be a good thing for Masonry. You may ask why. I answer. It would exterminate the accursed institution. There is not one Mason in ten thousand but has broken his obligation; hence he is worthy of the knife. Ho, ye Masonic officers, grind your knives! Go to work; the harvest is indeed ready. Cut throats across! Tear breasts open; and pluck out hearts; and sever bodies in two until this stain on the human race is no more. D. BENJAMIN.

WHO IS TO BLAME?

WARE, Mass.

When a drunken affray occurs, "Who is to blame?" we ask. The ready response is, "The one that drinks."

Yet there are others upon whom censure of the severest nature should rest. He who sells intoxicating drinks is worse than the drinker. He does this to make money. Every time he makes is at the awful expense of the ruin of others, and of this terrible fact he is not ignorant.

There is yet another class upon whom blame and just censure should rest,—those who vote for a license to sell these poisonous beverages; they, too, are participants in the crimes that are committed. If men could not get the liquor they would not get drunk, so I say all those connected in any way with this traffic are guilty.

A scene was witnessed in Ware, Oct. 22nd, that was enough to make any person a prohibitionist the rest of his life. Two men in a barber shop were engaged in a drunken affray, one receiving wounds that will not soon be forgotten. I was told that the man who sold these men the liquor was standing by and viewing the effects of his work. What must have been his feelings, knowing that through his own doings that deed had been committed! Yet I sometimes think that class that stoop so low as to get gain at the awful expense of the ruin of others are wholly lost to every sense of shame, and it is certain they cannot be respected by any one who has any regard for right or justice.

During the last four years I have been made to realize what it cost to be a prohibitionist. On the place where we live is a beautiful grove, a resort for pleasure-seeking parties. Calls are often made for "something to drink," by strangers coming in who do not know our position on this question. When they are told emphatically, "This is a temperance grove; nothing but tea, coffee, lemonade and pure, cold water can be obtained here. Also we maintain a strict observance of the Sabbath, no open grove on Sabbath," they often stare with amazement, and one said, "Why, even Christians drink liquor now-a-days." I said, "No sir, you are mistaken. Christians are exempt from this charge; but there may be those whose names are enrolled on church books that take the intoxicating cup. But, sir, they are not Christians." One party came to the grove bringing their wine and cards, and were preparing for a dance, when they were kindly informed that none of these things were ever permitted there. They became very angry, boasted of their "church membership," and from that time have done all in their power to injure us in every possible manner, and as they have plenty of money, of course they have their influence over a certain class. Liquor is the curse of our nation to-day, and all that are in any way connected with the accursed traffic are to blame for the crimes committed and wrongs done. It costs something to be a true child of God and stand for the right, yet it pays as nothing else does; for we have peace with God, which flows like a river to the soul, a conscience void of offence toward God and our fellow beings. God help us to do right in all things, and then we shall be free from just censure and no blame can rest upon us. Mrs. L. M. HORT.

PITH AND POINT.

THE AMERICAN VOTE IN IOWA.

A very light vote was cast last Tuesday by all parties. A few American ballots were cast to let it be known that the American party is still kicking. There are many who never have voted the American ticket who know it is right. One man at the polls said to me, while looking at the American ticket said, "That is the ticket that will win after a while." Another said "That is the right ticket, I like it the best but it can't win now." "A large majority of the honest, intelligent voters are like them and don't vote their principles because they cannot now win. But if a majority would vote right it would win. May God give them a conscience to vote right."—CYRUS SMITH, Beaconsfield Iowa.

A FAITHFUL PASTOR.

The work still goes on in our field of work. Along with the other duties of the circuit work I occasionally strike out boldly on a leading line of reform work, and make an address to "tell," in arousing the people to thought. In this way I have recently talked on national reform as presented by the National Reform Association, and taken one morning service to present secret organizations in true Gospel light. At the last morning service I distributed Anti-masonic tracts, and met with encouraging words. The people are waking up!—C. E. WALKER, Twin Brooks, Dakota.

THE "WILL FOR THE DEED."

Also fifty cents toward sending the paper to some one else. I wish I could multiply it by one hundred. Your paper does us good, as it will all who read it. May God bless you abundantly in speaking the truth in love. Spiritual weapons are mighty to the pulling down of strongholds.—WM. AINSWORTH, Monroe, Wisconsin.

Edward S. Morris, the Quaker philanthropist of Philadelphia, who supports the school in Liberia, writes of his business efforts:

"Faith, work and patience will yet perpetuate the one thing I do—the Anna Morris School, Arthington, Liberia, West Africa. Your Cynosure is read and appreciated among the five hundred people at Arthington. I do like all you print therein."

WHO HAS THIS SONG?

Will you send me the song, years ago against Masonry. I remember one verse. Some one who reads your paper will remember the rest. I give below what I now remember:

"In the county of Culpepper I drew my first breath,
But now in Ft. Niagara I die a cruel death;
If I had taken the advice my father gave to me,
I never would be murdered for Freemasonry."

—H. A. MERRILL, Walkerton, Ind.

SEND ON THE TEN DOLLARS.

Brother Foote and I think those twenty grand testimonials from men so well and widely known, which you give your readers on the seventh page of the Cynosure, with an addition of one of the pungent sentences of Gerrit Smith, Pres. Finney, Dr. Colver, Eld. Bernard, and a few others which you can recall, would make as good four page tract—if not better—than any you have on your list. If your "Publishing Board" agree with this suggestion, and conclude so to publish, Bro. Foote will send ten dollars to help bear the expense. What say you?

It is suggested that Miss. Willard and Joseph Cook's testimony with Mr. Moody's, also be added with Lord Beaconsfield's, etc.

Your brothers in the good work, and with love unbounded and unabated.

C. C. FOOTE.

GEO. W. CLARK.

We purpose to make the collection of testimonies from statesmen as complete as possible, and then arrange another group of witnesses from eminent preachers of the Gospel. The tract proposition is good. Bro. Foote may safely invest.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE WRITINGS OF JOHN.

LESSON IX.—November 28, 1886.—John's vision of Christ. —Rev. 1:4-18.

GOLDEN TEXT.—I am he that liveth, and was dead: and behold I am alive forever more.—Rev. 1:18.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The salvation. vs. 4-8. As seven was the symbolic number which denoted completeness, the seven churches and the seven spirits stand for the various divisions and multiform workings of one Church and one Spirit. The Methodist, Episcopalian, or Congregational churches have equally a part with the churches of Ephesus or Smyrna, in this dedicatory introduction. Variety in unity is God's law, both in the kingdom of nature and of grace. When we see iniquity abounding, truth crushed, error triumphant, and human governments arraying themselves on the side of wrong, there is wonderful encouragement in the thought that Christ is still the world's actual Ruler, though the arch enemy has for a time usurped authority. "Unto Him that loved us and washed us from our sins in His own blood," etc. In one of the so called knightly or Christian degrees of Masonry, the candidate is told:—"These are they who have come out of great tribulation and have washed their robes in their own blood!" Voltaire was probably the strongest champion that Atheism ever put forward, but though his works are among the most witty and intellectual of human writings, they never began to have the power for mischief which is possessed by such doctrines taught under a system of oath-bound secrecy, and cloaked to the view of outsiders with a hypocritical semblance of religion. "And hath made us a kingdom," etc. Do we keep in constant remembrance the thought that our bodies, our souls, everything belonging to us are Christ's kingdom? Let there be no rebel appetite, no unsubdued passion destroying the order and warring against the peace of that kingdom. "I am Alpha and Omega," etc. Christ is not only the crowning fact of Revelation; he is the centre of the world's history. All creation is grouped around his cross, and all philosophy and science when more clearly apprehended will be seen to be in perfect harmony with the great truths of inspiration.

2. The Vision of Christ. vs. 9-18. In the midst of the seven golden candlesticks John sees a wondrous vision—one like unto the Son of Man—and yet how unlike that form which bowed to death on the cross! Whether John really recognized the Christ on whose bosom he had leaned cannot be told, but it is certain that he believed he was looking on Divinity, and fell at his feet as dead under the terror of the thought. "Fear not." John needed that vision. He was a lonely exile, the last of the band of apostles, and himself continually threatened with a martyr's death. The powers of darkness were conspiring for one last determined effort to crush out the religion of Jesus. So all Christian workers, all advocates of unpopular reforms, need that same vision to-day. We see our own weakness and the enemy's strength, and we have our hours of gloom and despondency, as perhaps John did. But the same great Leader goes before us, He who is able to slay every foe with the breath of his mouth. And still we hear His voice saying, "I am the first and the last and the Living One."

LIGHT FROM THE WORD.

How is Christ the faithful witness? Isa. 55:4; John 18:37. Where is it prophesied that they which pierced him shall look on him? Zech. 12:10. What prophets had a similar vision? Dan. 7:9; Ezek. 1:28.

From Peloubet's Notes.

ILLUSTRATION.—The interpreters are as men who stand upon a plain to watch the sunrise. When the first veil of night is withdrawn, and the starlight is somewhat paled, the more ardent than the rest will cry, "The dawn!" but the rest answer, "Not yet." Then when the mountain-peaks begin to flame, another will cry, "The dawn!" and the rest will still reply, "Not yet." And when the landscape around catches its true colors, another will cry, "The dawn!" But only when the great and glorious orb leaps into view will all be one in crying, "The dawn! the dawn!" So is the coming of Christ. Some look upon the faint lightening in the moral atmosphere, and say, "Christ comes!" Others look to the reflected lights of truth proclaimed in the high places of the world, and say, "Christ comes!" Others look to the general diffusion of knowledge, and say, "Christ comes!" They are right, and they are wrong; right, for it is indeed Christ who is thus enlightening the world; they are wrong, for there is a coming greater than these, when he will, in fuller manifestation of himself, tabernacle with his people as their everlasting light.—W. Boyd Carpenter.

"And from the seven Spirits which are before (in the presence of) his throne." The Holy Spirit in his seven-fold (i.e., perfect, complete, universal) energy, corresponding to the seven churches.—J., F., and B. Holy Ghost sevenfold in his operations; "that doth his seven fold gifts impart." He is regarded here not so much in his personal unity as in his manifold energies; just as light, being one, does yet in the prism separate itself into its seven colors; for "there are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit" (1 Cor. 12:4). The manifold gifts, operations, energies of the Holy Ghost are here represented under the number seven, being, as it is, the number of completeness in the Church.—D. Glenworth Butler.

"And the prince of the kings of the earth." That which the tempter held forth to Jesus (Matt. 4:8) on condition of worshipping him, he has now attained by the way of his humiliation unto death; viz., victory over the world (John 16:33).—De Wette. Above all emperors and kings, above all armies and multitudes, he thought of the crucified as ruling and directing the course of history, and certain in his own due time to manifest his sovereignty.—Prof. Plumptre. What are we to see in the simple Anno Domini of our dates and superscriptions, but that for some reason the great world-history has been bending itself to the lowly person of Jesus. Bushnell.

"And hath made us kings." Christians are kings, not unto themselves, but unto God. (1) They are made kings over the earth: the best this world can give ministers to God's people. (2) The principles and hopes of the Christian shall prevail in the earth. (3) They are kings over all forces and powers; everything shall be made subservient to the cause they love. (4) They are kings, in the sense of leaders and examples. (5) As in all true kingship they are kings not to be ministered unto, but to minister, to serve men, and help men, not to rule over men for their own advantage.—P.

"And priests." (1) As teachers of divine truths to men; (2) to sacrifice for men; (3) to lead men to God; (4) to be helpers, especially of the poor, the sick, the needy.

"Out of his mouth a sharp two-edged sword." This figure expresses the fact that Christ overcomes the world with his word, as with a two-edged sword.

"The sword wherewith thou dost command,
Is in thy mouth, and not thy hand."

Christ's simple word is intended here; hence there is also a reference to the power of that word, in so far as it is contained in the preaching of his servants.—Lange. By his word he acts, he creates, he overcomes, and he destroys.—Craven.

"And when I saw him, I fell at his feet as dead." From fear and awe. Being in the Spirit does not supersede existence in the flesh. Just as dreamers express their bodily feelings by physical acts, e. g., by starting or weeping, so might St. John while in this ecstasy (see Acts 9:3).—Alford.

PRACTICAL.

Vers. 4, 5. The one God is represented in his triune nature, that we may more fully comprehend his manifold nature and relations to us.

Vers. 4-8. Our Saviour Jesus Christ, because he is both God and man, is the revealer of God's truth, the lover of our souls, the redeemer from sin, the proof of the resurrection and the life, the prince over all world powers, the eternal and almighty God,—just the Saviour we need.

Therefore he is coming in glory, and the triumph of his kingdom is sure.

All Christians are made kings and priests, and should walk worthy of the vocation wherewith they are called.

Ver. 10. We ought all to be in the Spirit on the Lord's day, and then the Lord will speak to us.

Ver. 12. The churches are the precious light-bearers of Christ, so that Christ's life and doctrines and love and power shall shine from them upon the world.

Ver. 13 Jesus dwells among the churches. "Lo, I am with you always."

Christ keeps his human feelings and sympathies even in heaven, on the throne. He is still the Son of man, to help, reprove, comfort, and save; as well as God, able to give all good things to his people.

Vers. 14-18. In Jesus are all the qualities and powers needful to give the victory to his people over all enemies.

Ver. 16. God's ministers are like stars held in the hand of God; shining by his light, examples and guides to the flock, controlled and guided by God, and kept by the right hand of his power.

SECRETSOCIETIESCONDEMNED.

BY GREAT MEN IN THE STATE.

George Washington, in a letter written a year before his death: "I preside over no lodge, nor have I been in one more than once or twice during the last thirty years."

Charles Francis Adams: "A more perfect agent for the devising and execution of conspiracies against church and state could scarcely have been conceived."

Thaddeus Stevens: "By Freemasonry, trial by jury is transformed into an engine of despotism and Masonic fraud."

President Millard Fillmore, J. C. Spencer and others: "The Masonic fraternity tramples upon our rights, defeats the administration of justice, and bids defiance to every government which it cannot control."

Chief Justice John Marshall: "The institution of Masonry ought to be abandoned as one capable of much evil and incapable of producing any good which might not be effected by safe and open means."

William Wirt: "I view it as at war with the fundamental principles of the social compact, and a wicked conspiracy against the laws of God and man, that ought to be put down."

John Quincy Adams: "I am prepared to complete the demonstration before God and man, that the Masonic oaths, obligations and penalties cannot by any possibility be reconciled to the laws of morality, of Christianity, or of the land."

Charles Francis Adams: "Every man who takes a Masonic oath forbids himself from divulging any criminal act unless it might be murder or treason, that may be communicated to him under the seal of fraternal bond, even though such concealment were to prove a burden upon his conscience and a violation of his bounden duty to society and to his God."

Charles Sumner: "I find two powers here in Washington in harmony, and both are antagonistic to our free institutions, and tend to centralization and anarchy—Freemasonry and Slavery; and they must both be destroyed if our country is to be the home of the free, as our ancestors designed it."

Thurlow Weed: "I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the Anti-masonic excitement by a sincere desire, first to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of secret societies."

William H. Seward: "Before I would place my hand between the hands of other men in a secret lodge, order, class, or council, and, bending on my knee before them, enter into combination with them for any object, personal or political, good or bad, I would pray to God that that hand and that knee might be paralyzed, and that I might become an object of pity and even the mockery of my fellow-men."

Wendell Phillips: "I wish you success most heartily in your efforts to arouse the community to the danger of secret societies. They are a great evil; entirely out of place in a republic, and no patriot should join or uphold them. Considering the great forces which threaten the welfare of the nation in the next thirty years, and how readily and efficiently they can use any secret organizations, such should not be allowed to exist."

George Washington's Farewell Address: "The very idea of the power and the right of the people to establish government, presupposes the duty of every individual to obey the established government. All obstructions to the execution of the laws, all combinations and associations, under whatever plausible character, with the real design to direct, control, counteract, or awe the regular deliberation and action of the constituted authorities, are destructive of this fundamental principle, and of fatal tendency."

Daniel Webster: "All secret associations the members of which take upon themselves extraordinary obligations to one another, and are bound together by secret oaths, are naturally sources of jealousy and just alarm to others; are especially unfavorable to harmony and mutual confidence among men living together under popular institutions, and are dangerous to the general cause of civil liberty and just government. Under the influence of this conviction it is my opinion that the future administration of all such oaths and the formation of all such obligations should be prohibited by law."

Edward Everett: "A secret society so widely diffused and connected as this puts a vast power, capable of the most dangerous abuse, into hands irresponsible to the public."

George Washington (to Gov. Trumbull): "Masonry is a benevolent institution, which may be employed for the best or worst purposes."

Richard Rush: Hooker, personifying law, eloquently exclaims, "her seat is the bosom of God, her voice the harmony of the world; everything on earth does her homage, the highest is not beyond her control, the least as claiming her protection." Masonry has overset this primordial system. She has dethroned this image of God upon earth. To renege it over so insolent a victor, we must have a political organization. There is no other way of assailing, there is no other hope of vanquishing, there need be no other dream of humbling such a foe. It fights with desperation.

Wendell Phillips: "History shows them perverting justice, stopping at no crime to protect and conceal their mummeries; controlling politics for selfish and personal ends, and interfering with great danger in national emergencies. Every good citizen should make war on all secret societies, and give himself no rest until they are forbidden by law and rooted out of existence."

John Hancock: "I am opposed to all secret associations."

James Madison: "From the number and character of those who now support the charges against Masonry, I cannot doubt that it is at least susceptible of abuse, outweighing any disadvantages promised by its patrons."

All secret, oath-bound political parties are dangerous to any nation, no matter how pure or how patriotic the motives and principles which first bring them together.—General U. S. Grant.

James G. Birney, candidate of the Liberty party for President, was a Freemason, "but never entered a lodge after he joined the church, and, as his sons grew up, he cautioned them against joining any secret order."—Gen. Wm. Birney.

Myron Holley of New York:—"Such a rebellion Freemasonry has raised. It has violated the dearest rights of nature, and the most sacred enactments of our laws, and this in a spirit manifestly treasonable, for it has done this in pursuance of solemn, deliberate and voluntary obligations to a foreign government.—I mean its own—a government far more alien to that which claims our allegiance than any which has ever afflicted mankind."

Gerrit Smith, in an address, 1870:—Masonry murdered Morgan. If it could not conceal his murderers, it nevertheless protected them. It overrode the laws of the land and ruled the courts and the ballot-boxes. Moreover, it is capable of repeating the crimes. Why then should we not dread secret societies, and do what we can to bring them to an end?

Samuel C. Pomeroy, in an address, 1883:—"There may be a broad distinction between the good and the bad in secret societies, but as they all alike have oath-bound obligations to complete oblivion of all they do or say, I have no means of judging the good from the bad. So I turn away from them all to the great Teacher who said, 'In secret have I said nothing'."

Joseph Ritner, governor of Pennsylvania, 1837:—"If it be true as the lamented Golden (himself one of the initiated) declared that many a Mason became a great man but no great man ever became a Mason, how nearly does it concern the youth of our country to pause and reflect before they commit their present standing and future reputation to the keeping of a society, which for its cold-hearted and selfish purposes could immolate even the fame of Washington at the shrine of its abominations."

The Christian Cynosure.

EDITORS.

J. BLANCHARD.

HENRY L. KELLOGG.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 18, 1886.

MESSMATES, AHOY!

The Cynosure is in its eighteenth year. The harvest of newspapers is on us. Let us look over some of its hindrances and its helps.

1st. Our success hinders us. The American, Washington; Christian Witness, New Hampshire; Conserver, Dayton; Crank and Free Press, Iowa; have all sprung up on our field and taken some from our list. Many, especially farmers hurried with work, will take the smaller paper. We count all of these papers part of our success, and hail their coming.

2nd. Increased and intense competition. Old papers, as the weekly newspapers, have large lists and live by advertising. They cut down prices of their daily sheets from five to three cents; and new papers sell for a penny. They could afford to pay for being read.

3rd. Non-sectarianism. The Cynosure has no denomination behind it.

4th. The reign of terror by the lodge. This is mitigating; but the dread of a secret order, meeting nightly in every city, town, village and hamlet of our wide country, is dire and terrible. Thousands who wish and pray for its success would not dare to brave Masonic malice, by putting the Cynosure on their center table.

5th. The lodge-boatwain's whistle. We have seen a young tar give a long, clear, shrill whistle on a receiving ship, and five hundred men wind their way up her sides and stand for orders on deck. "The Sons of Temperance" were declared too loose, weak and dull, and so run down; and the old, dead Know Nothings have been resurrected by the secret lodge whistle. A fight is coming, and everything that has secrecy to it is on hand, sworn, pledged, and committed against us. The very gates of the Prohibition party begin to be thronged by those who wish less to help prohibition than to hinder us.

Against all these obstacles the Cynosure holds her course, like the phantom ship of Coleridge:

"Without a breeze, without a tide,
She steadies with upright keel."

Let us now look at our HELPS.

1st. This is the season to strike for subscribers.

2nd. There is no paper more popular with its readers than the Cynosure.

3rd. Thousands have let the Cynosure drop carelessly who would be glad to take it up.

4th. The strikes are opening the eyes and ears of the American people.

5th. The men who have "heard with pleasure" of the National Christian Congress, who "give their voices decidedly in favor of it," and "hope the call will issue and the meeting be held"—these men fairly represent the opinion of American Christians, and they are all opposed to the lodge.

6th. We have now three full months to work before the Christian Congress, Feb. 22; and if one-half of our subscribers should get us one new subscriber each in this next three months our list would be put up so high that it will be all down hill work beyond.

THE CHRISTIAN CONGRESS.

This has been fixed for next February 22nd, Washington's birthday. Some have been impatient at the long delay, but no time has been lost and no pains spared. It has been presented to and approved by prominent clergymen and editors in Chicago, Pittsburgh, Boston, New York, Princeton, Philadelphia; Cincinnati and Dayton, O.; Berea, Ky.; Knoxville, Nashville and Memphis, Tenn.; Natchez, Miss.; New Orleans, Washington and a large number of towns intervening. Few meetings were ever called under sanction and endorsement superior to that given in another column of this Cynosure.

This congress is called for the "discussion of the secret lodge system." It is called by men who are opposed to it, but who are willing to accord a hearing to its members who are endorsed as entitled to speak for it, if they desire to be heard. The effect of the meeting will be as stated by Hon. Halleck Floyd at Columbus, O., "To develop the latent opposition to the secret orders, and to unify that already developed." Not to evoke and rely on human authority, but to ascertain the Divine teaching on the subject and show how to reduce it to practice.

No time could have been more opportune for calling such a convention than the present. Two regiments of troops, under pay of the people of Illinois, are now encamped in Chicago against a secret society, which has attempted to stop the supply of food to a considerable portion of the United States till its demands to dictate the time and terms of labor to employers shall be obeyed. The persons claiming this control of business and bread, generally speaking, employ no labor themselves, and perform none.

The deliberations thus far have been entirely harmonious; and the convening of the congress is in the hands of an efficient committee, who, it is believed, will use their best endeavors to effect the grave and important end proposed.

The readers of the Cynosure, however, will remember that this is not a "wrestle with flesh and blood." It is Elijah's struggle at Mt. Carmel repeated; and nothing but fire from heaven will decide it.

THE LODGE AND PROHIBITION.

The Illinois Grand Division of the Sons of Temperance lately (Oct. 26) met at Grand Crossing and voted: "We declare our independence of both political parties." They say: "This Grand Division was the first temperance organization in Illinois to pronounce publicly for prohibition. Since that time the order has been working for this grand purpose." This will be news to most people: "All the other temperance organizations have gradually fallen into line, and now the grand army of temperance is marching on shoulder to shoulder."

Yes; but what sort of an army is that where part of the soldiers carry concealed weapons in addition to loyal muskets, hid about their persons to be used at the command of grand officers of secret orders, some of whose officers are distillers and saloonists! The arrogance of secret orders is amazing. "The Sons of Temperance" were opened by Masons forty odd years ago in Cincinnati, and had a great run. Two years ago the Prohibition votes in that city were but a handful, and the Hamilton county prohibition convention (including Cincinnati) had no secretism in it for it adopted a resolution in favor of open work. The "order," which was a year or two ago almost expired, is reviving along with the expired Know-Nothings. Both are mere janizaries of the lodge, one professing temperance, the other Protestantism.

THEODORE T. GURNEY,

who died Tuesday, November 9th, was for some years a simple deacon in a Congregational church in Chicago. He made and lost a fortune speculating in grain. Our first knowledge of him was gained from his printed application for a Masonic degree, which was conferred on him in a room called, in the lodge language, "The Third Heaven." The papers tell us he had taken the thirty-three degrees, Scotch Rite, and had, of course, sworn, "So help me God," between one and two hundred times to keep the secrets of those degrees, and had held "Most Worshipful," "Right Eminent," and "Illustrious" offices beyond ordinary memory to repeat. He took a Knight Templar (Rev. Mr. Healy) as pastor, and ran up the Tabernacle Mission church with great rapidity, by signs and grips; but it sunk as rapidly soon after Healy left, and its friends appealed to Mr. Moody to save it.

Carter Harrison says of him, "We have lost an honest man." His obituary tells us that "Not even the slightest breath of suspicion was ever raised as to his honesty." The same writer says, a little on, "The Masonic Relief Committee, after the great fire, placed all their funds, amounting to $91,000, in his hands to aid the sufferers, which he handled to the entire satisfaction of all." The then printed volume, containing the report under the auspices of D. C. Cregier, shows that of the ninety-one thousand dollars received to that fund, only thirty thousand ever reached the sufferers. The other sixty thousand went for officials and Masonic uses. In the distribution of the thousands on thousands which poured into Chicago from all sources after the fire, no questions were asked, and Masons and their families shared with other citizens.

Though Mr. Gurney had for years been a member of another city church, Masons applied for the First Congregational church (Dr. Goodwin's) for the funeral. Three of the church official board objected, but the church was granted. The First Congregational church in Northampton, Mass., was used in like manner to bury a member of the Unitarian congregation there who belonged to no church, though the Unitarian church where the dead man attended is a fine, large building. The First Church in Galesburg, Ill., was applied for in like manner to bury a Mason who was a Universalist. The object is obvious, to force Congregationalists to acknowledge Masons as Christian, and their demon-worship as equal to the worship of Christ; and, as Dr. Goodwin is well known to be opposed to the lodge, to extort his submission or disturb the peace of his church.

The Chicago Evening Mail, in a full account of the funeral, makes no mention of remarks by Dr. Goodwin and Dr. E. F. Williams, who both spoke. If these excellent men obeyed the pagan maxim, De Mortuis nil nisi bonum, say nothing but good of the dead, it is to be hoped they did not endanger the souls of their hearers by recognizing as a child of God one whose life has been given to the worship of the devil. For if there ever was a "cup of devils" (1 Cor. 10: 21) drunk on earth, when Mr. Gurney drank wine from a human skull, invoking double damnation "on his soul forever" if he should reveal a Knight Templar's secrets, he then and there took that cup, which Paul says incapacitates for taking "the cup of the Lord."

THE LESSON.

These, and other beloved brethren, will see in this case the craft of that foul creature who demanded that Jesus should worship him, and because he would not, followed him to "the hour of darkness" and the cross. Nor is it new or wonderful that Satan should muster his forces when his "strongholds" are assailed. So was it when slavery fell. So is it now. Slavery demanded submission of the free States, and seemed to gain it. The lodge, that helped organize the rebellion, now moves on the religion of the Puritans in a leading, perhaps the leading church which represents them. So a legion of devils met Christ at Gadara, and got a committee of Gadarenes to request the Saviour to depart and not molest them; but their devilish power was broken in the poor demoniac; and they themselves shared the degradation, and may yet share the fate of the hogs. No one pretends that these dark lodges are of God's planting, and just so truly as they are not, "they shall be rooted up." For though heaven and earth shall, Christ's words "shall not pass away."

THE STOCK-YARD WAR.

If any thing can open the eyes of American Christians, it would seem the local civil war at the Chicago Stock-yards must do it. Two regiments of men, with forty rounds to each, are ordered out by Gov. Oglesby to face and fight a single secret society.

The old Saxon word, "knight," meant a boy in the sense in which soldiers are called "the boys." Knights Templar and Knights of St. John were military priests, whose secrecy provoked suspicion and their arrogance, wealth, and vices embroiled them with the governments of Europe, whose overthrow they were accused of seeking. Fifty-five were burned alive at one time; and, like a multitude of others, they died without the reputation of martyrs. The name of this mongrel order, or orders, was made by Cervantes in his "Don Quixotte," the laughing-stock of the world.

The "Knights of Labor" which now has its grip on Chicago provision-houses, was started and named by a Philadelphia tailor seventeen years ago (1869), a year after a large convention from thirteen Christian denominations started in Pittsburgh the national discussion of the secret orders. Since that Pittsburgh convention, the cauldron of secretism has boiled, and is boiling over with "orders." The two pillars of this modern Dagonism are sworn SECRECY and OBEDIENCE. No matter about the form, the thing done is an oath. The Knight of Labor takes it with his left hand on his heart, his right lifted to heaven. The thing sought is to bind the soul's allegiance to a mortal man. And the inaccessible, unavailable idea of God without a mediator, Christ, is used to enforce that allegiance, and as there is but one opposition deity, wearing ten thousand forms, that rival deity is the god of the assembly, division, or lodge. Christ has given the character of his rival as cruel and false, a "liar and murderer from the beginning."

Some twenty thousand men, earning high wages in the first blasts of winter are ordered to quit, slaughtering meat for two or three millions of people to eat. A young Roman Catholic, thirty-seven years old, is the "Master" of these workmen; and three men, Barry, Carlton and Marshal, appear living at Chicago a hotel, and, as representing Powderly, talk as if they owned these toiling masses whose noses they are holding to the grindstone of a winter of want.

The packers met and voted that they would not employ a workman who would obey, not the man who paid him but Powderly and Co., who live on his money and pay him nothing. This vote was passed by the packers Monday week. On Friday they rescinded that vote, and consented to employ those whom they thought good men, though duped by their spurious masters. These masters, who own no property in Chicago, hold no office known to the law, present themselves with the coolest possible impudence and tell how they are willing to settle these difficulties: as Satan, if his worship might be practiced, would give the kingdoms of the world, not one foot of which he owned.

And we Illinoisans are keeping a small army—at our expense, and their injury—to keep the men who have quit their places from killing the men who are willing to take and fill the places they have left. And here, at this writing, the parties stand. The absurdity and wickedness of this strike are such that no candid man can help abhorring them, and nothing could shield them but a false religion.

ROYAL HAMMOND, Esq., of Galesburg, Ill., who was, two years since, a candidate for Congress of the American party, writes thus: "It is said there are two whisky or liquor-shops in the basement of the Capitol at Washington. If so, please tell us when they went there? Who rents them? What license they pay? and to whom they pay it? In short, give us a concise history of the saloonism over which Congress sits in its deliberations."

As Prof. Bailey is on the ground, we beg that he will answer Mr. Hammond's pertinent and proper questions in the American, and the Cynosure will give the facts to our readers.

MR. MOODY writes: "Tell the brethren that the expected speedy coming of Christ inspires and strengthens me in the work of bringing souls to him." This is scriptural and sound; because his converts are warned to quit the worship of anti-Christ. In Rev. 19:20, preceding the millennium chapter, we have: "The beast was taken, and with him the false prophet that wrought miracles before him," with which he deceived them that had received the mark of the beast, and them that had worshipped his image. These both were cast alive into a lake of fire burning with brimstone." Thus the fall of the lodge beast precedes the millennium.

THE SUGGESTION TO PASTORS by Bro. Arnold on the 5th page is good. Let them act upon it promptly and with Christian courage. Let our readers mention it to the pastors, rousing their interest and extending more widely the effort which is proposed in the suggestion.

—Rev. R. Loggan has changed his post-office address from Clifton to Brantford, Washington Co., Kansas. Friends in that State will please note the change and write him as often as possible about his lecture work.

—President McAfee, of Park College, Missouri, has completely broken down in health and dropped his work, though he yet remains nominally at the head of the institution and is consulted on important matters.

—Secretary Stoddard started for Otsego county, New York, on business for the Association, and expecting to speak in that vicinity and at convenient points on his return, which will be in about a week from the date of this paper.

—Bro. S. E. Orvis of Waukesha, Wis., dropped into the Cynosure office Saturday, to renew his subscription and report the good work being done by Bro. Browne. He heard him Friday give a remarkably able address in the Free Baptist church at Rochester in Racine county.

—Bro. E. Mathews of Michigan has been in Chicago for a few days arranging for a contemplated trip to his old home in England. He makes this journey to assist in the preparation of a personal history of his somewhat eventful life which he hopes to publish in due time. He is also preparing a course of lectures on topics closely related to the reform and church work to which he has of late years been devoted with remarkable energy. He is engaged to speak in Michigan, in Western New York, and in New York city during the remainder of this month.

—Leaving the city of Mobile and its interesting churches, Bro. Hinman turned back last week to Columbus, Mississippi, where he expected to remain a week before visiting several points in Alabama. Everywhere he marks the rapid change in sentiment on the lodge question, and does not undervalue the influence of the Cynosure in bringing this about. There should be 1,000 copies sent weekly among the colored churches. Who will help again before Jan. 1st to do this?

—Another good report from Bro. Hawley is laid over a week. Bro. Hawley remained at Clearfield to attend other meetings in pastor Cleland's (United Presbyterian) church, addressed by himself and brethren M. A. Gault and Rufus Smith. Bro. Gault writes to the College Springs Crank: "Bro. Hawley is my idea of a reform agent. He is a logical and persuasive orator, and is a grand personal interviewer. It is seldom he fails to induce a man to reach down into his pocket for funds. I expect to hold several conventions with him this month in eastern Iowa." A county convention is to be held at Wasioja, Minn., on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday of this week, and Bro. Hawley is engaged to attend and speak.

—Bro. I. R. B. Arnold, after visiting Hebron and Munda near the northern line of Illinois, expects to visit Aurora this week. Bro. Leaman writes with enthusiasm of the lectures in Hebron, the lodge question being presented so ably and candidly that conviction, he is sure, must follow in many minds. The town is badly lodge ridden and this report is cheering.

THE NATIONAL N. C. A. MEETING.

TO THE PASTORS AND CHURCHES AIDED BY THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION IN THE SOUTH.

DEAR BRETHREN AND FRIENDS:—The National Christian Association, whose special mission is to expose, withstand and remove secret societies, expects to hold a National Convention at Knoxville, Tennessee, during the latter part of December. The special object of this convention will be to impress on the minds of the Christian people of the South, and particularly the colored churches, the evil and danger of the secret lodge system that is now so extensively prevalent in our country, and which we believe to be a great obstacle to the progress of Christianity and the supremacy of righteous laws.

We earnestly solicit your sympathy, prayers and co-operation, and respectfully call your attention to the following reasons for a united and persevering effort to remove these organizations from the churches and from the land, and especially to their evil influence over our colored fellow citizens.

1. They tend to impair that sense of personal independence, self-respect, and self-reliance which slavery did so much to destroy and which is so essential to the accumulation of property and to social and political advancement. The colored member that depends on his society to aid him in his need, and to bury him when he dies, will make correspondingly less effort to provide for himself. This is one of the serious obstacles to the material prosperity of the colored people.

2. They substitute in place of Christian benevolence, which does good unto all men and "especially to the household of faith," the selfish principle of giving, that men may receive as much again, and thus impairs one of the most essential influences of the Christian religion.

3. They are extravagant and wasteful. The most carefully prepared statistics show that on an average less than one-third of the money paid into the secret orders goes out for relief. The two-thirds are wasted in salaries, entertainments, and pompous displays.

4. They are delusive and fraudulent. They promise aid and publish their benefactions; but conceal the fact that their demands are more than twice as great as all they bestow.

5. They absorb the time, money and interest of their members, to the great detriment of the cause of Christianity. Membership in several orders, with frequent meetings, and the payment of dues, renders it impossible to attend to all the meetings of the church and to contribute to its adequate support.

Lastly and mainly, they substitute a system of spurious morality and false religion in place of gospel morality and the religion of our Lord Jesus Christ. This is especially true of Freemasonry, which binds its members to profane covenants and teaches a religion that ignores the Divine Saviour. We earnestly hope to see a full attendance of all those who love Christ and our fellow men.

The Fayette County, Iowa, Christian Association will meet in the United Brethren church at Brush Creek Wednesday evening, Nov. 24th, and continue over the two days following. Rev. C. F. Hawley, agent of the Iowa State Christian Association, will be in attendance and address the convention concerning the relation of men secretly sworn and banded together, to Republican government and to the church of Christ. Also Rev. M. A. Gault, agent of the National Reform Association, will present the claims upon this nation to make acknowledgment in the Constitution of its dependence upon God and obligations to him. There will be free entertainment. Let all the friends of these reforms attend. Let all who have not investigated these subjects attend. Also let those who oppose the reforms attend and hear the discussion.

Monopolies of all kinds should be discouraged as much as possible. It is manifestly impossible to prevent them entirely, but any organization or combination to create a monopoly can be discouraged by restrictive laws. Combinations of mining companies or of railway companies to maintain or advance rates; combinations of workmen to exclude other workmen, women or boys from the opportunity to earn a living in their respective trades—all such combinations are, we think, wrong in principle and vicious in their results.—N. Y. Witness.

NATIONAL CONFERENCE ON THE SECRET LODGE SYSTEM.

At a consultation held July 14th last, definite shape was given to a movement which its promoters are confident will prove of great national interest. The call for this meeting stated:

"Whereas prominent men of various denominations have expressed a desire for a convention to be held in Chicago to consider the nature and principles of the secret lodge system and its influence on the Christian religion and civil liberty, therefore, the undersigned recommend, and will (D. V.) attend a meeting at Farwell Hall parlor, . . . to consider this subject and take such action as may seem advisable at the time."

The names of W. C. Gray, editor of the Interior; James Tompkins, Illinois Home Missionary secretary; W. T. Meloy, D. D., pastor Memorial United Presbyterian church; C. A. Blanchard, President Wheaton College; J. E. Roy, D. D., secretary American Missionary Association; E. P. Goodwin, D. D., pastor First Congregational church; Daniel Irion, pastor United Evangelical church, Elmhurst; M. C. Ranssen, pastor Gethsemane Swedish Lutheran church; Rev. Joseph Travis, editor of the Free Methodist; F. H. Revell, and seventeen others were signed to this paper. Dr. Meloy was chairman and Rev. J. Travis secretary of the meeting, which was well attended.

It was decided to call a Christian conference in Chicago to discuss the secret society question in all its bearings, and a preliminary committee was appointed on programme and to secure a more general call.

The following paper also had a limited circulation to ascertain the views of prominent men, and was signed with rarely an exception:

We learn with pleasure that by a Conference recently held at Farwell Hall Parlor, Chicago, it was "Resolved, That a Congress of Christians be called to meet in Chicago to discuss the Secret Lodge system"; and that Dr. W. C. Gray of the Interior, Dr. E. P. Goodwin of the First Congregational Church, Dr. Ranssen of the Augustana (Luth.) Synod, [C. W.] Pritchard of [the Christian Worker] Friends' Church, Dr. Meloy of the U. P. Church, Mr. Revell of the Y. M. C. A., and Dr. Lawrence of the Baptist Church, were appointed to prepare for and call such a Congress. We, the undersigned, give our voice decidedly in favor of calling such a meeting late in the present autumn or in the early winter. The history of secret societies in this and other lands and the present state of our country brought about and managed by secret orders, seem to us to make the calling of such a congress important and desirable, and the high character and standing of the committee are a sufficient guarantee for the wisdom and conduct of such a meeting. We hope the call will issue and the meeting be held.

The committee reported to the meeting of consultation Nov. 9th, that replies had been received from a number of the gentlemen addressed by them, and as part of their report letters were read from Joseph Cook, the Boston lecturer, who says: "I very cordially approve of your plan of calling a meeting for the discussion of all sides of the topic of the secret lodge system. My public engagements will probably be so exacting that I cannot attend the proposed convention, but I shall make my best effort to be present." Dr. Howard Crosby wrote: "The secret lodge system belongs to despotisms and not to democracies. Whatever in it is not babyish is dangerous. I favor a convention on the subject." Dr. E. H. Fairchild, of Berea College, also approved the convention and promised an address.

It was decided to call a national conference on the 22nd of February next, and the following gentlemen were appointed a committee of arrangements and to issue a call: Calvin W. Pritchard; Rev. J. E. Roy, D. D.; Rev. B. T. Roberts, editor Free Methodist; Rev. M. C. Ranssen; Rev. L. N. Stratton, D. D., Wesleyan Theological Seminary, Wheaton; and J. M. Hitchcock, Esq. THE HOME.

"I WILL WAIT."

There is so much I long to know!"
Why God deals with us thus and so
All through this changing life below;
But I will wait.

I want to ask the reason why
Sinners on airy pinions fly,
And good men plod ingloriously;
But I will wait.

Why some are rich and others poor,
Who are as worthy, yes, and more,
Yet tread life's way with step so sore;
But I will wait.

Why death should be allowed to come
The strength and sweetness of the home
To steal away, and leave us dumb;
But I will wait.

And if and how our every prayer
Is answered, though we can't see where
Or when the blessing falls so fair;
But I will wait.

"Till my change come." And when I stand
Among the happy white-robed band
My narrow vision shall expand.
Then in clear light all I shall see,
And God's dear love and truth will be
An endless ecstasy to me.
No sad, dark line shall stand alone;
Each joy and sorrow I have known
Shall blend in rainbow round the throne!
Yes, I will wait.

MRS. HART'S ECONOMY.

"I want to show you some under garments I've been having made lately," said Mrs. Hart to her friend, Mrs. Secor. "Such exquisite sewing, and all hand-work, too, and I get them next to nothing. Did you ever see anything finer than this ruffling and tucking?"

The ladies were sitting in Mrs. Hart's sunny front chamber. It was in perfect order, and everything about it indicated the union of good taste with the possession of money.

The furniture was costly, the carpet and rugs were rich, and the fluted pillow-shams on the elegant bed of the finest linen, edged with lace. As Mrs. Hart opened a drawer and took from it the newly-made clothing of which she had spoken, she went on to say:

"If your wardrobe needs replenishing, Jenny, now is your time. The woman who did these for me is desperately poor, and will be thankful to work at your own price. She offered to make these for twenty cents apiece. I would never thought of naming less than fifty to her myself, and I have paid eighty cents and a dollar to Miss Gilmore, for work less nicely done. But when she offered, I concluded she knew her own business best, and I jumped at the chance, I can tell you."

Mrs. Secor looked at the elegant dressing saques and other articles of clothing which her friend was proudly displaying. They were faultlessly done. But she uttered not a word for some moments, and the deepening flush on her cheeks and the light in her brown eyes told very plainly what she thought of her friend's economy. Mrs. Hart, however, suspected nothing, and went on chatting fluently.

"Have you bought your new fall hat yet, Jenny? No! Then you must see mine. I found it at Hill-yer's yesterday. Of course, I had to pay an immense price, for Madame charges extra for her style; but that made no difference. I tell Lewis, when he finds fault, that if I spend at one end, I save at another, and he knows I never exceed the amount we have thought it right to limit ourselves to. This bonnet, now, cost twenty dollars; but there isn't a prettier one in our church, nor will there be this season."

"Twenty dollars for a piece of French felt, a little velvet, a feather, and a cluster of autumn leaves! six would amply cover the actual cost of everything, Matilda, and you have willingly given the other fourteen—for what?"

"Why, you dear little goose, for the composition, the artistic combination, the effect. A woman's bonnet is the most important part of her dress, it is the head-piece, and it must be handsome. I like elegant things, anyway;" and the lady surveyed her dainty self in the mirror, and glanced complacently around her well-appointed room.

"Twenty dollars for the hat, and twenty cent all the stitches that have gone into this elaborate saque, tired stitches, too, I'm afraid, Matilda. How very, very hard the poor fingers had to toil for that poor twenty cents. It don't look like much, does it?"

As she spoke she took two silver dimes from her little steel purse, and held them thoughtfully in her hand.

"It was all the woman asked, dear," said Mrs. Hart positively. "If she had wanted more, would she not have said so? Surely she knew what she could afford to work for; I, on my part, employed her really out of charity. I had no need of more things at present, and I let her do them only because the terms were so reasonable. She is a good sewer, and if I had been selfish, I would have kept her all to myself. Now, if you go and offer her more than she demands, Jenny Secor, you will do an unfriendly thing, and hurt her prospects, too, for I intend at once to send her Eddie's new shirt-waists to make, and when spring comes she shall have all of Adela's aprons and skirts, if she continues to please me."

"Where does she live?" asked Mrs. Secor.

"At No. 12 Harvard street. It's a poky part of the city to go to. Lewis never likes me to venture into those tenement regions alone. But she'll be here to-night, and I'll send her in to see you. I have no doubt she can embroider, and Cornelia might let her help on her trousseau. I am glad I told you about her."

"What did you say her name was?" said Mrs. Secor.

"I did not say it at all, but it is Ella MacBride. She has a little sister in the Home, and that's where I met her. Being a manager, I see a good many poor people on Board days."

"Matilda, I am going to visit Ella MacBride and find out for myself what sort of a home she lives in, and what sort of food she can buy at the price you tell me satisfies her. Will you accompany me? You are known as a benevolent woman, and you ought to make visits among the poor."

"I must beg to be excused, Mrs. Secor," said Mrs. Hart with decision. "I consented to give my name and influence to the Home, as my pastor asked me to do so; but I never intended to venture into places which are unfit for ladies, nor to engage into any Quixotic schemes. My duties lie mainly at home to my husband and children. If I please them and make them happy, my conscience is satisfied."

Harvard street was fully a mile from the avenue on which the Harts and the Secors resided. Mrs. Secor was familiar with it, for her feet were accustomed to seeking the poor and sick in their homes. On leaving her friend, she stopped a car which was going to the river, near which the thronged homes of Harvard street were to be found. Homes! The name seems sadly misapplied to houses in which hundreds of human beings are crowded closer than cattle, in which there is no privacy, no opportunity for the cultivation of delicacy, no room for thrift or good house-keeping to display itself. Once used as the residences of respectable merchants, the houses which Mrs. Secor came to had fallen from their high estate. Years and years ago the former owners had moved up-town, the wave of fashion sending them far from a locality which had once been choice and aristocratic. By degrees they had sunken from the abodes of respectable mechanics and keepers of small shops, to the dwellings of the lowest laboring class whose precarious living is from hand to mouth. They had one advantage over the modern tenement house, and one only. That consisted in their solidity. The halls were wide, the stairs were strong, and on smooth pine floor and ornate ceiling there was still the old stamp of gentility and thoroughness.

The door of No. 12 was open. A dejected-looking man with a pipe in his mouth sat on the steps. A frowzy woman, with her dress torn half off and a babe in her arms, was standing behind him, apparently scolding. She ceased the torrent of her objections as the pleasant-faced lady approached, and inquired if the MacBrides lived there.

"Top floor, back room," was the brief reply.

Mrs. Secor picked her steps carefully through the hall and up the dirty stairs. She encountered half-naked children, clamorous and quarreling, nearly stumbling over a little fellow lying sound asleep in the highest passage, and was eyed suspiciously by a gaunt and savage-looking cat, who glared at her as she pushed him aside. Mrs. Secor disliked cats, but she pitied this one, for it seemed very forlorn.

Knocking at the specified door, a querulous voice bade her enter. Close to the small window sat a delicate-looking young woman, sewing with nervous haste. She scarcely glanced from her work, but left the task of entertaining to her mother, who was bending over the small stove as if to coax all the warmth she could from its feeble fire. The room was very clean, and the dress of both mother and daughter, though thin and old, was extremely neat. One evidence of refinement struck the quick eye of the visitor. A pot of mignonette in bloom stood on a shelf where the light could fall upon it, and its sweetness was lavished as generously in that poor abode as it could have been in the most palatial mansion. "Miss MacBride," said Mrs. Secor, "you will excuse my intrusion when I tell you that I have come on a matter of business. I have seen the work you are doing for my friend, Mrs. Hart, and I wish to engage you to sew for me. Can you operate on a machine?"

"I can," replied the girl, "but I have none of my own. I have never been able to get one."

"I should prefer your coming to my house. I will give you one dollar and a half per day, and for the present I shall need you four days every week. I think I may say that I will have work to employ you steadily for the next six weeks, for my niece is to be married, and there is a great deal of sewing to be done for her, and I have family work besides."

Such a gleam of joy as lighted up the pale face and flashed into the weary eyes! Such an immense thankfulness as for a moment altered its whole expression. Then she let her work fall on her lap and burst into tears.

The mother spoke.

"Indeed, madam, you don't know how we need money. My little boy has a place in a store. He gets enough to pay the rent. Ella has walked the streets till her feet were blistered in her worn-out shoes looking for work, and nobody would give her any till your friend agreed to try her, and the price was so small that it has nearly killed her to work at it. But it was better far than the shops would give. Think of a dozen ladies' wrappers at twelve cents apiece and shirts at five cents each."

"The fine work she has been putting on these garments at twenty cents, amounted to more labor than that, Mrs. MacBride. It is not wise to make one's skill too cheap, for if you have real skill and merit, you are certain after awhile to get properly remunerated. Mrs. Hart would have given more if your daughter had asked it."

"No, ma'am," emphatically said the daughter. "She took me only because I promised to make the things for so low a price. I had been to forty houses before I found one who would hire me. When am I to begin with you?"

"To-morrow morning," answered Mrs. Secor, laying her card on the table. "Be at my house at eight, and you can take breakfast before you begin. I will give you breakfast and dinner, and you can come home to supper with your mother."

Neither meat, nor tea, nor coffee, nor milk had been possible to the MacBrides in some time. Potatoes, meal and molasses, had formed their diet. A few days of good food and steady work in Mrs. Secor's sunny, airy house, wrought a great change in the looks of the seamstress, and ere long she was able to remove to better apartments. Mrs. Secor interested herself to obtain employment for her from other friends, and as the winter deepened and the poor suffered more bitterly, she multiplied her errands of charity, and tried harder than ever to find ways and means of helping those who were in distress. She did not buy as many new dresses, nor wear as rich a bonnet as Mrs. Hart, but when her head had pressed the pillow at night, her sleep was sweet, for often there came to her the blessedness of His tender voice, who said, "Inasmuch as ye did it to the least of one of these, ye did it unto me."—Christian Weekly.

WHO ARE THE "POOR FOLKS"?

Polly was a bright and beautiful child, who, with a brother older than herself, carried home the laundry work to her mother's patrons. She was always neatly dressed, and had a happy smile and a cheerful voice. One day Polly carried home some fine laces to a lady in a hotel. The servant told her the lady was ill, and could not be disturbed; but Polly had strict orders not to trust the package to any one else, so she ventured upstairs.

She stood at the door for a moment, and then tapped very lightly, saying to herself, "If she is asleep, that won't wake her; and if she's awake she will answer."

In a moment a low voice asked, "Is that you, Bridget?"

"No, ma'am," replied Polly, putting her lips very close to the keyhole, and speaking in a loud whisper; "it's Paulina Brown, that folks call Little Polly. I have a very particular message for you, and I won't disturb you a bit if you will let me in."

The lady could not help saying, "Come in," in answer to this modest request. She was in trouble, and that had caused her a sick headache. She lay there all alone in a darkened room, with no one to care whether she got better or not.

Polly had just come from a bright, sunny room, with a gay rag carpet on the floor, and bright flowers growing in the windows; and this room, with its heavy draperies, looked gloomy to her. She went up to the bed, and gave her message in a low, soft voice, and then said, "Oh, Mrs. Ball, I'm so sorry for you. You haven't any husband or little girl to comfort you when you are sick. My mother has father, and Tommy, and me, and baby. Sometimes when she has her tired headaches I can drive them off just with my own hands and a little bay water. I don't suppose you would let me sit upon your nice bed and bathe your head, would you?"

"Yes, Polly; I am always glad to have such a tidy girl near me. You will find bay water in that pink bottle on the bureau," said Mrs. Ball. While the little soft hands were passing over the troubled brow the lady said, "Polly, I think your family are the happiest poor people I ever met."

"Oh, Mrs. Ball, we're not poor people," cried Polly with a queer laugh. "There are three poor families in the house, but we are rich—almost. We were rich once, and had half a house, though we're not so rich now since father lost his arm; but as mother can do up lace so beautifully, we're pretty rich still. We do lots of things to help the poor folks in the house, and other poor folks, too."

"What can you do for them?" asked the lady.

"Oh, we save Mrs. Crane's coal by letting her steep her tea in our kitchen—days that she can keep warm by sitting in the sun—and we take care of Mrs. Barnes' baby whenever she gets a day's work, and mother always makes broth enough on Wednesdays to share with some one that's poor."

"Whom do you call poor folks, Polly," asked the lady.

Polly had no definition ready; but after thinking for a moment she replied: "Poor folks are folks that don't have everything they want."

"Then you have everything you want?" asked Mrs. Ball.

"Yes, ma'am," replied Polly, innocently, "we all have Sunday clothes besides our common ones; and we have good things to eat; mother bakes all our bread and pies herself, and we have a real kitchen to work and eat in, without a bed in it, like poor folks; and we buy a whole ton of coal at once, instead of lots of bushels!" And so little Polly prattled on in a low, pleasant voice, till the lady really felt better, and said so. "I'll tell you what's another real good thing to drive the rest of it off—air and sunlight; mother never shuts up for a headache," said the little nurse.

Here Polly looked at the bronze clock, and said, "It's time now for the baby to wake up, and I shall have to go as soon as I let in a little of my sun and air; but I'll come in at any time when you have the headache and cure you again."

"Thank you, my good little girl; you have almost cured me now," said Mrs. Ball. "In my closet you will find a large paper bag full of oranges; take them home, and share them with the poor folks in your house."

The rich little girl ran home in high glee to divide the treasures with the less fortunate.

The poor lady lay alone to reflect on the lesson she had just received. She had lost $20,000, but had $30,000 left; and instead of being thankful for that, she was bewailing her fate as if she were next to a pauper. She would still have all the comforts, although a few less of the luxuries of life; and as she remembered now, no one but herself would suffer by the change, for she had never helped the poor folks in the house, nor out of it, as Polly's mother was doing. "Poor folks," she said to herself, "are folks who haven't everything they want. I haven't that $20,000, and I never can have it again; but I can learn to be happy on less, and to share even that with others." A ray of Polly's sun peeped in, and a breath of her pure air was wafted toward her, and she rose, saying: "Because I have lost some of my fortune, I need not therefore throw away my health, the best of all my blessings." In Polly's sense of the word, the poor are often found amid elegance and luxury, and the truly rich in humble dwellings. —Selected.

LET THE BOYS HELP.

Why is it that the boys are allowed to sit around the house doing nothing, while their overworked mother is struggling against nature and fate to do about half the work waiting for their hands? Only the other day we saw three large, able-bodied boys, lounging about the house, not knowing what to do with themselves, while their mother, tired and pale, was trying to do all the work for a large family and company alone. Not a boy's work to help about the house? Why not? Is there anything about washing dishes that will injure him or which he cannot learn to do well? or about making beds, or sweeping, or setting the table, or washing or ironing, or cooking a plain meal of victuals? On the contrary, there is much to benefit him in such work, the most important of which is the idea that it isn't manly to let the "weaker vessel" carry all the burdens, when it is possible for strong, young hands to help. Most boys would gladly help in the house if they were asked to do so and were taught how to do the work properly. Many a smart boy wants to help his tired mother, but doesn't know how beyond bringing in the wood and the water and shoveling a path through the snow. That done, she tells him to go and play while she plods wearily on. Not a boy's work? For shame! It is a positive harm to a boy's moral character to allow him to think it right to be idle while his mother is staggering under her burdens. Let the boys help, and those who can't get help "for love or money," as they often write us, will see their troubles disappear.—Sel.

ROME WASN'T BUILT IN A DAY.

The boy who does a stroke and stops—
Will ne'er a great man be;
'Tis the aggregate of single drops
That makes the sea the sea.

Not all at once the morning streams
Its gold above the gray,
It takes a thousand little beams
To make the day the day.

Upon the orchard rain must fall,
And soak from branch to root,
And buds must bloom and fade withal,
Before the fruit is fruit.

The farmer needs must sow and till,
And wait the wheaten head,
Then cradle, thresh, and go to mill,
Before his bread is bread.

Swift heels may get the early shout,
But, spite of all the din,
It is the patient holding out
That makes the winner win.

—Alice Cary.

"I Won't."—A man, looking up from sawing his wood, saw his little son turning two boys out of the yard. "See here! what are you about, George?" asked the man. "I'm turning two swearers out of the yard, father," said George. "I said I would not play with swearers, and I won't." That is the right time and place to say "I won't." We wish every boy would take the same stand.—No play with swearers. "Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain."

TEMPERANCE.

RAILROADS AND PROHIBITION.

Mr. McIntosh, one of the sub-contractors on the Kansas City extension of the St. Paul railroad, speaking of railroad building says:

"The present season in Iowa was the best for railroad building ever known. We worked ninety-four days without losing an hour. I never heard of that being done anywhere before. The grading between Ottumwa and Kansas City is pretty well along, in spite of the fact that we have had the disadvantage the contractors have labored under of building railroads in a Prohibition State. The men don't like it. Nevertheless I have seen as much drunkenness among the men in Iowa this year as in other work in States where liquor is sold, and it is drunkenness of the worst kind. Much of the liquor sold in the smaller towns is medicated, and called bitters. The mixtures are various—Hostetter's, Lemon Bitters, and a dozen others. I have even known men to get drunk on lemon extract. They buy their tipple in bottles, and not being allowed to drink it on the premises, they reel about livery stables and sheds. It only takes two or three drinks in that climate to make a man as limp as a rag." Mr. McIntosh said that in larger towns—10,000 inhabitants and upward—liquor is now sold, and in the river towns the sale has never been discontinued.

THE AZTECS ON DRUNKENNESS.

H. H. Bancroft in his "Indian Races on the Pacific Coast" gives an account of the way in which the ancient Aztecs treated drunkenness.

The young man who became drunk was conveyed to jail, and there beaten to death with clubs; the young woman was stoned to death. In some parts, if the drunkard was a plebeian, he was sold for a slave for the first offense and suffered death for the second; and at other times the offender's hair was cut off in the public market-place, he was then lashed through the streets, and finally his house was razed to the ground, because, they said, one who would give up his reason to the use of strong drink was unworthy to possess a house, and be numbered among respectable citizens. Cutting off the hair, as we shall see, was a mode of punishment frequently resorted to by these people, and so deep was the degradation suppose to be attached to it, that it was dreaded almost equally with death itself. Should a military man, who had gained a distinction in the war, become drunk, he was deprived of his rank and honors, and considered henceforth as infamous. Conviction of this crime rendered the culprit ineligible for all future emoluments, and especially was he debarred from holding any public office. A noble was invariably hanged for the first offense, his body being afterward dragged without the limits of the town, and cast into a stream used for that purpose only.

But a mightier influence than mere fear of the penal law restrained the Aztec nobility and gentry from drinking to excess; this influence was social law. It was considered degrading for a person of equality to touch wine at all, even in seasons of festivity when, as I have said, it was customary and lawful for the lower classes to indulge to a certain extent. Wine-bibbing was looked upon as a coarse pleasure, peculiar exclusively to the common people and a member of the higher orders who was suspected of practicing the habit would have forfeited his social position, even though the law suffered him to remain unpunished. These heathens, however, seem to have recognized the natural incongruity existing between precept and practice, fully as much as the most advanced Christian.

The suggestion is now made to admit to the Soldiers' Homes the aged wives of veterans, as well as the veterans themselves. The plan of cottages, such as has been adopted at Quincy, Ill., instead of one great building, would greatly favor such a plan. This would also be an important factor in the solution of the question of beer at the Soldiers' Homes.

During July and August the collected taxes on spirits increased nearly $1,000,000, or about five per cent.

A leading fire insurance company of New York recently withdrew its only policy on a brewery in Iowa, as advised by its Western agent, because of the intense indignation in Iowa caused by the murder of Haddock, and the probability that the brewery would be burned.

There are 12,000 saloons in New York City, and 4,096 in Jersey City, Newark and Patterson, making 16,000 in sight of Bartholdi's Statue of Liberty Enlightening the World. No wonder she has her face turned out upon the broad Atlantic, to keep from gazing upon and smelling such a mass of rottenness.

A gallon of malt liquor cannot be made without Sunday labor. Yet people talk of Christian brewers and Christian malters. The same is true of distilled liquors made from grain, with malt. The grain must be malted. Eight days is the shortest time in which this process can be completed, and the grain must be stirred every day so that Sunday labor is essential to this business.—XVth Amendment.

While at Clarinda, Iowa, lately, we asked a leading attorney there how prohibition worked in that place. He replied, "It is destroying the practice of lawyers. The last year of license in Clarinda, there were five saloons who paid the city $2,500. That year we had one hundred and forty-eight cases of criminal prosecutions; a marshal at $50 a month, two deputies at $45 each per month, three policemen at $40 per month—ten mill taxation and seldom any money in the city treasury. The second year, under prohibition, there were only 40 cases of prosecutions, a five mill taxation, and from $2,000 to $3,000 in the city treasury; one marshal, and he does all the road commissioner work at $50 per month, no deputies or assistants or policemen, and only one criminal case in the District Court. Other towns in the county make a better show than this.—Advocate, Floyd county, Iowa.

I am a prohibitionist. I am such because I see the homes and hearths of our country menaced by the most tyrannical foe that ever threatened the liberty and perpetuity of a nation. As a minister of the Gospel of peace, I am constrained to stand aloof from mere partisan politics; but when an impudent moral wrong, not content with slaying thousands of souls yearly, demands, and has largely obtained, the sanction of law to its iniquities, the testimony of Christian ministers is certainly called for by both speech and ballot. I hold it to be the most awful thing conceivable for the government to countenance the drink traffic, by licensing it, and taking a revenue from it, thus becoming a partner in the business of "dealing wet damnation around the land." And if the State thus assumes the role of Tetzels peddling out indulgences to the public poisoners, it is time for Luther to leave his cloister and nail his prohibition thesis on the ward-room door.—Rev. Dr. Gordon, Boston.

LITERATURE.

In a loft at Kingston, New York, there was found Saturday, the original letter written by Benedict Arnold to the American people to vindicate himself for his attempted betrayal of the country.

The Library Magazine for November contains fully thirty articles comprising the very cream of the latest English periodicals. The magazine is intended for thoughtful and cultivated readers. Its plan does not include the literature of fiction, which certainly has too large a place in most of our American magazines. Among the notable articles in the present number are the conclusion of Mr. Froude's history of the famous religious and military Order of the Knights Templars; Mrs. Oliphant's graphic account of a notable Venetian Dynasty; and papers by Sir Samuel W. Baker and A. Vambéry treating of the past, present and probable future relations between England and Russia.

Theodore F. Seward, the well-known composer, is the editor, and Bigelow and Main, New York, publishers of the Musical Reform, a new monthly whose aim is no less than "the regeneration of sacred and social music throughout the length and breadth of the land"—a noble enterprise, in which we wish the promoters the heartiest God speed. Mr. Seward wishes to popularize the "Tonic Solfa" system of musical notation which is much in use in England. His efforts have received the most flattering endorsements from eminent pastors, musicians and compilers of musical books in this country.

The report of the Commissioner of Pensions is kindly sent us from the department. The statistical tables show that there were June 30, 1886, 365,783 pensioners, the new names added during the year numbering 40,857; 22,089 were dropped. The amount paid for pensions was $63,797,831, a decrease of over a million dollars. The amount paid since 1861 is $808,624,811.

Gleanings in Bee Culture, a semi-monthly published in Medina, Ohio, seems to be once sensible and practical without ignoring the theoretical and experimental side of an interesting and profitable business. Bee-keepers need such a journal, and many would take up with bee-keeping if they were its readers for a time.

"Nervous Children," by Dr. Charles L. Dana, is one of the leading subjects in Babyhood for November. Not less important are articles by other well-known physicians on "The Fever Thermometer in the Nursery," "Popular Fallacies about Teething," "Cautions Regarding Children's Eyes," and "Constipation." Marion Harland writes on "Other People's Babies," and the general departments of the magazine abound in more than the usual number of hints and helps in the care of infants. This valuable mother's magazine completes its second volume with this number. The magazine stands the test of time, and must be regarded as an adjunct of the nursery of great value.

The Missionary Review still holds its foremost place among the missionary magazines. "Alaska as a Mission Field," "Autonomy in Foreign Missions," "Woman's Foreign Mission Boards and Work," and "Trust Funds," are among the topics discussed. The society reports are all of foreign boards. Dr. Wilder announces that the Review will be hereafter issued monthly—welcome news to lovers of unselfish missionary effort.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—Bro. R. N. Countee writes of a season of refreshing in the Tabernacle Baptist church, Memphis. A number of conversions have been experienced and all are rejoicing in the manifestation of God's presence.

—Special meetings are begun for the students in Wheaton College, among whom there is much religious interest and some conversions.

—The Southwestern Presbyterian reports a great revival in Tuscaloosa, Alabama. The meetings closed early this month. Some 250 conversions are known to have taken place. The Presbyterian church has received 40 members, the Baptist 33, and the Methodist 93, while the country churches about are receiving considerable additions.

—At 3 o'clock Friday morning the Chicago Avenue ("Moody's") church, in this city, was discovered in flames, and before the fire was gotten under control by the department the interior of the edifice was seriously damaged by the flames, smoke and water. The walls are believed to be intact, and the damage may be repaired, it is believed, for about $10,000. It was stated a man had been seen in the basement at 1:30 A. M. by a police officer, who, thinking it was the janitor, paid no further attention to the matter. But a short while prior to the discovery of the flames the janitor made his customary round of inspection, but discovered nothing wrong and retired for the night. The fire is believed to have been incendiary.

—The Rock River Conference of United Brethren at its recent session in Mt. Carroll, resolved that the Prohibition party was necessary, and that they would vote for no man that was not in favor of the prohibition of the liquor traffic.

—God's promise, "I will bless thee and thou shalt be a blessing," has been taken to heart in a very practical manner by the native Christians of Madagascar, who during the past ten years have contributed no less than £800,000 for the spread of the Gospel.

—Judge Jones, of Minneapolis, has presented the Woman's Christian Association of that city with a property worth $100,000, for the purpose of making a home for aged women, worn-out ministers and their wives. The property consists of eighty acres, all wooded, on which there is a twelve-room cottage and a three-story building containing forty rooms.

—It will be a matter of general interest and satisfaction that the historic St. Michael's church in Charleston will survive the injuries of the earthquake. We learn from Charleston that the famous steeple of that church has not been seriously injured. Closer investigation seems to indicate that the wave movement was not sufficiently forcible to dislodge the vast weight of the tower. The movement spent its force around it, but the corners of the tower remain firmly seated in their places.

—Chaplain McCabe claims that the Methodists in this country "gave last year for the work of God" $19,041,387, including $7,792,407 for the support of pastors, elders, and bishops; $4,131,831 for building churches and parsonages; $1,000,000 for missions; $3,500,000 for current expenses of 19,700 churches.

—The American Baptist Missionary Union recently sent seventeen missionaries to their fields in India, the largest number ever sent from Boston at one time by any society.

—The latest reports from the Korean Mission of the Scottish United Presbyterian church, on the border of Northern Korea, state that a hundred men and boys have been baptized, and the work is rapidly spreading.

—The English Wesleyans have decided to begin immediately a mission in Burmah, we presume in the newly-annexed territory. Rev. W. R. Winston, an experienced Indian missionary, has been accepted as the pioneer for the new mission.

—Mr. George Williams, of London, the originator of the Y. M. C. Associations of the world, suggests that each of the 3,000 should have connected with it a foreign missionary society, to become a center of organized systematic effort; having for its motto, "The World for Christ."

—At the recent meeting of the Old Catholics at Vienna, Prof. Leger proposed the immediate introduction of the Bible in all Old Catholic families, and expressed the hope that the British and Foreign Bible Society should aid them so that every school-child might have a copy of the Book of books.

—A Bible in State Schools League has been formed in Australia to secure the daily reading and study of the Word of God, which is strongly desired by parents there. Public opinion is resisting the present "evil policy," as a leading newspaper styles it, "which is rearing a generation of practical pagans in a professedly Christian land."

—The Springfield Republican says that two representatives of the Intercollegiate Young Men's Christian Association are visiting the two colleges at Amherst to begin a foreign missionary crusade among Christian young men. They have found at Amherst about twenty who stand committed to missionary work. This seems to be the outcome of the missionary efforts made at Northfield last July.

—Mr. Chin Gim, a Chinese missionary, educated by the Presbyterian Board, has this year established a Chinese Y. M. C. A. in this city. Many Chinese attend. At a recent meeting, during the closing season of prayer three Chinamen who had never before manifested any religious feeling, prayed earnestly for themselves. There are now at least six Chinese Sabbath-schools in Chicago, and the number is likely to be increased, as Christian people are awakening to the fact that a grand opportunity to save men is providentially brought to their doors and that God will hold them responsible for the good they might do.—Free Methodist.

—There is a memorial church in the Himalayas for which Mr. George Stuart, of Philadelphia, furnished the idea and a good share of the money, and Mr. John Wanamaker the bell, and George W. Childs the clock, and Mr. Thomas F. Blackmore the marble memorial tablet, inscribed with the name of the missionary pastor's dead daughter. The bell and clock are described as "the most magnificent in India."

—Gospel services on Sunday evenings are to be resumed in Cooper Union, New York. The services will be held under the auspices of the Presbytery of New York and the direct management of the committee appointed for the purpose.

—Along with much that is discouraging there is great room for thankfulness with regard to missionary work in India and the East. In the Madras Presidency, during the last ten years, an increase has been reported of nearly 200,000 in the number of the native Christians. In Japan the growth has been from one hundred and fifty to ten thousand; there being to-day 190 churches, 8,000 communicants and 250 native preachers. Twenty-seven American women are working in Japan with very satisfactory results, and altogether the Gospel certainly is making remarkable headway.

—In a general survey of the missionary work of the American Board of Commissioners for foreign Missions at its annual meeting in Des Moines, Ia., just held, the following facts were reported: The Gospel has been preached by missionaries and native preachers in nine hundred different cities, towns, and villages in different parts of the globe; the number of churches has increased from 303 to 310, to which 3,481 members were reported as added on confession of faith—a larger number than in any previous year since the great ingathering at the Sandwich Islands; from 4,000 to 5,000 youth are gathered into high-schools, seminaries, and training classes, besides 32,000 children in 856 common schools, and more than 15,000,000 pages of educational and religious literature have been put into circulation in twenty-six different languages, of the best Christian thought of the world, thus entering into the life of millions of our fellow-men. The gifts by converts to various Christian objects amounted to nearly $80,000—a sum which, if the price of a day's labor be taken as a unit of value, should be increased sixfold in order to a proper comparison with contributions in America.

—The school for Christian instruction of native Africans, established by Edward S. Morris of Philadelphia, is one of the private enterprises for the extension of the Redeemer's kingdom which are among the most hopeful indications of Christian life. The Presbyterian Journal of Philadelphia speaks thus of Mr. Morris's work: "He has been conducting a Christian school in Africa for several years past, and has this year seen his way clear to name the school Anna Morris, in memory of his deceased mother. If we correctly know and estimate friend Morris, this monument he is erecting day by day will not cease when he shall be called to account for his fidelity as a Christian servant. We have been amazed at his perseverance under embarrassments which serve to demonstrate characteristic features which secure success. The school at present is overflowing, not only with the children of the citizens of Liberia, but with the native boys and girls from the African jungles, some of whom are sons of chiefs. Thus he is preparing those who will be the future teachers so much needed in the interior of that 'Dark Continent.' This school will be a great help to the enlightenment and Christianizing influence of the immediate surroundings in Liberia. It is sustained and managed out of his own labors and resources, with some philanthropic aid from others. He would greatly enlarge the operations of the school if means permitted, but he prefers to keep it upon the individual basis." Mr. Morris largely sustains the school by the sale of Liberian products as palm oil soap and coffee.

—A horrible religious sect has, says the London Pall Mall Gazette, been established in Russia. The chief doctrine held is that it is a sin to let men suffer bodily pain, on which account sick people belonging to the organization are strangled. The existence of the sect was betrayed by a young peasant of the Government of Saratof, whose sick wife had been kidnapped from his dwelling during his absence, and would have been put to a violent death but for his timely interposition. Both the mother and the aunt of the sick woman belonged to this sect, and it was they who had intended putting her to the "red death," as this sort of killing is called. Returning home one day the young husband found that his wife had been removed to the house of his mother in an adjacent village. He hurried to the place, and found his wife still alive, but washed, wrapped in white linen, and laid upon a bier. The sick woman had no idea of the purpose for which she had been so laid out, and the husband, being suspicious, determined to watch the development of events. He consoled his wife, and then, hiding himself behind a wide stove, waited the arrival of his relatives. In time he heard some one enter the room, and turn the lock behind him. Looking out from his hiding-place he saw that it was a man dressed in blood-red clothes bearing a large pillow in his hands. A minute later he heard a stifled groan come from the bier. To rush from his place and fell the would-be murderer to the ground was the chance of a moment, but the man in red seized his work and escaped. A few days later no fewer than forty-two members were arrested by the police.

LODGE NOTES.

The Knights of Labor propose to publish a daily paper at Milwaukee in the interest of the order.

All the knit goods mills in the State of New York, which employed 20,000 men, women, and children, have declared against the Knights of Labor. Two of the mills have yielded, but the others are being filled with non-union men. The strike was caused by the factory owners at Amsterdam refusing to promise that in case a cotton "jack" was put in operation it would be placed in charge of a member of the spinners' union.

The Masonic bodies in Naples, Italy, have formed themselves into a powerful committee to consider the best means to further cremation.

According to the Chaine d' Union, the Grand Orient (Grand Lodge) of France has under its obedience 313 lodges, 35 chapters, 13 councils, in all 361, being a gain of 9 during the year.

The Central Labor Union Campaign Committee met in New York, Nov. 4, and considered the question of forming a permanent political organization. A call will issue soon to all districts for delegates to a convention, which will be held at an early date, and at which it is proposed to form a new party that shall take an active part in the canvass of 1888.

SOUTHERN MINISTERS FUND.

This is the fund from which the colored ministers of the South have received the Cynosure. It seems very desirable to continue this fund, and hence the special appeal in the Cynosure of Aug. 12th.

The following named persons have contributed to this fund this year, 1886, and such names will be added from week to week as donate to it in the future:

Mental Gymnastics;

OR

Memory Culture.

By ADAM MILLER, M. D.

A practical and easy system by which any person, old or young, can train themselves to memorize anything they choose.

THE CLERGY, Their Sermons; THE STUDENT, His Lessons; THE BUSINESS MAN, Items of Business.

The author of this work was put to the severest public test a few days ago, by reporters of all the leading Chicago daily papers. The commendatory notices which appeared the following day showed how well he stood the test.

The author, an old man, claims to have a memory more to be trusted by training under this system than even while he was young.—CHICAGO EVENING OCEAN.

We cordially commend it to all persons of failing memory as the best book obtainable on that subject.—INTERIOR.

Most ingenious; enables any one, who familiarizes himself with the system, to carry an immense mass of detailed information, ready for production on demand. By experiment we have tested the author's mnemonic resources, and been moved by the results.

This work, with written instructions by the author, will be sent postpaid to any address on receipt of price, $1.00. Address, W. V. PHILLIPS, 221 W. Madison St., Chicago.

Berea College History

PP. 87, CLOTH, 40 CENTS.

The establishment of a College for the education of colored children and the white children of the mountaineers in a slave State at a time when the whole country was shaken by the discussion of abolition, was a sublime act of faith in God who "hath made of one blood all nations of men."

This is what REV. JOHN G. FEE did at Berea, Ky., and the friends of reform cannot spend 40 cents better than to send for this

HISTORY OF PRACTICAL CHRISTIANITY, of faith tried, and of precious deliverances that read like a chapter from the book of Daniel.

NATIONAL SUICIDE, AND ITS PREVENTION.

BY OSCAR F. LUMRY, PH. D.

Prof. Lumry's book, "National Suicide and Its Remedy," will be read with profit even by those who do not accept its doctrine, that taking interest for money loaned, one or more per cent, is sin, taking something for nothing. For, as Goldsmith said of his Vicar of Wakefield, "Even his fallings lean to virtue's side."

—Cynosure.

Dr. Lumry is a man of ideas and never fails to make his readers understand just what they are. Every sentiment he writes has such an air of honesty that it will in a measure disarm those who read to criticise. It is a good book to set people to thinking, whether they believe his theories or not. The book is well worth a careful reading and study.—Bible Ocean.

On all the points named they differ radically from those which prevail in the organization of society. Either they are true or false. It is a curious fact that all of them have been stigmatized as crazy, and yet nearly all of them have been for some years steadily gaining the adherence of men of intellectual ability.—Times.

Man Traps of the City.

Mothers—place this book in the hands of your sons

It treats of

The Tiger and His Den.

Cups of Flame.

The Scarlet Sin.

Embezzlement.

The Devil's Printing Press.

Etc., Etc., Etc., Etc.

A book that is sensational, not from excited rhetoric or florid figures of speech, but from the facts that how like melted lava from the pen of the writer. It is a book of timely warnings, where sin and crime are shown of their mask, robbed of the glamour with which they have been surrounded by the purulent literature of the day and painted in true colors. The life of the profligate is here shown in its true light, not as a life that, though wicked, has its delights, but as a thing of death, how and in future life to be abhorred.—WESTERN CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

FARM NOTES.

HOUSE AND FARM NOTES.

Men sound in soul and limb can be bred and reared only in the exercise of plow and spade, in the free air and sunshine, with country enjoyments and amusements; never amid foul drains and smoke stacks, and the eternal clank of machinery.—Froude.

Orchards, if managed properly, will bear fruit every year. In order to have this the orchardist must manure and cultivate them constantly. This method may seem to require too much work, but is the only successful course to pursue in New England.

The book for every farmer's boy to read is the open book of nature. There was none ever written that contains one-half of the information, none other half so fascinating, none so perfect and pure. Nature teaches us to dwell as much as possible upon the beautiful and good, and to ignore at all times the evil and the false.—American Garden.

The active out door labor of the farm, with its ever changing and almost endless variety, tends to the symmetrical development of the physical man in all its organs; and the ever shifting mental work which the care and direction of his business demand of him, keeps the machinery awake and active; and proper activity of body and mind is an important condition in maintaining good health.—Indiana Farmer.

It is no wonder to us that men of great minds have loved the country, have enjoyed farm work, and this, too, not as a sentiment, but as a reality. Washington was a type of the true farmer, and called agriculture the most useful, most noble, and most healthful employment of man. Jefferson gave much time and study in evolving the philosophical principles employed in constructing the plow, and when built he took great pleasure in handling it, and in managing his farm at Monticello. Webster declared he felt more pleasure in holding his own plow, drawn by his own splendid oxen (about which he wrote such grand letters to his head farmer, John Taylor) on the plains of Marshall, than all the honors of political and public life.—Home Farm.

A NEGLECTED CROP.

It would be better for us if we considered the manure made on the farm as a crop; and it is strange that we do not do so, for it is a product of the farm and has a money value as much as corn or hay or cotton. When we once consider manure as a crop, we will take just as much pride in making a big crop of manure as of corn; and we will no more allow part of the manure crop to go to waste, than we would part of the wheat or hay crop. Generally but little can be charged against the production of the manure crop; all the cost is often the expense of harvesting (gathering and storing), this crop. On the most fertile farms this crop is worth to the farmer several times the cost of harvesting it. And it is the greatest wonder of our farming that we do not start out in the fall with a determination to make a better manure crop than our neighbor, as we start out in the spring with a determination to make a better oat, potato or tobacco crop. The cleanly man will gather up all refuse and put it in the compost heap. He will have clean stables, clean barns, clean yards—a clean farm; and cleanliness is the preserver of health. Thus we see that while the wheat or potato crop supplies strength and energy, the manure crop, closely gathered and well kept, prevents the agents of disease from stealing away that strength. Pride in the manure crop goes both before wealth and health.—American Agriculturist for November.

OIL YOUR BOOTS AND SHOES.

The efficacy of oiling depends much upon the way in which it is done. In the evening brush the shoe clean, and then wash it with lukewarm water, rather to moisten than to clean it. Set it where it will dry slowly. It should not be perfectly dry the next morning, when the oil is applied, but feel damp, not wet, however. The best mixture for oiling shoes is made of one-half of neat's foot oil—be sure you get the genuine article—one-third beef tallow, and one-sixth castor oil. Mix thoroughly over a gentle heat. Depend upon the rubbing rather than the heat to get the oil in—to express it differently, two parts of rubbing to one of heat. If the shoes are pugged, as farmers' shoes usually are and always should be, get the oil in well between the uppers and the sole; it will prevent the sole pulling loose, or the leather breaking away from the pegs. Shoes worn at farm work should be oiled at least once a week. It requires only a few minutes to do the work, and it is decidedly profitable labor.—American Agriculturist for November.

ALL-NIGHT INHALATION!

"A positive revolution in the treatment of Air-Passage Diseases of the Nose, Throat, and Lungs, and for the purpose designed, as valuable a discovery as vaccination."

THE PILLOW-INHALER.

A Speedy, Positive and Permanent Cure for Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, and All Croupal Consumption.

It is a hair pillow, with reservoirs of evaporating liquid, the fumes or vapor of which inhaled all night long, whilst sleeping as usual, and without any discomfort. It is used only at night, and is perfectly safe to the most delicate. There is no stomach-dosing, douching or snuffing; but just as a smoky lamp will leave a deposit on a whitened wall so the PILLOW-INHALER, for eight hours at a time, spreads a powerful healing halim or saline on the inflamed inner coating of the nostrils, the air-surfaces, from the nostrils to the bottom of the lungs, and hence into the blood. Old-fashioned inhalers, through a tube, for a few minutes a day, sometimes cured. Think of eight hours constant action, on the same principle, but intensified a hundred-fold! There are no pipes or tubes. The medicine is breathed in, not swallowed, and goes right to the diseased parts.

CATARRH. BRONCHITIS. CONSUMPTION.

How E. L. HAZEN, Collector of the Port of New York, says: "I take pleasure in stating that the PILLOW-INHALER has given the greatest relief, and I believe of permanent benefit to my wife, who has been a great sufferer from Catarrh and Bronchitis, accompanied with diseased asthma. I recommend it to all persons afflicted with such maladies."

How E. L. HAZEN, 38 West 4th St., New York. Mr. H. C. TULL, 50 Bryan Bldg., Chicago, Ill., says: "I suffered fifteen years from a severe Catarrh of the Throat, and a Croupal Consumption. I used the PILLOW-INHALER, and now, using it in my cough is gone; my lungs are no longer weak, and now, and I am in better health than I have been for years."

During the six years of its existence the PILLOW-INHALER has wrought cures of Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Consumption, that have been more like miracles than the usual treatment of disease. It is not expensive, and is within the reach of every one. Send for Explanatory Pamphlet and Testimonials, or call.

The Christian's Secret OF A Happy Life. 28th THOUSAND.

Baptist Commendation.

It meets the doubts and difficulties of conscientious souls after the bread and water of life, but whose effect is result only in a plain and delightful manner.—Christian Advocate.

Presbyterian Endorsement.

"The book is so truly and reverently devout in its spirit that it disarms criticism. It contains no dogma, no narrow sectarian prejudice. No effort is made to change the theological views of any one. The author's rich experience will tell in a plain and delightful manner.—Christian Advocate.

United Brethren's Approval.

"We have seldom met with a more interesting volume, abounding throughout with apt illustrations; we have failed to find a dry line from title-page to title.—Religious Telescope.

Congregational Comment.

"It contains much clear, pungent reasoning and interesting incident. It is a practical and experimental lesson taught out of God's word, and is worthy of universal circulation.—Church Union.

THE HISTORY OF ANTI-SLAVERY IN THE

State and Nation.

By REV. AUSTIN WILLEY.

514 pp., 12 mo. With NINETEEN PORTRAITS.

Price, Postpaid, $2.00.

Mr. Willey gives the best history of the times just before the present generation, which is precisely the history least apt to be known. He gives us the surface of the sea, under the waters which swept off three million pairs of fetters from our national decks. His book shows more accurate insight into the causes which produced the rebellion, and gives more clearly the working of those causes than any other writer. He shows more clearly the moral force of the ballot and necessity of a new party to carry a fundamental reform than any one who has treated of it. We advise every young man and every reader of the Cynosure to read and read that history.—Pres. J. Blanchard.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

ELECTION RETURNS.

The returns of the vote on the constitutional amendment are now complete in the Secretary of State's office, with the exception of Cook County. The total vote of the counties now in is 477,231. The vote for the amendment of these counties is 217,057. As the amendment must have a majority of all the votes cast to carry, the amendment now lacks 21,559 votes of carrying, and unless 69,000 of the 95,000 cast on Cook County are given for the amendment it has been lost.

The official vote of the Ohio State election received at the office of the Secretary of State gives Robinson, Rep., 340,895; McBride, Dem., 329,314; Smith, Pro., 28,567; Bonnal, Greenback, 1,902.

The prohibition vote in the State elections shows a generous gain in nearly every quarter. The estimated vote in New York is 35,700; in Ohio 32,000; Indiana, 9,000 (3,014 in 1884); Illinois, nearly 20,000; Massachusetts, 8,160; Connecticut, 4,810; Nebraska, 9,000; Kansas, 7,500; Minnesota, 12,000. In several States members of the legislatures have been elected.

WASHINGTON.

Secretary Manning has issued an order that hereafter no appointments of women to positions as messengers, assistant messengers, or laborers in the treasury will be allowed. The order is intended to prevent women from being appointed to positions in those grades and detailed to other duties.

General Sheridan, in his annual report to the secretary of war, remarks that unless the state of the Oklahoma lands be fixed by legislation their advantages will prove a continued temptation to adventurers.

A boiler explosion Thursday afternoon in Henry H. Sheep & Co.'s cigar-box factory at Philadelphia blew out the rear wall and fired the building, causing a panic among the male and female employees, who were only rescued after great difficulty. One young woman is missing, and ten other persons were badly burned or maimed. The financial loss is heavy.

Upon the arrival of the mail train on the Buffalo, Rochester and Pittsburgh Road at DuBois, Pa., Thursday, the car inspector found three dynamite bombs and caps attached to the springs of the rear coach, which contained thirty-four persons. It is believed that the explosives were placed under the car at Punxsatawney, and how the train ran the twenty miles between that place and DuBois without an explosion occurring excites the greatest wonder.

The appraisement of the quarantined cattle in Chicago distilleries has been ordered, and the slaughter of the animals will begin in a few days.

Drs. Murphy and Lee, of this city, last week performed a trephining operation on policeman Whitney, boring a hole through his breast bone and extracting a particle of the Haymarket shell, which was rapidly making its way toward the officer's heart. The operation was a success.

Acres of coal in the Standard Mines at Mount Pleasant, Pa., are now on fire. The flames are spreading in the direction of cells which are filled with fire-damp, and a terribly destructive explosion is feared.

Professor Foster, the Iowa meteorologist, predicts fierce storms between Dec. 4 and 17 next, during which railroads will be blocked with snow, high winds will destroy property, and electrical disturbances will affect telegraph and telephone lines.

The coroner's jury, at Rio, Wis., returned a verdict Tuesday evening, finding that the negligence of C. H. Wells, the brakeman, caused the recent disaster on the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Road. Wells was arrested and bound over to appear before the Circuit Court.

Monday, at Tchula, Miss., Marshal Vantroy McBee, without provocation, shot four negroes, one of whom has since died. The Marshal and his brother, both heavily armed, have taken to the canebrakes, and declare that they will not be taken alive.

Snow fell on Friday night, throughout New York and New England, to the depth of from eight to twenty inches.

At Galesburg, Illinois, on Friday evening, Henry Arms, Jr., of Knoxville, was almost instantly killed by the explosion of a cannon during a political jubilee. The occasion was the election of Gen. Post, a G. A. R. leader, to Congress.

A boiler explosion in a mill at Sheffield, Pennsylvania, killed Milton Mapes and his son, and fatally injured three other persons.

Judge Gary has signed a bill of exceptions in the case of the Chicago anarchists. Application for a supersedeas will this week be made to the Supreme Court of Illinois.

FOREIGN.

The session of the Bulgarian Sobranje to elect a successor to Prince Alexander was held Nov. 10. M. Radoslavoff, the Prime Minister, proposed the name of Prince Waldemar. The whole assembly rose in a body and elected Waldemar by acclamation. The public in the galleries did not participate in the enthusiasm manifested by the Deputies, and exhibited no approval of the election. The King of Denmark, on behalf of his son, Prince Waldemar, has sent a telegram to Tirnova expressing thanks for the honor conferred upon his son, but declining on any condition to allow him to accept the throne.

A dispatch from Tirnova says that upon receiving the King of Denmark's telegram, the regents resigned. The Sobranje voted confidence in the regents, but they declined to withdraw their resignations. The Sobranje has adjourned, all the members going to Sofia. A deputation will visit the European courts to pray the powers to nominate a candidate for the throne.

The Trade Court at Aachen has sentenced fifty-three composers to pay damages to their employers for leaving work and joining in a strike without giving notice. The police of Bavaria have expelled State Architect Ressler from the country for assisting in the socialistic agitation.

Thanksgiving day in New Hampshire will have a bitter taste in the seasoning of its feast of joy. The governor of the old Granite State must be an eccentric man, or have become so confused with lodge atheism, like the Freemasons of France, that he left out of his proclamation all reference to God, to whom, if to any one, his people must give thanks. Since he has taken the pains to forget God, or to say like the fool, "There is no God;" the pastors of the State will pass over his proclamation in silence, we but hope none of them or their hearers will forget to pray for him who is set over them, that he may be given another heart.

At the meeting of the New York State Woman Suffrage Association, the press report says that Mrs. Matilda Joslyn Gage delivered herself of the opinion that blood would have to flow in torrents before women could secure their rights, but when she pricked her finger with a bonnet pin, two-thirds of her audience turned pale and screamed. Will Mrs. Gage permit the humble suggestion of the Cynosure that had she followed up her able speech in the N. C. A. Syracuse convention, she might have now a following of brave women to whom she need not prophecy of sanguinary torrents, but who would not flinch should they really come.

Although numerous Masonic bodies, lodges, commanderies and consistories, in regalia, attended the funeral services of T. T. Gurney in the First Congregational church of this city last Thursday, they were not permitted to perform their lodge ceremonies in the building. Except the singing by the lodge quartette of appropriate hymns the services were conducted by Drs. Goodwin and Williams. This was evidently a disappointment to the lodge, as considerable time was taken at the grave, on a raw, chilly afternoon, for Masonic ceremonies by Grand Master A. T. Darrah and Grand Chaplain Dr. H. W. Thomas; and for speeches by high Masons, D. C. Cregier, Mayor Harrison, Grand Secretary L. L. Mun, Deputy Grand Master John C. Smith and others.

The Minneapolis Tribune of Friday last had a striking article on the arrest of H. L. Hastings of the Boston Christian, in that city last spring for holding open air services on the Common with Bro. W. F. Davis. While the Boston authorities license Buffalo Bill shows and permit them to perform on the Lord's day, it lays hand on Bro. Hastings and his companion and by a foreigner and liquor dealer it fines him $30 for simply reading three chapters of the Word of God to people who are anxious to hear it! Boston worships the shades of Warren, and Otis, and the Adamases, but it is only lip service.

But, if Boston was disgraced by her saloonist officials in that matter of street preaching, her effort to put a stop to Sabbath desecration last Lord's day was most commendable, and deserves the success it must win if followed up firmly and fairly. The barber shops, drug, cigar and fruit stores were closed quite generally, and Jews were allowed to work, but not to sell goods. The law applies to railways, horse-cars, newspapers, and some other kinds of business which were untouched. But they should follow, and we hope the authorities of Boston who are beginning this fight will have nerve enough to push it through to the end.

The real test of prohibition is just beginning in Atlanta, the most enterprising of Southern cities. The law which began its work last July, was in a sense, forced upon the city. It was a county affair; the city voted against it, but the county about carried it. But at the last election prohibition carried the city also, and with a mayor willing to enforce the law, the stories of failure will soon be heard no more. Not a drop of intoxicating liquor for drinking can be legally sold, the last place where it could be had is closed; and Mayor Hillyer vetoed an ordinance allowing the city brewery to deliver beer at residences. The law will be rigidly enforced, prohibition will have a fair trial, and a noble future is promised the Chicago of the South. Would that the Northern sponsor might learn the lesson of virtuous abstinence. Strikes, anarchists and bombs would then terrify no more.

The readiness of Dr. Richard S. Storrs of the Church of the Pilgrims, Brooklyn, to give the influence of his great name for a discussion of the lodge, adds to the interest with which we read of his fortieth anniversary as pastor. Dr. Storrs, says the able organ of the Reformed church, has attracted and held together one of the most intellectual congregations of the United States, and his power with his people and among the citizens of Brooklyn was never greater than it is to-day. His services to the city have been of inestimable value. The Historical Society, the schools and academies, the public and denominational charities, the hospitals, the City Missionary Society, and nearly every institution to promote the public weal, are indebted to him for services in public addresses and private recommendations and advocacy which cannot be repaid. To probably no other citizen does Brooklyn owe so much in the acquisition of such institutions as we have named. As one of her prominent citizens said a few years ago, "When Dr. Storrs says that this or that should be done, we cannot refuse our aid." He has also been a strong fortress in the defence of evangelical belief, and a most intelligent, wise and invincible leader in the conflict with error and in the declaration of the Word of Life among all men.

Charles Francis Adams, who will always be remembered as one of America's greatest diplomatists, is dead at his home on Beacon street, Boston; and the sympathies of many will go out toward the memory of him who was known in Boston circles as the "Grand Old Man," because his eminent services for the country at the court of St. James during the trying times of the Rebellion, and later in the settlement of the Alabama claims, have never been suitably recognized. The Adams family, of which he was the representative of the third generation, is one of the most remarkable of this or any other nation. Old John Adams of Revolutionary fame, and the third occupant of the Presidential chair, and then his greater son, John Quincy, the "Old Man Eloquent," and the most remarkable patriot in our political gallery, held the highest offices in the gift of the nation, and have left the imprint of their character indelibly upon its social and public life. Charles Francis inherited the excellencies as well as the failings of his sires, in a noble spirit, unimpeached integrity, great abilities, fine culture, and a wide and useful experience. His political and Masonic enemies found nothing of which to accuse him but his stately manners, which they exaggerated into frigidity. His four sons have much ability in literature and business, but have given little attention to politics. Mr. Adams maintained the grand testimony of his father against the despotic and murderous lodge to the end. He wrote an introduction to the volume of John Quincy's letters on Freemasonry; and in 1872, when chosen to pronounce the eulogy on William H. Seward at Albany, he was faithful to the memory of his great compatriot, who began and continued his public career as an opposer of the secret lodge. His latest testimony was the letter to the Boston convention in the spring of 1880.

COUNTRY, HOME, AND LIBERTY.

To our father's God we raise
Song of honor, thanks, and praise;
Praise him for our noble land,
Founded, fostered by his hand!
Praise him for our country, bright
With the beams of freedom's light.

For the sunshine, for the rain,
Fields of waving, golden grain;
For the earth-refreshing dew,
Fragrant flowers of beauteous hue;
For our homes, with plenty stored,
Thanks we bring to thee, O Lord.

For the wealth along our shores,
For our bounteous harvest stores;
For the herds of lowing kine,
Pasture, meadow, orchard, vine;
For thy blessings full and free,
Thanks we bring, O God, to thee!

Let the rivers onward flow,
Chant, in rhythmic cadence, low;
Let the valleys voice thy praise,
Let the hills loud anthems raise!
Let the mountain echoes ring
Thanks to thee, O God, our King.

Lord, with thine own gracious hand
Shelter and protect our land!
May thy people learn thy word—
Worship, and obey thee, Lord;
Then secure shall ever be
Country, Home, and Liberty!

—E. A. Jeffery, in the Christian Advocate.

IS IT A FALSE RELIGION?

BY REV. B. A. INES.

Read the following special from Little Rock to the Memphis Appeal:

THE KNIGHTS OF PYTHIAS OBSERVE THE DAY OF SORROW AND OF PRAYER.

LITTLE ROCK, ARK., November 10.—At the meeting of the Supreme Grand Lodge of the World, Knights of Pythias, at New Orleans, in 1884, a law was passed making it obligatory on all subordinate jurisdictions throughout the world to hold once a year a lodge of sorrow and time of prayer for the departed spirits of brothers of that benevolent order. An elaborate and appropriate ritual was promulgated on the occasion. The order in this State, while one of the strongest, numerically speaking, of any of Arkansas secret societies, has permitted the ceremony of praying for the dead to go by default until to-night, when Damon Lodge No. 3, Bayard Lodge No. 3 and Barbarosa Lodge No. 12, of this city, united and instituted the ceremony for the district. The services were held in the Independent Order of Odd Fellows' Hall, a new and magnificently furnished temple, at the corner of Sprung and Markham streets, the commodious building being filled to suffocation with an audience of Little Rock's most prominent citizens. The proceedings, while of the most solemn order, were at the same time resplendent with beauty and pure thought for those who have gone, and for those who have yet to cross the dark river. Col. Thomas H. Gibson made the memorial address. The large room was profusely decorated with natural flowers, while the deep strains of the organ seemed to tell those who heard it that there was a Great Beyond.

It has been my custom to say that the mass of adherents to oath-bound orders, professing to teach morality and religion, founded on the Bible, etc., etc., were honestly, but ignorantly, following the teachings and leadings of a few influential minds.

After reading the above, however, let no one plead ignorance of the fact, or deny that here is a false religion, a heathenism in direct descent from Pythagoras of old, whose excellent disciple was the noble Pythias, the friend of Damon. The latter stood as hostage for the former, who, under the tyrant Dionysius was condemned to death. Pythias having been away, returned just in time to save Damon from suffering in his stead. The noble example of friendship caused the tyrant to relent. Both were spared, and the tyrant asked admission to their fellowship. So much for the tradition, coming down from four hundred years before Christ.

Pythagoras flourished about 540—510 B. C. He is reported to have been very learned, especially as a mathematician. He traveled extensively, and especially in Egypt "availed himself of all the mysterious lore which the priest could impart," doubtless finding there the chief tenet of the Pythagorean school, viz; the transmigration of souls. This system of philosophy and religion was guarded by extreme secrecy characterizing the worship of the fraternity. It seems to have been part of his aim to found an aristocracy of learning and wealth. The fraternity gained great political influence, and finally suffered from violent internal dissensions, resulting in a revolution, and as a political power the order was everywhere suppressed.

It would seem, however, that the religion of Pythias the Pythagorean still survives. The spirits of the departed are now having the benefit of the prayers of the faithful brothers, in "an elaborate and appropriate ritual," and the good people of our sister city turn out in great numbers to witness this unique performance—on the "day of sorrow and of prayer." The proceedings were "most solemn," and "yet resplendent with beauty and pure thought." We are anxious to know what kind of pure thought? Was it Egyptian, Grecian, or Christian? We are indebted, it would seem, to that organ whose deep strains revealed the fact that there is a "Great Beyond." "Little Rock's most prominent citizens" must be highly entertained, especially those of them who believe in Jesus Christ rather than Pythagoras, who would not allow the killing or eating of animals, lest the soul of some departed brother might be thus robbed of its habitation. He restrained a man from beating a dog because in its howling he detected the voice of a departed familiar friend.

Of course in this land of perfect toleration this little incident will pass along, and the strong flavor of its un-Christian, anti-Christian, that is to say heathen character, will attract no attention from our religious press and Christian pulpits generally. It will be best to say nothing. This is the religion of a secret order. Were it an "Andover heresy," we should hear about it.

MOSHEH.

"And she called his name Mosheh: and she said, Because I have drawn him out of the water."

Many learned men, among whom is Josephus, have thought it not probable that Pharaoh's daughter gave to Moses a name in Hebrew. This may be so, but the Egyptian differed but little in form or meaning. If a German maid should call your little boy Yohann, or a French maid should call him Jean, you would not so write it in the family Bible, yet it would not differ essentially in English. Thus Moses: he wrote his own name in Hebrew.

In regard to the office of Moses it may not be essential whether we say he drew the people out of bondage, or brought them out, or led them out. He was only an instrument, and a humble one in his own estimation, in the hands of a greater than himself. "Who am I that I should go unto Pharaoh, and that I should bring the people out of bondage?" Who were Lincoln and Grant? Only instruments, and unwilling ones, too, until they perceived that an overruling Providence was at the helm of state.

A long while were our people plagued with the antitype of Egyptian terrors. The bitings of an evil conscience and the torments incident to the system of slavery were like the flies and the gnats from Egypt's divinity—the Nilus. The perversion of the Gospel of Christ to justify slavery was like the sacred waters turned into blood. The innumerable writers, lecturers, preachers, etc., troubled them as the sanctimonious, garrulous frogs. The plagues grew more intense with time. Devouring men in armies vast, like the locusts surrounding the coasts invaded the doomed land, and entered the houses, beds and bread-troughs of the people. The storm of shot and shell, like hail with fire intermingled, ran upon the ground, smiting the herb, the grass, and the tree. Darkness that could be felt prevailed. Among the nations no friendly land appeared for their succor, and the first-born sons of glory and strength fell fast in a sea of blood. But the oppressed people had light in their cabins—the light of approaching liberty, that gleamed through the sable night of terror and gladdened their prayerful hearts.

It would appear from the record given that Mosheh, the great leader, at the end of his career died by the hand of his Master, the Arbitrer of life and death; but Lincoln, our hero, fell by the hand of Satan ruling in secret the unholy conspirators. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord," and we may not with finite wisdom judge the condition of the departed, but leave that to Him who in righteousness is able to judge. "Judge not that ye be not judged."

In the progress of our late war some negroes in Tennessee said to Andrew Johnson, "You are our Moses." This human adulation was perhaps in some degree like Aaron and the short-sighted people, who would say to the golden calf—not even a living calf—"These be thy gods, O Israel, which brought thee out of the land of bondage." But how many follow only a human leader and obey only human commands. Professor and reformer, who is your Moses? The Psalmist said, "He sent from above; he took me; he drew me out of many waters." Christ said, "No man cometh unto me except the Father draw him:" and again, "I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me."

The curious Hebrew scholar will observe that the word Mosheh is in the active not the passive voice. It is drawing out not drawn out. The Omnipotent Leader is still drawing out; out from the bondage of sin; out from heathen practices; out from the rum-powder; out from tyrannical fashion; out from darkness into light; out from superstition and bigotry; out from the secret lodges of the day; out from bloody war into the pacific way of arbitration. If His magic power is hindered the people plod a tedious, dangerous, wilderness journey, and fall by hcatombs in cruel wars and through Moabite seductions, not less fatal, not less to be deplored.

QUAKER BOY.

MASONRY AND THE BIBLE.

MY FRIEND THE READER:—You believe that the Bible should be revered as the revelation of the will of Almighty God, and that any attempt to degrade it or weaken its authority over the minds of men would be an attack on true religion. All who believe in Christianity believe this. You believe, too, that to lessen the influence of the Bible would be very dangerous to our free institutions. You ought, therefore, to oppose, of course, any movement or any institution that tends to degrade the Bible.

But in my last article I showed you that Freemasonry degrades the Bible by putting it on a level with the Mohammedan Koran and other false bibles of heathen religions. Also that Freemasonry allows the Bible to be set aside in heathen lodges and the lying, counterfeit bibles of false religions to be put in its place, in order to please the enemies of Christ!

Every good citizen ought to oppose an institution that thus abuses the Word of God.

You may be a Freemason, my friend. You ought not to be offended because I call your attention to these things, of course. I have not said that all Freemasons try to degrade the Bible, but that the institution of Freemasonry is thus guilty. Many Masons believe in and reverence the Bible, and many of them do not know how Masonry regards and treats the holy book. But they ought to know; it is important that they should know; these articles are written in the hope of giving needed light.

And now, my friend, let me show you a little further how Freemasonry abuses the Bible and the God of the Bible. We'll go to Masonic authority for information as usual.

There are many books in very common use by Freemasons which contain as much of the instruction given in the lodge as is allowed to be made public, together with hymns, prayers, selections of Scripture, etc. These books are the common "Monitors," "Manuals," etc., of the order. They are all made on the same general plan, and pretty closely resemble one another. The first one that I ever had the privilege of examining closely was lent me by an intelligent Freemason, Chas. Colbath, of Strafford, N. H. It was Webb's Freemason's Monitor, edited by Rob Morris, of Kentucky. I was preaching in Strafford at the time, and Mr. Colbath lent me the book for the purpose of convincing me that Freemasonry was a good institution. In examining the book I found that some of the Scripture selections were badly mangled. I have a copy of this same book now before me. It has been long in use by the Masonic fraternity, and is accepted and used all over the country as a standard Masonic Monitor. I want to show you from it how Freemasonry mutilates the Bible. I will put some verses as the lodge quotes them in one column, and the same verses as God gave them in a second column, as follows:

SCRIPTURE AS MANGLED BY MASONRY.	SCRIPTURE AS GIVEN BY THE HOLY SPIRIT.
Now we command you, brethren, that ye withdraw yourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly, and not after the tradition which ye received of us.	Now we command you, brethren, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye withdraw yourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly and not after the tradition which he received of us.
Now them that are such we command and exhort, that with quietness they work and eat their own bread.	Now them that are such we command and exhort by our Lord Jesus Christ, that with quietness they work, and eat their own bread.
2 Thess. 3:6, 12, as quoted in Webb's Freemason's Monitor (Morris's large edition) p. 120.	2 Thess. 3:6, 12.

The quotation from the Monitor begins with the sixth verse of the chapter, and ends with the seventeenth. Within the limits of the quotation the name of Christ occurs twice,—in the sixth and twelfth verses. In both these verses the lodge cuts entirely out the name Lord Jesus Christ. Done by mistake, perhaps? That cannot be, for all standard Masonic Monitors cut Christ's name out in the same way. Besides Mr. Morris says in the preface to this Monitor that Scripture passages incorrectly quoted in old editions "have been set right" in this. So you see, my friend, that Freemasonry holds it to be "right" to mutilate the Bible—cut Christ's name out of his own Word—and this is done for the sake of making friends with those who hate Jesus,—Jews and others.

My friend, let us do what we can, in the love and fear of God, to enlighten people on this matter, and save them from being ensnared.—J. F. Browne, in Berea Evangelist.

WASHINGTON'S FIRST THANKSGIVING PROCLAMATION.

A day of thanksgiving and prayer for the nation was appointed by Washington for the first time after the present form of our government went into operation. The annual appointment by the President of the United States of a day of national thanksgiving has not been continuous from 1789, but only from the date when President Lincoln re-established the custom which began with Washington. Why Washington did appoint such a day is explained by the following extract from the proceedings of the first Congress:

"In the House of Representatives, Friday, Sept. 25, 1789:

"Mr. Boudinot said he could not think of letting the session pass over without offering an opportunity to all the citizens of the United States of joining, with one voice, in returning to Almighty God their sincere thanks for the many blessings he had poured down upon them. He therefore offered the following resolution:

"Resolved, That a joint committee of both Houses be directed to wait upon the President of the United States to request that he would recommend to the people of the United States a day of public thanksgiving and prayer, to be observed by acknowledging with grateful hearts the many signal favors of Almighty God especially by affording them an opportunity peaceably to establish a constitution of government for their safety and happiness."

"Mr. Burke did not like this mimicking of European customs, where they made a mere mockery of thanksgivings. Two parties at war frequently sang a te deum for the same event, though to one it was a defeat and to the other a victory.

"Mr. Boudinot was sorry to hear arguments drawn from the abuse of a good thing against the use of it. He hoped no gentleman would make a serious opposition to a measure both prudent and just.

"Mr. Tucker thought the House had no business to interfere in a matter which did not concern them. Why should the President direct people to do what, perhaps, they have no mind to do? He said they might not be inclined to give thanks for a constitution until they have experienced that it promotes their safety and happiness. It is a business with which Congress had nothing to do; it is a religious matter, and as such is proscribed to us. If a day of thanksgiving must take place, let it be done by authority of the several States.

"Mr. Sherman justified the practice of thanksgiving on any signal event, not only as a laudable one in itself, but as warranted by a number of precedents in Holy Writ. He agreed with the gentleman who moved the resolution.

"Mr. Boudinot quoted further precedents from the practice of the late Congress and hoped the motion would meet a ready acquiescence. The resolution passed and a committee on the part of the House to wait upon the President, in connection with a committee of the Senate, was appointed as provided in the resolution."

On the following Monday, Sept. 28, a message was received from the Senate informing the House that they had agreed to the resolution desiring the President of the United States to recommend a day of general thanksgiving, and had appointed a committee on their part. In conformity with this resolution Washington issued a proclamation covering this subject on Oct. 3, 1789. This is printed in The Gazette of the United States for Oct. 7, of that year, as follows:

"By the President of the United States of America, a Proclamation:

"Whereas, It is the duty of all nations to acknowledge the providence for Almighty God, to obey his will, to be grateful to his benefits, and humbly to implore his protection and favor; and whereas, both Houses of Congress have, by their joint committee, requested me to recommend to the people of the United States a day of public thanksgiving and prayer to be observed by acknowledging with grateful hearts the many and signal favors of Almighty God, especially by affording them an opportunity peaceably to establish a form of government for their safety and happiness.

"Now, therefore, I do recommend Thursday, the 26th day of November next, to be devoted by the people of these States to the service of that great and glorious Being, who is the beneficent author of all the good that was, that is, or that will be. That we may then all unite in rendering unto him all our sincere and humble thanks for his kind care and protection of the people of this country previous to their becoming a nation, for the signal and manifold mercies, and the favorable interposition of his providence in the course and conclusion of the late war, for the great degree of tranquility, union, and plenty which we have since enjoyed, for the peaceable and rational manner in which we have been enabled to establish constitutions of government for our safety and happiness, and particularly the national one now lately instituted, for the civil and religious liberty with which we are blessed and the means we have of acquiring and diffusing useful knowledge and in general for all the great and various favors which he hath been pleased to confer upon us.

"And also, that we may then unite in most humbly offering our prayers and supplications to the great Lord and Ruler of Nations and beseech him to pardon our national and other transgressions, to enable us all, whether in public or private stations, to perform our several and relative duties properly and punctually, to render our national government a blessing to all the people, by constantly being a government of wise, just, and constitutional laws, discreetly and faithfully executed and obeyed; to protect and guide all sovereigns and nations (especially such as have shown kindness unto us), and to bless them with good government, peace and concord, to promote the knowledge and practice of true religion and virtue and the increase of science among them and us, and generally to grant unto all mankind such a degree of temporal prosperity as he alone knows to be best.

"Given under my hand at the City of New York the 3d of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and eighty nine. G. WASHINGTON."

Washington did not issue a proclamation for a national day of thanksgiving annually, but sent out but two of that nature while President, that quoted above, in October, 1789, and one in 1795, when he appointed Thursday, Feb. 19, "as a day of public thanksgiving and prayer," and recommended "all religious denominations and all persons whomsoever within the United States to meet together on that day and render their sincere and hearty thanks to the Great Ruler of Nations for the manifold and signal mercies which distinguish our lot as a nation, particularly for the possession of constitutions of government which unite, and by their union establish liberty with order; for the preservation of our peace, foreign and domestic; for the reasonable control which has been given to a spirit of disorder in the suppression of the late insurrection," etc.

The insurrection was that in "certain of the western counties of Pennsylvania," as it was expressed in a proclamation Washington issued Sept. 25, 1794.

In John Quincy Adams' diary for Nov. 16, 1825, he mentions a meeting of his cabinet, at which Mr. Clay, Secretary of State, Mr. Rush, Secretary of the Treasury, and Mr. Southard, Secretary of the Navy, were present, and that they discussed Mr. Lawrie's proposition for a day of thanksgiving and prayer within the District. All the members of the administration present were against it, objected to it as a novelty, as liable to imputations of political purposes, of introducing New England manners, of using a high authority for an inferior measure. "I acquiesced in these opinions," Adams added. This makes it evident that the practice of appointing a National Thanksgiving day by a President of the United States had not prevailed during the administration of President Monroe, when Adams was Secretary of State, nor probably when John Adams, the father of John Quincy Adams, was President, or he would have quoted the precedents in its favor.

The crowning gift of God's love to man is the Gospel of his Son. His providential gifts are numberless and great and constant, and call for unceasing and heart-felt gratitude on the part of all. But superior to them all, more precious and indispensable to us than all, is the "glorious Gospel of the blessed God." This is indeed "glad tidings of great joy to all people." Its message of love and mercy; its offer of Christ, and pardon, and life; its divine provision for justification and sanctification; its ministry, its Sabbath, its sanctuary worship, its Holy Spirit, its heaven and glory unending—oh! divine, infinite gift. Was ever angel or arch-angel so loved? Was ever angel or arch-angel so placed under obligation? How this Gospel of God's wondrous love and grace should thrill our souls! What songs of thanksgiving should it call forth from every heart! It is this Gospel which makes God's children to differ from the children of vanity and sin. It is this Gospel which makes us as a nation to differ from pagan and heathen nations. It is this Gospel which gives to human nature all its dignity and worth, to life all its sanctity and value, and to the future all that is bright and desirable. To no nation has the proclamation of this Gospel been more universally and more persistently made than to the American. Let the nation give thanks for this unspeakable gift.—Selected.

LABOR, LODGE AND POLITICS.

Something over fifteen thousand foreigners—Germans, Poles, and Bohemians—voted solidly for social anarchy—and had enough of others to make up a total of over 16,000. But the social-anarchists cast their votes for three judges who were favored by them, with the result that they are elected, and our judiciary—upon whom the fabric of society in the city [Chicago] depends—though, we trust, not tainted, is at least placed under suspicion by that fact.

But large numbers of men who voted the "Labor Party" ticket, as the new social anarchist political organization is called, said they did so, not willingly, but because they were bound by the secret oaths of the labor lodges to do so. This brings out the possibility of one further disturbing element. There is already a political organization which has for its object the forcible breaking up of conspiracies which bind men by secret oaths and penalties to obey the commands of hidden leaders. The voters of this ticket were, as we have said, nineteen-twentieths foreigners. They are in large part men who have been embittered by oppression. The Russian or Austrian or German Polack shows the effects of his hundred years of political slavery and personal degradation. He is an infidel, a desperado, and is filled with the bitterness of revenge. It is a kind of rabies which incites him to attack any organization of society. Because the laws in Poland were made for his oppression, therefore he is furious at the most beneficent laws. But this demonstration of a foreign horde against the foundations of civil liberty has already started up that which was once the most startling and powerful disturbing element that ever came into American politics—namely, Nativism. Organizations are in process of formation who will demand, and vote their demand, that this horde of anarchists be disbanded, and that the immigration of their kind be prohibited. They say that they have already had enough of European brutality—of the boycott, of the enslavement of free workmen, of the imposition by terrorism of un-American and tyrannous oaths. Before another election comes around they will be ready to see to it that no demagogue shall gain any political advantage by herding with the Bohemian and Polish anarchists. It is only necessary for the invaders to show sufficient strength to alarm the public, to produce a nativeistic uprising that will sweep all before it. The Americans are slow to start, but when they do start there is no hesitation, no relenting, till the hostile power is annihilated.

The socialistic campaign in Chicago had for its avowed object the terrorizing of the Supreme Court of the State into a reversal of the judgment against the anarchistic murderers. They demand that the bomb-throwers shall be released. The Knights of Labor in their convention in Richmond, Va., made the same demand in a modified form. If our Supreme Court should weaken, or should reverse the judgment on technicalities, then hell would be let loose in this city. A number of distinguished socialists and anarchists have come from England and Germany to aid in releasing the murderers. Great sums of money have been collected for use in this enterprise and placed at their disposal.

A gentleman who was in the South during the period of the terrorizing of negro voters, and who stood at the polls in the vicinity of the great manufacturing cities, said that the coercion of negroes was nothing to that of the white mechanics by order of the secret socialistic conclaves. Two men were sent from headquarters to each polling place. When a workman was seen approaching he was stopped, a ticket was put into his hand, and two strikers went with him to see that he deposited it. Refusal would have brought upon him expulsion from the lodge, from the workshop, and probably a personal beating. This is the new kind of liberty that foreign anarchists are bringing to us.

The same condition of things prevailed in New York, where the socialistic vote footed up sixty thousand, and in Milwaukee, and other centers of foreign population.

There are numerous immediate antidotes to this evil, before we shall come to the reserved force of the whole people rising in their might to stamp it out—and these chiefly come from the self-destructive madness of social-anarchism itself. The murder and maiming of fifty policemen in Chicago fired the hearts of the whole police force, and of every man who was not himself an anarchistic madman or a murderer at heart. They were promptly driven into cover.

The greed for power, place, leadership, among them is already opening the eyes of those not purblind to the fact that the passions of human nature are not cast off with old associations.

The tyranny of the labor lodges is awakening the most intense hostility among the thousands who suffer from it. The prostration of manufacturing industry, building, etc., resulting from this cause, is bringing hardship to many a door. This will be felt more keenly as time advances. The inrush of applicants for labor, attracted by the abnormal conditions, is increasing the privations and influencing the opinions of thoughtful workmen.—Interior.

OUR AMERICAN FENCES.

Now it is a principle of the American government and of our free institutions, that foreigners who come to this country and become citizens shall enjoy the same rights and privileges under our laws which native Americans enjoy. But when foreigners combine to subvert one of the most important and precious institutions of our country, and demand immunity in trampling upon our laws, and in promoting vice, immorality and crime for the sake of gain and amusement, the question naturally arises whether better safeguards against foreign interference with our institutions and better conditions of naturalization should not be imposed?

It is the conviction of some of the most enlightened and patriotic statesmen of our country that American citizenship is too cheap—too easy of attainment by foreigners, who are ignorant of the genius of our institutions, unfitted to exercise the right of suffrage—and that a longer term of residence and other more stringent qualifications than at present should be required for naturalization, before the full privileges of citizenship are conferred. This conviction is derived from many significant and alarming facts respecting foreigners in America, of which the following may be cited as illustrations:

Nearly all the saloon keepers and liquor sellers in the country who wish to destroy the Sabbath are foreigners; nearly all socialists, communists, anarchists, and other outlaws and enemies of order, morality and religion, are foreigners; nearly all strikes attended with violence and outrage are instigated, directed and carried on largely by foreigners; nearly all riots and election frauds in our cities have been committed by and through foreigners; most of the oath-bound organizations for the commission of murder and other crimes, like the Molly Maguires, Fenians and Mormon Danites, are composed of foreigners; every dynamite plot and other conspiracy to destroy property and life has been gotten up by foreigners; and a large majority of gamblers, thieves and criminals of all grades in our prisons are foreigners.

These significant facts furnish a subject for serious contemplation, and emphasize the lesson which they convey, that our institutions are in danger of subversion through the indiscriminate admission of all kinds of foreigners to our country and to the privileges of citizenship. Among the thousands of useful and industrious foreigners who come to our shores, multitudes of paupers, convicts, secondhands and criminals of all classes find no difficulty in getting in, and they have become a dangerous element of demoralization and crime in our land.—Editorial in Lutheran Observer.

Liberty is one of the most precious gifts which heaven has bestowed upon man. With it we cannot compare the treasurers which the earth contains or the sea conceals. For liberty, as for honor, we can, and ought to, risk our lives; and, on the other hand, captivity is the greatest evil that can befall man.

When a company of Christians remarkable for the simplicity of their faith and practice were asked why they adhered so strictly to certain views of truth and duty, they replied, "Why we are so ignorant that we cannot explain away the Scriptures."

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

SCHUYLER'S LAKE, N. Y., Nov. 18th, 1886.

Yesterday was very unfavorable for circulating notice for an evening meeting in the M. E. church. I personally visited every house in the village, left a "Weed" pamphlet, and an invitation to the lecture. Snow and mud, and the falling rain and the darkness of the evening deterred many who otherwise would have been present. All gave close and respectful attention while I spoke upon the evils and dangers of the lodge system. It was the first public discussion of the subject in the place, and much curiosity has been awakened, and some genuine conviction produced in the community. Visiting stores and shops with tracts to-day, I am impressed that an opening has been made and some good done. This evening I am to speak at Snowden Hill, four miles distant, if possible to reach the place through rain and mud which still continue.

There are a few known friends of our reform here, the most pronounced and active being Mr. Byron Tunniff, who has not put his light under a bushel. What has been done to dispell the darkness and turn the light on the secret orders in this place up to this time, has mainly been through his influence. The Tunniff family is one of the oldest and best known in Otsego county. John Tunniff, the great-great-grandfather of Byron came from Derbyshire, England, and settled in this then wilderness of the forest, in 1770. There are still remaining several well known land marks of the public spirit which has characterized this line of distinguished citizens. John and his son, and immediate successor, furnished the first Episcopal church with a house of worship, the first Trevelly Baptist church with a hall, Exeter and north Otsego county with its first store, first hotel and first saw-mill, and, unfortunately, with the first distillery and Masonic lodge. Only a limited portion of the extended real estate which was included in the original Tunniff purchase remains in possession of the family, and judging from those whom it has been my good fortune to meet, the family sentiment has undergone an entire revolution on the lodge and liquor questions. Byron voted for St. John, and on the lodge question is uncompromising. J. P. SRODDARD.

SOUTHERN WELCOME AGAIN EXTENDED.

From Mobile, Ala., to Columbus, Miss.—Development of the Country.—The Convict System.—A Renouncing Deputy Grand Master.—Rt. Tapley.—Interested Congregations.—No more Building.

CALEDONIA, MISS., NOV. 10, 1886.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—My last Sabbath at Mobile was one of great interest. I preached in the morning in the State Street African M. E. church, the largest in the city; in the afternoon in the Zion African M. E. church, the second in size; and in the evening in the Congregational church. The pastors of the first two churches are Freemasons, but strongly impressed that Masonry and the other secret orders are working great mischief in the churches. My most pointed denunciations met with a hearty response from at least a portion of the congregations. The Congregational pastor is heartily in sympathy with us, and so are most of his people.

Leaving Mobile on the afternoon of the 8th I left behind the waving bananas which had not yet been nipped by the frost, and was soon in the great turpentine region which extends for thirty or more miles back from the Gulf, and is succeeded by the great cotton belt of Mississippi which extends to the northern border of the State. The very favorable autumn has secured an unusually early picking, and the fields seemed mostly gleaned.

At 10 p. m. we reached Artezia, where I stayed till morning to take the train for Columbus. We left Artezia at 8 a. m. in the midst of a pouring rain, the first that has fallen for more than a month. Columbus is the first city I have seen in the State that bears marks of prosperity. Several new business blocks have been constructed and some fine residences are being built. People have not done groaning over the "hard times," but are certainly beginning to hear them with better grace. The Georgia and Pacific railroad will now soon be completed to Birmingham, Ala., forming an important connection, and other roads are in progress or projection.

The failure to carry local prohibition in this county was a serious disappointment. The colored people were made to believe that it was a plot to deprive them of their liberties, and it was the colored vote that defeated it. Nevertheless, much was gained by the discussion. The number of saloons in Columbus has been reduced from eighteen to five, and every pastor, colored and white, has been enlisted against the evil. It is only a question of time when Mississippi will be a prohibition State. There is much, too, that is pleasing in the progress of education. They have now a most excellent graded public school for the colored youth of Columbus, which is free to all, and is attended by over 400 pupils. The policy of universal education is unchallenged.

It would be well if the State were as wise in other respects. The practice that has so long prevailed, of leasing out the convicts of the State to work on railroads and levees cannot be too strongly reprobated. Not only does it interfere with the rights of laborers who work for exceedingly low wages, but is attended with gross inhumanities. Every contractor is vested with irresponsible power, and if such authority was sure to be abused in the case of the slave, much more will it be when exercised over the criminal. Surely this State can devise a plan more decent and humane.

I stayed over night at Columbus with the Deputy Grand Master of the A. F. and A. M. of the State. He is a K. T. and has filled almost every Masonic office. But now he has renounced the hidden things of dishonesty, and tells me he has taken his final leave of all secret orders. He is instructing his church as fast as they can bear it, and has privately persuaded six or seven Masons to give up their order. He reads the Cynosure with great interest, and I was greatly interested in his intelligent Christian household.

Leaving at 7 a. m. to-day, I came in the mail wagon thirteen miles, reaching Bro. Eli Tapley's at 10 a. m. I found Bro. Tapley in bad health, but busy in grinding sugar cane and making molasses. The rest of the family are in usual health, and the general outlook is hopeful. I expect to remain a week.

COLUMBUS, MISS., NOV. 15, 1886.—My visit to the old "Feemster neighborhood" was one of much interest. I found Bro. Eli Tapley and family "faint, yet pursuing," and they seemed especially glad of a little moral support. It was soon arranged that I should hold some meetings. Accordingly word was sent out and I preached on Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights to full and increasing congregations. On Saturday night the white congregation that worships in the old Salem church gave up their usual prayer meeting and came over to the Academy to hear me preach, which was an unexpected favor to the colored people, for they have been, heretofore, much like Jews and Samaritans, who had no dealings with each other. Happily this feeling is perceptibly abating.

On Sunday, the 14th, I went with Bro. Tapley to the New Ruhamah Congregational church, eight miles north in Monroe county. I found a small but comfortable frame house of worship, but without any arrangements for warmth. As the day was chilly they built a fire out of doors for the people to warm their hands. We had a Sunday-school, after which I preached to a most attentive congregation. A young man was then examined as to his Christian experience; was baptized, and received into the church, the whole exercises occupying some two and one-half hours. Though many were thinly clad and all were chilled, yet none seemed weary. It was indeed a most precious meeting, and I was greatly interested in the little flock, who are seeking to sustain Gospel principles in their purity, amidst abounding difficulties.

A brisk walk of two or three miles restored a comfortable warmth, and at 7 p. m., though the night was dark and rainy, I met a good congregation at the Piney Grove Congregational church, about one and a half miles from Bro. Tapley's. This little frame church is occupied by a colored school, and rejoices in a stove. According to custom the door was kept open and it gave us little heat, but I have rarely preached to a more attentive congregation. Indeed, the people here seem hungry for the Word, and entreated me to stay and preach to them longer. It did not seem expedient, and to-day Miss I. D. Feemster brought me to this city. These little churches are most earnest in their opposition to both the lodge and the liquor traffic, and are striving to maintain correct Christian principles. Had all the colored people been as well trained this county would not have voted against prohibition. It was the ignorant colored vote that did it. They were made to believe that prohibition meant re-enslavement. They will learn better.
